Just as we go to press the telegraph brings the news which will be pleasing to all Christians, that the envoys of Japan and Russia have agreed upon terms for bringing to a close the barbarous war which has been raging between them. The two obstacles to peace, to which we referred in last week's issue, were overcome by Japan's waiving all claim to indemnity, and offering to return to Russia the northern half of the Island of Saghalien, which Japan now holds by military occupancy. Russia will remunerate Japan for the care of Russian prisoners, and grants to Japan fishing rights on the Siberian coast. In the earlier days the northern half of the island was held by Russia and the southern half by Japan, but the latter was compelled to relinquish its holdings to the former in exchange for the Kurile Islands. The peace loving portion of the world owes a debt of gratitude, for the peace which is near at hand, to President Roosevelt who intervened as only he seems to know how; and the magnanimity of Japan in yielding so much that the awful slaughter might be terminated confirms the growing opinion of her greatness.

The Bennington Case.

The Secretary of the Navy has made public the finding of the court of inquiry which has been investigating the causes and fixing the responsibility for the fatal boiler explosion on the U. S. gunboat Bennington. The gist of it is that a fireman who undertook to turn a valve for another purpose got hold of the one which admits steam into the steam gauge and closed it. The gauge then showed no pressure and continued firing to get up steam resulted in the explosion. An ensign who had oversight of that department of the boat at that time is also censured. That is about all there is to it. There is no evidence that the boilers were weak or leaky, no evidence that the boat was unseaworthy, no evidence that discipline on the ship had gone to pieces, no evidence that the navy is rotten in administration, incompetent in personnel, decayed in equipment. These latter were the conclusions which were jumped at by the sensational press and the more hysterical portions of the public. It is a common occurrence, this hurried assumption, when any accident occurs, that the whole department is rotten to the core. Of course, accidents ought not to happen. But they do. And when they do the cause is more likely to be a little carelessness than a big crime or a widespread incompetence. Punish the guilty parties for their carelessness, but let us be careful about libeling the whole navy when somebody turns the wrong stopcock.

The Government and Union Labor.

A statement is being issued by certain labor unions in the vicinity of Pittsburg that the government is having great difficulty in getting skilled labor for the Isthmian canal by the usual civil service method, and that since the decision against recognizing the printers' union in the government printing office, the higher class of skilled union laborers are unwilling to accept positions under the government. We don't know about the alleged facts contained in this circular. If they are facts, they indicate a practical boycott, either by general understanding or by secret agreement, against the government—not a very patriotic procedure, one would say. The principle, however, which President Roosevelt announced in the printing office case, that union men could have no special advantage and would be under no special disadvantage in employment under the government, is perfectly clear cut and defensible. The government might as well declare that it would have no army chaplains except Catholics as to agree to employ no mechanics except union men. We can afford to have the Isthmian canal delayed a long time better than we can afford to have the federal government put its official seal upon the false and unfair principle of the closed shop.

"An Act of God."

In resisting suits for damages growing out of the great railroad accident near Pueblo, Colo., about a year ago, the attorneys of the Denver and Rio Grande R. R. file the answer that the washout which caused the accident was "an act of God" and hence the company can not be held responsible for its results. It is of course entirely common for railroad and steamship lines, in limiting their liability, to declare themselves not responsible for damages resulting from "pirates, the king's enemies [in England] or acts of God." The latter phrase, which appears irreverently to put the Deity in rather bad company, is used to cover calamities so overwhelming or sudden as to be quite incapable of prevention by any ordinary human skill or foresight. This may be good law. It certainly has a large kernel of justice in it. But it is exceedingly bad theology. What right has anyone to single out the most awful calamities and call these by pre-eminence "acts of God"? What sort of an idea of God does such a usage reflect and inculcate? Have we a God whose activities are exhausted in violence and evil? More than that, what right has anyone to single out certain remarkable and unforeseen events, good or bad, and define these as "acts of God" in a special sense? The usage reflects a thought of God which was native to an age when God was conceived as expressing himself only by an occasional irruption into an otherwise orderly and steady-going world. Do the lawyers who use this convenient phrase really believe that the Pueblo wreck, for example, or the cloudburst which caused it, was a really miraculous interposition of an evil providence? It is safe to guess that they do not. If the term is useful for them they will doubtless go on using it, whatever the theologians may think about it, but it mirrors a very crude and medieval, not to say pagan, idea for all of that.

Business and Government.

It was suggested the other day at one of the congresses held in connection with the Portland exposition that the executive department of the federal government should include a department of mining with a cabinet official at its head, and that the true ideal of the government's function in relation to economic processes would not be reached until there were departments of agriculture, commerce, mining and manufactures. The first two, of course, already exist. The argument for the latter two is based upon the claim of their right to a position co-ordinate with the former. It would seem at first glance that the newly organized department of commerce and industry covers a good part of the ground, or may properly be developed to do so, but we are not prepared to argue the question either way. But it is interesting to observe how ready the men of any industry are to welcome governmental recognition and assistance. As to governmental control—that is a different matter.

The San Francisco Convention.

It has just adjourned, and these lines are hurriedly penciled as the Southern Pacific is hurrying us north to Portland. It was a great convention, surpassing in some respects any previous convention. It has more than met the expectations of the brethren on the coast and the wise men from the east. We are leaving the Golden Gate with the conviction that it was a good thing for us to have had the convention on the coast—good for the cause on the coast, and good for the brethren who crossed the continent to attend it. Brother White, of the West Side church, San Francisco, and chairman of the general committee of arrangements, said to us near the close of the convention, "This convention has set forward our cause on the coast twenty-five years." If it has done anything like that, it was well worth while.

At this writing we have not learned definitely the number enrolled. The number of delegates coming from east of the Rocky Mountains was estimated at one thousand. The coast states probably furnished as many more, and these, with the local attendance from the churches in the city and about the bay, made large and enthusiastic audiences at every session. The temptations to see the sights of the city must have been very great to those visiting the coast for the first time; but the good attendance at all the sessions showed that most of the people subordinated sight-seeing to the work of the convention. The usual optimistic spirit prevailed. In an address by President Benjamin Ide Wheeler, of the state university at Berkeley, on the last day of the convention, he spoke of "the good cheer" which impressed him as a characteristic of the assembly. And he said he did not wonder that such a people, with such a past and such a present and such an outlook, should be of "good cheer." Nor do we. All the reports of all the different organizations showed advancement. We do not think there was a single exception to this. The Foreign Society reported "the best year" in its history, and this was certainly true of the American Christian Missionary Society. It must have been a source of real joy to its corresponding secretary, Benj. Lyon Smith, that after ten years of incessant labor and anxiety, he has seen the fruition of his toils and cares, in that home missions has taken its rightful place at the very front of our missionary interests. We have come to expect nothing but a steady advance from our Christian Woman's Board of Missions. They had a fine convention and all departments of the work seem to be prospering. Preachers should help to foster local auxiliaries and urge their female members to enlist in the work. The young giant, the Benevolent Association, urged by its enthusiastic general secretary, is not content to grow, but it goes forward by leaps and bounds. A home or orphanage on the coast is in the air and will no doubt soon be on terra firma. Church Extension is on the home stretch for a half million by the close of September, and has already raised its slogan: "A million dollars by the time of our centennial in 1909."

Two features of the San Francisco convention stood out with great prominence. One was the attendance upon and interest in the Bible studies and devotional exercises. We have never seen anything like it in any previous convention. There was an evident hungering for further knowledge of the scriptures concerning the Holy Spirit. We know of nothing more encouraging than this in relation to our future outlook. All that is needed to make the plea for New Testament Christianity irresistible is to give the same place and prominence to the Holy Spirit, in that plea, that it has in the New Testament. Then the gates of hell cannot prevail against it. And this is coming. The San Francisco convention furnished the proof and prophecy of this. The other feature of the convention to which we refer was the uniformly high character of the addresses. There was no failure, no mediocrity even, but each address seemed to touch high water mark. It was not merely that they were from a literary and intellectual point of view highly creditable, but, what is more important, they were marked, in an unusual degree, by spiritual insight, by catholicity of spirit, by sanity of judgment, and by a clear apprehension of what is most vital in Christianity, and of the needs of the times. It would be a good missionary investment to have these addresses printed in a volume, if we could only have assurance of the wide reading of such a volume. They present every feature of our work in a masterly manner.

In one of our national conventions, as nowhere else, one feels the beating of the great heart of the brotherhood, and at no time in the past has its beat been more full, steady, healthful, than at the present time, as evidenced by the convention which has just closed. There were moments in the convention when it was lifted up under the spell of some eloquent speaker to the mount of vision and of transfiguration, when, in the presence of our great opportunities and responsibilities, we seemed to live years in minutes. No one who has ever been lifted up to such a mountain-top view can ever look at the world as he did before. This is the value of such conventions.

This brief survey of the convention must suffice, for this week, with such other reports of proceedings as we may be able to get to the office in time. In our next issue we will have fuller reports. We cannot close, however, without expressing our appreciation of the efforts of the San Francisco brethren, especially of the committees, for their complete arrangements for the convention. They have reason to congratulate themselves on the results of their abundant labors, and the whole brotherhood is to be congratulated on the success of this our first national convention on the Pacific coast.

The Mission of the Church to the Poor.

The preaching of the gospel to the poor is classed with the miracles of the Christ. It is given as the crowning proof of the Messiahship of Jesus. Rome with all her civilization knew nothing of charity. The aged, sick, feeble and crippled were abandoned to starvation and death. In all the length and breadth of the great Roman empire there was no such thing as an asylum or hospital, a retreat or home for the needy. The number of the poor in Rome in the time of Augustus was half a million out of two millions of inhabitants, yet there was no institution to alleviate their misery either by the state or by private munificence. Crates showed his contempt for gold by casting it into the sea, but never thought of founding a charity. "What's the use," said Plautus, "of giving a beggar anything? One loses what he gives away and only prolongs the miserable existence of the receiver." Virgil, gentle as he was, includes among the features of a wise man's happiness his apathy toward the indigence of others.

What a change when Christ comes! On every page of the gospel shines forth the beauty of compassion. All the miracles of the Son of God are in the way of saving and not destroying. He shows his power in going about doing good. He gives sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, speech to the dumb, power to walk to the lame, strength to the paralyzed, health to the sick, cleansing to the leper, food to the hungry, life to the dead, comfort to mourners, blessing to little children, sympathy to the poor. He is born of humble parentage, in an obscure town, in a wretched stable, leads a life of poverty, chooses his apostles from the lower walks of life, says of himself: "Foxes have holes and birds of the air have nests, yet the Son of man hath not where to lay his head," and declares, "The Spirit of God is upon me because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel unto the poor."

The Christ proclaims his mission to the poor. He announces the rights of the poor. He reveals the very heart of God and proclaims the universal philanthropy which was the test of his divine mission. And as the missionary spirit, the preaching of the gospel to the poor, was an evidence of the divine mission of Jesus, so it is to be the perpetual evidence of the true church of Christ. Without this testimony all other evidences would avail nothing in proving the divinity of Jesus. Without this testimony to-day in the church all other evidences would not prove the identity with the church of Christ. In the early church faith, hope and charity were all equally active, and idolatry was overcome and Christianity established throughout the Roman empire. In the present era of the church let this be true and soon the whole world would be swept clean of its idols and all lands would acknowledge our Lord as King.

"The poor have the gospel preached to them." Impostors have aimed at the rich. They wanted the princes and the nobles. The swinish multitude, the hoi polloi, the vulgus, the vermin, were beneath them. Not so with the Christ. He begins at the bottom of society and arises to the permeation of the whole social structure. He preached where the poor could come and hear, by the sea, on the hillside, in the grassy vales, beside the olive groves, by the roadway. He had no temples with rented pews where the poor must wait until the pew renters were seated, or rest upon back benches, or go to some mean, little, back alley chapel built specially to take care of those of their quality. He went to the poor, and he preached attractively, simply, so that the common people heard gladly his message.

"The poor receive the gospel" is the Geneva version of these words. "The poor are evangelized." What is it to gospelize a man? It is to bring under the power of the gospel, to make like the gospel, to turn to the habits and customs and life of the gospel. As the gospel is holy, and just, and true, and loving, and kind, and honest, and benevolent, and gracious, and uplifting, so to gospelize the poor is to create them over again, regulate them, make them holy, and just, and kind, the rogue honest, the liar truthful, the harlot chaste, the blasphemer reverent, the profane man serious, the covetous man generous, the drunken man sober, the hater a philanthropist, the hellish man heavenly. To gospelize a man is to save him from his sins and bring him into a position where he lives to save others. It is to fill him with the power of the gospel and lead him to proclaim the gospel to the world as the Dairyman's Daughter, or the Shepherd of Salisbury Plain, the Tinker who wrote Pilgrim's Progress or the potboy who as George Whitefield moved the world by his preaching, Judson among the Burmans, or Livingstone in Africa, or Wharton in India.

What a glorious work the Master has committed to the church when he bids us evangelize the poor! Are we doing it? Is the divine claim of the church being established in our day by its missionary spirit, by the discharge of its mission to the millions and hundreds of millions who in their poverty yet know not Christ? Have we yet sent the gospel to the destitute home populations, to say nothing of the vast outlying heathen world? Had Christ testified to his divine mission with the declaration, "The rich have the gospel preached unto them," he would have destroyed his career on earth and in human history. Yet is it not so? See the millions spent in erecting magnificent temples of worship. See the tens of millions expended to maintain gospel work and worship in Christian lands compared to the mites given to preach to the multitudes in India, China and Africa. See the scores of millions spent by professed Christians in ministering to the lusts of the flesh while great numberless multitudes are living and dying without God and without hope. We spend upon ourselves. We covet. We heap our gold, our saint seducing gold, our God denying gold. We clothe ourselves in purple and fine linen while Lazarus lies at our doorstep. We cry "Lord, Lord," while the least of his children appeal to us in vain for even a cup of cold water. We are not doing one in a hundred his duty. Let us plan great things and let us do them. Let the poor have the gospel.

Current Religious Thought.

In a healthy, vigorous editorial on the modern methods of money-getting, the Universalist Leader has this to say:

> Some sensible men, and many foolish, sneer at ministers when in perhaps a very imperfect way they go about trying to stem the tide of selfishness and greed which is undermining many an old coast-line of old-fashioned honesty. But two things are certain. Some one ought to do something, and not sit silent while this game of scheme and grab goes on. And to date it looks as if ministers are about the only class who dare to burn their fingers, and face with their protest a public opinion which has had its edge blunted by a marvelous material prosperity.

That our code of laws is no less perfect than any other part of our human affairs can confidently be asserted. But both in theory and practice, especially the latter, human laws are lamentably deficient when compared with those of Divinity. This old thought is well stated in the Baptist Commonwealth, as follows:

> The fact is very plainly taught that the consequences of sin are inevitable. Time does not interfere with the divine judgments. There are human debts that are outlawed after a certain number of years, but the debts against God are never outlawed. There are certain crimes, the penalties of which only extend over a certain length of time, but it is not so with the penalties against sin. Sin must be punished. A man can commit crime and sometimes avoid the penalty but he has only avoided the penalty imposed by the state.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our last record closed as we were coming into Los Angeles. The City of Angels is too big to deal with in the Easy Chair. On the morning following our arrival, we took a train for San Pedro port, going by Long Beach, and took a steamer for Catalina Island. Who has not read of Avalon Bay, where the steamers land, of the submarine gardens, seen in glass bottomed boats, and the big game fish that swim in these waters? All our party took in the submarine gardens, with the tall iodine plants reaching to the surface of the ocean in a depth of eighty feet, with its sea violets, its rock moss, its gold fish, its silver perch, its striped bass, swimming around in the cavernous depths of the crystal sea. But only three of our party ventured out on a fishing expedition in the hour and a half that remained to us before our steamer returned. Brother Daugherty, minister at Wabash, Ind., and Brother Moorman, minister at Danville, Ind., were two of the party, and of course the Easy Chair Editor was the third. We chartered "Nick's" launch, with his tackle, and himself as guide, and we recommend him. In less than a half hour the Easy Chair man was wrestling with the gamest if not the largest fish he ever hooked. It took about twelve minutes to bring him to the gaff, and it was with aching muscles and a blistered hand that the trophy was won. Then Brother D. had his inning and history repeated itself. Brother M. did not have a chance until after these two captures, as only two are permitted to fish at once, then the time was short. They were "yellow tails," and tipped the beam at 14½ and 15 pounds. The truth of history compels us to state that Brother D's fish was the heavier. It was an hour of rare sport.

Catalina is 27 miles out in the ocean and offers a splendid opportunity for those desiring to make a trial trip on the Pacific. It was comparatively calm, but there was a majestic roll about it that some of our party did not seem to appreciate. Brother McFarland, the Fourth church pastor at St. Louis, for instance, turned away from the blue waves, the flying fish that darted hither and thither, and was found lying in the cabin on his back, with closed eyes, meditating, no doubt, on the ways of Neptune, and on the sensations of those who "go down to the sea in ships." But most of the party enjoyed the ocean ride very much, as they did the beauties of Catalina Island. We returned to Los Angeles in time for the evening meal, and for a sound night's rest. Many of our party attended a reception at the Central Christian church, Brother Smither, pastor, given to their outgoing living link missionaries, Brother

Ogden and wife, who go to Tibet. We met many of the brethren, heard some excellent speeches and music, and shared in the refreshments. We were pleased with the spirit of consecration shown in the talks of Brother and Sister Ogden. We regretted to learn of the sudden illness which had befallen Brother Coulter, on the previous Lord's day evening, while preaching, but he was improving rapidly at the last word. Our cause in southern California and in Los Angeles has made great progress since our last visit seven years ago. To this success our consecrated business men in southern California have contributed much, and among these Brothers Coulter and Chapman, who unite preaching with business, are shining examples.

On Thursday morning our Special left by the coast route for San Francisco. At the hotel the evening before the members of our party gathered in a room and J. Murray Taylor, speaking for us, presented to Bro. G. A. Hoffmann a beautiful gold watch from the members of our Special, as a token of appreciation of his services in our behalf, to which the grateful recipient responded in a feeling speech. The trip to San Francisco brought us part of the time in sight of the great Pacific with its long, rolling waves, and part of the time through the mountains, but in either case the scenery was grand. There were some places where we would have been glad to stop over awhile, as Santa Barbara, Santa Cruz, etc., but time forbade. We would already miss the reception and welcome to delegates on Thursday evening, but must be there for the convention proper. At 11:15 P. M. our train pulled into the station at San Francisco. "All was hurry and bustle." A company of white caps greeted us with a song of welcome, and Brothers White, Ford and other brethren were there to direct us to our hotels. By 12 o'clock most of us had retired to dream of the long journey we had made together without accident or unpleasant incident.

At the convention! Who can sum up a national convention in an Easy Chair paragraph? It is condensed history. It is hope rising on triumphant wing for a loftier flight. It is faith, seeing visions and planning campaigns. It is love, greeting old comrades, cementing new friendships, forming higher resolves, and getting a foretaste of heaven. It is memory opening her books and showing us half-forgotten faces and chapters lying back in the dim past, as long sundered friends meet and greet each other. It is college days lived over again as the gray-headed boys and girls meet and revive the incidents of those distant, by-gone days. It is a spur of the Delectable Mountains, from whose summit we catch glimpses of the city which hath foundations. It is a river of holy enthusiasm in which we bathe our weary spirits and are refreshed for the journey. It is a school of the Master in which he gathers his disciples about him once more to repeat to them his last great command, "Go teach all nations." It is a Jerusalem in which the disciples tarry awhile for a fresh enduement of power from on high. It is an Antioch from which the missionaries, separated from their fellows by the Holy Spirit, are sent forth to new conquests in the mission field, and to which, returning, they report what the Lord has wrought through them. It is a Patmos from which the beloved disciples see, in bold outline, the future struggles of the Church with her foes, and her glorious triumph. Blessed fellowship! Hallowed associations! Our hearts shall know nothing sweeter or holier until our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem the golden, the redeemed city of God!

The convention is over. The farewells have been spoken. "God be with you till we meet again," has been sung, and the delegates by various trains are scattering, many of them to gather at Buffalo next fall, and some of them to meet no more on earth. A large number of the delegates making up the Christian-Evangelist Special, left in a body last night, together with many other delegates, for Portland Oregon. The fact is, it is going to be hard to separate us. We have learned to love each other better, traveling across the desert, mountain and plain together. But we are traveling in sections to-day, and the Easy Chair happens to be separated from most of the party, but we will meet at Portland. Last night on returning we were crossing the broad Sacramento river in what is said to be one of the largest ferry-boats in the world. But to-day we have crossed that river eighteen times, and in many places one could almost leap across it as it rushes between mighty boulders. For hours we have traveled in sight of Mount Shasta, whose snowy summit and sides glisten in the sunlight. At Shasta Springs the water pours down the mountain side in beautiful cascades. There the train paused and we all drank of the famous Shasta water and some of us photographed the scenes. We have been in the mountains since early morning. Three engines have hauled our long train up and down the steep grades, through the tunnels and across the mountain ranges. The scenery is magnificent. It is 750 miles from San Francisco to Portland. We have now passed the boundary line, and are in Oregon, with over 400 miles yet before reaching the confluence of the Columbia and Willamette rivers at the city of Portland.

In one of the beautiful valleys of southern Oregon, in the foothills of the Siskiyou mountains, is the city of Ashland. We had received a telegram from Mrs. P. Ritner, formerly of St. Louis, asking the time our train would pass through Ashland. On arriving there we found Mrs. Ritner and her daughters and son on the platform, with a basket of roses and assorted fruits that might well win the prize in a horticultural fair. Mrs. Ritner's niece is our accomplished proof-reader in the Christian Publishing Company, and in that way we had formed her acquaintance in St. Louis. It was to extend this proof of kindness that she had telegraphed us. A picturesque building by the station contained an exhibit of fruits, vegetables, etc., kept up by the board of trade, in which Miss Ritner presides. In addition to this about fifty boys were lined up in a row on the platform with baskets and sacks of fruits to sell. Such luscious plums, and as large as hen's eggs! Ashland wants all the world to know of its wonderful fruits, climate, scenery, etc. Hence this enterprise. Brother Mellinger, the preacher of the Christian church, with his wife and some of the members were also down to greet our Special. There is a church of 150 members, a good building with some indebtedness on it, a population of 5,000 and the seat of the State Normal. We are now running down the Rogue River Valley and the shades of evening are falling upon stream and plain. To-morrow morning we shall be at Portland, Oregon's metropolis and the scene of the Lewis and Clark exposition, where we expect to spend the Lord's day.

Notes and Comments.

"Keeping Indians Sober" is the heading of an article in one of our exchanges, and touches on a very interesting subject. We mean to read the article as soon as we find time. If it really offers a solution to the puzzle we may yet hope to see fair elections in St. Louis. Thanks to Governor Folk and Excise Commissioner Mulvihill, we are managing to keep the tribes in this city comparatively sober one day in the week.

Does not this, clipped from a statement by Robert J. Burdette which the Journal and Messenger published in a recent number, sound familiar to readers of the Christian-Evangelist? Yet Brother Burdette is a member of the Baptist church.

> Moreover, I love the beautiful symbolism of the ordinance of the Baptist churches. I love a baptism that does not have to be argued, defended or explained, but is itself such a living picture of burial and resurrection that even the blind eye must close itself if it would not see. And I love the creed that is written nowhere save in the New Testament, which allows for growth, and the changes which must come with increase of light and stature, without periodical revision.

The International Missionary Convention

The C. W. B. M.

The sessions of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions opened the international convention at San Francisco, as usual. One of the noticeable features of this session was the absence of the president, Mrs. N. E. Atkinson, and the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Helen E. Moses. The vice-president, Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, presided, and reviewed the year's work in a way that left nothing to be desired. She read a message from Mrs. Atkinson to the convention, expressing her deep regret at her inability to be present in person at the gathering. "No great or unusual advancement," she said, "has been made during the past ten months, yet in all our mission fields there has been steady, gratifying progress. While, as in other days, we must mourn with some because of failing health, disappointed hopes, plans broken in upon by misfortune, while there is yet about us a great host of uninterested women and the question of how to interest them is still unsolved, yet, on the part of those who have had 'a mind to work' there has been such loyalty, such zeal, such self-sacrifice, such consecration, as has made our hearts glad. Some have had great trials, but have persevered and are not cast down. We thank God for the faithful ones. And what are the gifts that have been brought to the King's service during this portion of the year? One hundred and twenty-nine thousand dollars in money and seventeen missionaries, including two returning after long absence from the field. Eight of these have already gone to their respective fields, the others go soon after this convention. Shall we place these gifts, the money and the lives, side by side? Our full hearts answer, 'Not so.' These young men and women are the alabaster box that is beyond all price. They are love's choicest gifts. We rejoice over the bringing in of the tithes, in consecrating them with thanksgiving to his service, praying that by the 'wondrous alchemy of heaven' they may be transmuted from perishable dross into immortal treasure; but we take these dear workers into our heart of hearts, giving them warmest sympathy and love, encircling them continually with prayer. Two of them go to a new field that we have long passed by—South America.

"In view of our growing work, if I could give you a single word that should be written all over our plans it would be that old word, 'Enlargement.' First, in the gifts of present givers; second, in the number of givers through increased auxiliary membership; third, in the number of auxiliaries in our eight thousand unorganized churches; fourth, in new individual givers where organization is not at present possible. Such enlargement is the greatest need of to-day."

The report of progress read by Miss Murphy showed in greater detail the work from October last until August 1, 1905.

"Jamaica—Reports from the oldest mission have been most encouraging. The Kingston church reports fifty additions since October; Oberlin reports seventy-two, Torrington twelve, King's Gate eleven. The churches to which Gordon Hay ministers have had sixteen additions, while the Highgate membership has been doubled. Chapels have been erected at Providence, Salisbury Plains, Manning's Hill and Carmel.

"India—The oldest station, Bilaspur, has been sorely smitten by the bubonic plague. Miss Kingsbury moved 120 orphanage girls to Pendra Road, where they were kept in health and happiness. Miss Boyd and Miss Mills remained in or near Bilaspur, giving help and courage to many. The plague has now subsided, the girls are home again. Mrs. Lohr has returned from her furlough in Germany, Dr. Martha Smith, assisted by Miss Caroline Pope, Missouri state officers' offering to India, will have charge of the hospital, Mrs. Lohr and Miss Mills of the schools, while Miss Boyd will have charge of the orphanage during Miss Kingsbury's furlough. In Bina there have been six conversions, and inquirers for the way are coming in large numbers. The native church has been organized apart from the English congregation, and a daily service is held on the mission compound for Bible study for the native Christians. Several young couples from our orphanages have settled in Bina, and are a help to the cause. The school and zenana work is doing well under the direction of Miss Gordon. Mr. Elsam visits Jhansi, where we have a congregation of seventeen.

The Foreign Society.

[In view of the fact that the regular reports from the field could not be obtained in time for presentation to the San Francisco convention, the following statement was made by President McLean.]

Thirty years ago the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was organized. At that time we did not have in the whole wide field, destitute of the gospel, a single herald of the cross. Now we are at work on four continents and in thirteen different countries. We have expanded until we have become a world power. The sun never sets on the work we are doing.

In the current year sixteen new workers have been engaged. Five of these go to India, four to China, two to Tibet, two to the Philippines, one to Japan, one to Cuba and one to Africa. Some of those on the field have given up the work and have come home. Miss Mildred Franklin resigned on account of poor health. E. E. Faris and wife, of Africa, retired from that field. Miss Carme Hostetter was married and left the service of the society. Year by year the force is increased. New fields are entered. The work is pushed steadily forward.

In China the work has been carried on as in other years. The new Science hall has been finished and dedicated. Two new stations—one at Tung Chow and one at Bo Chow—have been opened. This means that new obligations have been incurred, and that workers must be sent out at the earliest possible moment. Prof. C. T. Paul and wife, of Hiram, are on their way to Nankin. They will be associated with F. E. Meigs and C. S. Settlemyer in the work in the college. Alexander Paul and wife go to Lu Cheo Fu, where they will be associated with Dr. Butchart. Mr. and Mrs. Paul have spent five years in China. They know the language and the people.

In India the plague has hindered the work to some extent, but the plague has been overruled to the furtherance of the Gospel. The medical missionaries and others have done what they could to save life, to alleviate suffering and to point all with whom they had to do to Jesus as the only Saviour of the sinful. The college in Jubbulpore has begun its work. A number of young men are being trained to serve as pastors and evangelists and teachers. A mission press has been purchased. Lathrop Cooley, of Medina, O., has given $1,000 for the press and $4,000 for the college. A ten-page newspaper, entitled "The Christian Helper," is published each week. This paper is in Hindi. Its purpose is to inform the churches and the public and to bind the Christian people into closer fellowship. D. O. Cunningham and H. C. Saum and their wives and Miss Olive Griffith are on their way to India.

Encouraging reports come from Japan. The war in the East is helping the work. The main college building has been completed. This has been pronounced the finest mission property in the Orient. The Woman's College will open next month. Two chapels have been finished and dedicated. One of these is in Sendai. The other is in Fukushima. Miss Lewis has been appointed, and is on her way to Japan. The executive committee desired to greatly increase the force in Japan this year, but was not able to do so.

J. C. Ogden and wife have been appointed to go to Tibet. They hope to join Dr. and Mrs. Shelton and Dr. Rijnhart in a few months. On the border of Tibet we have a dispensary, a hospital, a church and a school. Every Lord's day the death of Christ is commemorated. The Gospel is preached to all who are willing to hear it.

B. L. Kershner and wife go to the Philippines. They will be located in Manila, and will have oversight of the work in that city. Three families now in the Philippines have been greatly cheered by the results of the past year's work. They have opened a new station at Vigan, and are planning to open another farther away. They are preparing literature, healing the sick and preaching the gospel far and near.

Africa is calling for more workers. Doors are opening on all sides. A. F. Hencey is the only one who has been appointed for that field in the year. Ten evangelists go out into the country round about. The native church supports them. One member supports his own representative. Dr. Dye goes far up the river to heal the sick. Other missionaries and state

Ye Olde Paul's Crosse

By William Durban

Londoners have experienced a shock of surprise. One of the most famous of the religious monuments of this great city is to be restored under exceedingly curious circumstances. Recently a noted English lawyer died. He had left the sum of 5,000 pounds ($25,000) for the rebuilding of St. Paul's Cross,or Paul's Cross, as it was usually called for brevity.

A VERY HIGH CHURCHMAN.

Mr. H. C. Richards, K. C., M. P., the eminent barrister in question, was well known, not only for his accomplishments in his profession, but also as one of the most extreme ritualists of the age. Now, when our English lawyers are Christian men, they are invariably intensely in earnest, and they are always tremendously partisan. There seems to be something about the calling of an advocate at law which impels him to take sides most vehemently. Mr. Reader Harris is one of the very ablest of living lawyers. He was originally a civil engineer, and a very clever one. In South Africa he made a fortune among the mines. He is a fine linguist and an attractive speaker. Mr. Harris works hard in his profession, but also has founded the Pentecost League, which is a society with perfectly fanatical creed on the doctrines of perfectionism and higher life. I and many others esteem him highly, but cannot comprehend his ideas.

Now, Mr. Richards was also a sample of immense party religious spirit in a lawyer. He was the antithesis of the late Lord Grimthorpe, the famous lawyer who died a few years ago at a very advanced age, and who was one of the most eminent religious controversialists of our time. This nobleman took exactly the opposite line from Mr Richards, for he passionately fought the Ritualist party with his pen, his tongue and his purse. He had a powerful pen, a very eloquent tongue, and a very heavy purse. But he was the foremost leader of the evangelical section of the Anglican church for many years. Here then were two eminent English barristers-at-law, both spiritually-minded and both most estimable men, who were at war on their religious views.

A STRANGE BEQUEST.

I come now to the extraordinary fact that has surprised us in London. All my fellow citizens who know their London are aware that the wonderful historical cross, which stood for several centuries in the northeast corner of St. Paul's churchyard, came to be regarded in the sixteenth century as a kind of symbol of the struggle and the victory of the great reformation. It was the chief of all Protestant emblems. Therefore, it is considered passing strange that Mr. Richards, an extreme high churchman, should thus have left a large sum of money for the restoration of this very representative Protestant fabric.

I am glad indeed that Paul's Cross is to be reconstructed, for some of the most romantic passages of English history were associated with it. The only relic of the old cross is the octagonal slab at the northeastern corner of the churchyard, near the beginning of Cheapside. This spot is familiar to American visitors to London, and these generally will be pleased at the prospect of the restoration. Originally the meeting place for one of the chief Folkmotes of the city, this famous pulpit became not only, in Carlye's phrase, "a kind of Times newspaper itself, which, edited partly by heaven, was a most important entity," but the recognized mouthpiece of the people during the period before printing, when London really represented England.

THE PULPIT CROSS.

Paul's Cross was in reality a great open-air pulpit. Strange utterances were at some periods, in old popish days, delivered from it. But the Pope's authority was solemnly denied from it in 1534, when Henry VIII was seeking, for his own purposes of worldly policy, to establish the reformation in its first stage. On that occasion a miraculous "rood" or image from Kent was exhibited, together with machinery for moving the lips and eyes. After the exhibition it was smashed to pieces. The cross dates, however, from the pre-reformation days, when the preaching or black friars went about our country delivering sermons at the pulpit crosses in or near the church yards. These black friars understood the art of preaching. Also in nearly every old town was an open-air pulpit with a great cross over it, for the purpose of delivering homilies and exhortations to the people. The most famous of all these pulpit crosses was this same Paul's Cross by the great cathedral in the heart of Old London. It stood within the shadow of the noble old Gothic fane which was destroyed by the Great Fire of London in 1666, the year following the Great Plague which devastated England and was the last of the fearful epidemics of the Middle Ages.

IN STIRRING DAYS.

Paul's Cross was ordered with all other crosses in London to be destroyed in 1643. It was an eight-sided wooden erection, entered from the back. It was so large a pulpit that four persons could be seated in it. Those were strenuous times, and bishops, such as the martyrs Ridley and Latimer, boldly declaimed from this spot and spoke words of truth which sometimes the sovereign and political rulers bitterly resented. Two sovereigns at least, Edward VI and his half-sister, Queen Elizabeth, frequently heard sermons from their gallery in front of the pulpit. The queen sometimes interfered in the preaching in a characteristic way. It was on Ash Wednesday in 1565 that Dean Nowell, thinking to please the queen, touched on the question of images, and received from his capricious sovereign the famous rebuke, "Leave that alone. Keep to your text, Mr. Dean." The dean, however, regained the royal favor and was chosen to give the first public notice from Paul's Cross of the defeat of the Spanish Armada, that wonderfully providential event to which must be ascribed the salvation of Protestantism and of England.

It was at Paul's Cross, too, that some years previously the persecuting monarch known as "Bloody Queen Mary" refused to hear good Bishop Ridley. "Ye may preach if ye will, but neither I nor mine will listen to you," said she passionately. "Madam," the bishop replied, "I trust you will not refuse God's word." "I cannot tell what you call God's word," she angrily rejoined. And Ridley soon was counted among the martyrs at the fiery stake. To St. Paul's cross came Cardinal Wolsey in 1527 to witness the burning of Tyndale's translation of the Bible. The place had a political and secular as well as a religious use, for it was here that in presence of great crowds of people papal bulls and edicts were read, heretics denounced and excommunications issued. In 1469, during the reign of Edward IV, a bull was read there from Pope Paul IV against the habit of the people in wearing long peaks to their shoes. The old chronicler gravely declares that some of the people said they "would wear peaks whether the pope wille or nille."

The Cricket.

To Nature's patient, listening ear
Arose the plaints of man;
Without a pause from morn to night
His endless grumbling ran.

The sun was hot, the rain was wet,
And neither rightly sent;
Besides, each fellow thought himself
For higher circles meant.

Then grew his ceaseless discontent
And swelled in volume strong;
Quoth Nature: "I will make a life
Whose protest is a song."

'Twas thus the cricket came to be,
With all its winsome tricks,
Sole creature on the earth which makes
Sweet music when it kicks.

The Demand of the Hour

By C. L. Miller

The value of united effort is undisputed. Because of this fact, no party in the great political contest of the year expressed itself as opposed to the existence of the American trust. Even the trust, with all its injustice, is tolerated because of one great fact: Its concentration of wealth and ability economizes time and energy. The mission of Bismarck to effect the unification of Germany and the work of Lincoln for the union of the states have proved that unified government is essential to effective government. The history of nations renders a unanimous verdict as to the inherent power of union.

But the proposition, "In union there is strength," so obviously true in business and politics and all progressive enterprise, is ignored by the modern church alone. The church has a world-wide mission. Human society must ever be dependent upon it for its progress and its hope. The church in its present divided condition is unable to fulfill this social mission. The present social need, therefore, is concentration of the forces of the church, that its strength may be adequate to the largeness of its mission. We shall consider the causes of disunion, and, in view of the evils of disunion, discuss the need of union; we shall propose a means of accomplishing it, and speak of the results arising from a condition of unity. We would show that Christian union is the social demand of the hour.

The present condition of the church should be studied in the light of the historical causes. This condition is the result of a retrogressive movement which started back near the very beginning. The evolution of Christianity has been both progressive and retrogressive. It began in Judea in a transcendent personality. Its believers undertook at once its world wide proclamation. Its conquests in the hearts of men were brilliant and rapid. In three hundred years it had spread from Jerusalem to the Tiber, and had conquered the Roman empire. It gave promise of spreading the light of its liberty and love to those in the bonds of ignorance and heathendom.

But mark the change. Selfishness and temporal ambition thwart the progress of this great world movement. Within the church, the humble brother and servant of the people develops into the pompous bishop; the bishop soon becomes the metropolitan, and the metropolitan the pope. A spirit of dogmatic intolerance was the curse of the age, it permeated all thought, it extended its blighting influence to the church. The church became first its victim and then its promoter. The history of the following period is the saddest in all the annals of mankind. An age of religious speculation and intellectual creed-making was at hand. The champion of its dogmatic formulas was enthroned at Rome to wield the sceptre of the Cæsars. At his behest truth was stifled, and dogma was exalted. He who had the courage of his convictions, when they differed from the established opinons of the church, in this degenerate age, could pay the price of his manhood with his life. For their convictions, Arnold was driven into exile, Huss was burned at the stake. A record of atrocity is the record of the apostate church. By her, in the name of religion, were perpetrated the most atrocious crimes against personal liberty and life. Exalting herself as an enemy of free truth and right of opinion, she has stained the record of the Middle Ages with the blood of heroes.

Amid such conditions the church could no longer remain a unit. The voices of those who had called for justice and purity in the past, had been stifled, but there was one to come whose rugged personality was to defy the power of Rome. The deliverer was Martin Luther. Aroused to action by the outrageous sale of indulgences he nails his theses to the church door at Wittenberg. The bigoted dogmatism of the church attempts to deny him his right of opinion. He is excommunicated; he burns the bull of excommunication. He is summoned to appear before the emperor to answer for his statements, and here he stands for the truth as he sees it. He vindicates himself in the public mind, but is driven from the church a social exile. Those who believe in him, follow; and thus, although with reluctance on Luther's part, the first step of division is taken. It had never been the purpose of the reformer to withdraw from the church of Rome, rather would he have worked a reformation within the church; but the intolerance of the papacy forced him to the separation. The seeds of a mighty series of divisions, planted long before the actual beginning of the reformation, had begun to spring into life. Luther was but reaching back toward simplicity. His remedy for the conditions of the time was bad, yet it was the only remedy, and became at that time a blessing. Division was inevitable, or mankind must have remained forever in serfdom to the papal throne. But Luther was not infallible. When he came out of the parent church, he brought with him the dogmatic opinion embodied in a human creed, over which coming generations were to divide. In a struggle over an opinion, Calvinism had its origin, and from it have evolved the various forms of Presbyterianism. Across the English channel had grown up another mighty protest to the evils of the time, but dogmatism within it made necessary the sects of Baptists, Independents and Methodists. As time passed by sect after sect was added to the growing turmoil. The causes of all these divisions were the same as of the first, dogmatism and intolerance.

The evils of disunion are known too well. In the past, bigotry has permitted the spirit of division to find expression in monstrous acts of violence and frenzy. See it as it threatens the life of John Knox; see it as it burns at the stake Latimer and Ridley; see it as it plunges nations into turmoil, and drenches all France in blood at the Massacre of St. Bartholomew. Although these times and scenes are past forever, the spirit of division is prevalent to-day. The ideals of our age do not permit it to indulge in bloody deeds of violence, and it must be content with the shattered forces of a once mighty movement, a movement which, but for division, would ere this have transformed the world. Because of division, the organization which in its infancy conquered the

WRONG SORT

Perhaps Plain Old Meat, Potatoes and Bread May be Against You for a Time.

A change to the right kind of food can lift one from a sick bed. A lady in Welden, Ill., says:

"Last spring I became bed-fast with severe stomach trouble accompanied by sick headache. I got worse and worse until I became so low I could scarcely retain any food at all, although I tried every kind I had become completely discouraged, had given up all hope and thought I was doomed to starve to death, till one day my husband trying to find something I could retain brought home some Grape Nuts.

"To my surprise the food agreed with me, digested perfectly and without distress. I began to gain strength at once, my flesh (which had been flabby) grew firmer, my health improved in every way and every day, and in a very few weeks I gained 20 pounds in weight. I liked Grape-Nuts so well that for four months I ate no other food, and always felt as well satisfied after eating as if I had sat down to a fine banquet.

"I had no return of the miserable sick stomach nor of the headaches, that I used to have when I ate other food. I am now a well woman, doing all my own work again, and feel that life is worth living.

"Grape Nuts food has been a Godsend to my family; it surely saved my life and my two little boys have thriven on it wonderfully." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

known world in three centuries, stands to-day, and has been standing for ages, thwarted in its world mission, and absolutely unable to rise to the opportunities of the hour.

In the face of such evils, the need of union is apparent. In the name of an ignorant and needy humanity; in the name of nations and peoples who know not the truth; in the name of the millions over all the earth who live and die in hopeless drudgery and pain, without the joys of home life, without the consolations of religion, without hope for the future; in the name of all these whom a united church might reach, we proclaim the need of union. World-wide are the forces of ignorance and superstition arrayed. From South America to "darkest Africa," across India and Tibet, in China, where sleeps in lethargy and stagnation one-third of the human race, the souls of men are calling for deliverance. In our own land great social problems present themselves for solution. Capital and labor are here arrayed against each other, armed and ready for each other's blood. Millions of dollars worth of energy which might be used to build magnificent cities and promote great industries is being wasted annually in the traffic of the American saloon. Before all these problems and these needs the divided church stands inadequate. The needy millions of the earth know not the liberty of Christian culture, they know not him who died for them; the division of his people has thus become the crowning tragedy of the world. The church has, if she but knew it, the balm for all our social ills, the balm of Christian education and unselfish love. Because of her weakness these great principles are not effective in their greatest power. There is but one thing which will enable the church to make them effective, and that one thing is union. The value of union has been demonstrated in business and politics and in every progressive enterprise; it has been demonstrated by the church in her early history; she is blind to-day if she cannot see its value.

While the Salvation Army follower is charging the Episcopalian with more form than spirituality in religion, and the Episcopalian, in turn, is charging the Salvation Army with lack of ritual; while our English brethren are contending, one for high church, and one for low; while Catholicism would place church government at Rome, and Protestantism would place it in councils or in the individual churches; while matters of personal decision are being publicly discussed in synods and creed-revising assemblies; while the people of the churches everywhere are wasting their time over matters irrelevant to the issue, I would call you to witness the scene in the night-time on the hillside in the Garden, the kneeling figure of the Man of Galilee in prayer for the unity of his people: "I pray not for these, my present disciples, alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word, that they may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Having seen the causes and evils of disunion, and the need of union, we ask, Is there a remedy which will bring about Christian union? There is, and it is simple. What have been the causes of division? The setting up of individual opinion as the standard of another's faith, and being dogmatically intolerant with him, when his own convictions did not correspond to this opinion, dogmatism and intolerance. These have been the curse to the church, the curse to human progress. As opposed to these, we plead that there be exalted, in place of dogmatic opinion, the simple teachings of the Imperial Book; in the light of its teachings, give to the individual the interpretation of his duty to his God. Intelligent thought cannot be dominated forever by man-made creeds, by the thunderous bulls of popes, or by the edict of council or synod. The teacher of the future must be ever tolerant, willing to think and let others think; he must be broader than individual opinion, broader even than the formulas of scholars, broader than any sect or creed or nation, a citizen of the universe, a student of universal truth. The divisions of the church, under the leadership of such teachers, shall blend into one great family whose differences are no more. Its oneness, made sacred by the turmoil, the blood and tears of the centuries, will transcend the glory of the apostolic church. In the light of the unfolding future, we shall see the answer to the Savior's prayer; in the might of their concentrated power, his people shall renew the world-wide proclamation of his truth; their conquest in the hearts of men shall continue until the peoples of the continents and the islands of the sea shall bring the tribute of their love to the feet of the conquering King.

The New Spirit of Service

By WM. D. RYAN

"Have you any church work on hand that I can do, this summer, either in connection with the old church or with the mission? I don't mean for pay, of course; but I expect to be in the city most of the summer and I want to accomplish something that will be really worth while. Work that will make me roll up my sleeves and get out among the people will suit me better than any other."

I have just listened to these words from a young man of my congregation who called at my study this morning. He is a junior at Yale, and is home for summer vacation. He is not a candidate for the ministry and does not ask for church work either for pay or "practice." If the criticism upon the great universities be true, that they rob men of their faith, and disqualify them for Christian service, I can only hope that more young men of my own congregation will be "disqualified." This incident, among thousands of others, but illustrates what may be called "the new spirit of service." Religion is not simply an emotion; it is not a bundle of doctrines; it is a life of helpfulness. Church work is not relegated to one man called a pastor, it is a field of privilege, wherein every Christian's highest aspiration must find expression in action.

An age when our brightest young men and women are honestly striving to find an opportunity to consecrate their talents to Christ's service, can not be called an age of religious apathy. No age since the apostolic, has been so resplendent with promise for the kingdom. Not, "What will religion do for me, and from what terrors will it save me?" is the question of to-day and to-morrow, but it is, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

This spirit of service is new only in the sense that it is restored. It is in reality the old spirit that animated men to whom Christ became more than fishing nets. Let us with all our restoring, be foremost in restoring this spirit of service.

A SPOON SHAKER

Straight From Coffeedom.

Coffee can marshal a good squadron of enemies and some very hard ones to overcome. A lady in Florida writes:

"I have always been very fond of good coffee, and for years drank it at least three times a day. At last, however, I found that it was injuring me.

"I became bilious, subject to frequent and violent headaches, and so very nervous, that I could not lift a spoon to my mouth without spilling a part of its contents; my heart got 'rickety' and beat so fast and so hard that I could scarcely breathe, while my skin got thick and dingy, with yellow blotches on my face, caused by the condition of my liver and blood. I made up my mind that all these afflictions came from coffee, and I determined to experiment and see.

"So I quit and got a package of Postum which furnished my hot morning beverage, After a little time I was rewarded by a complete restoration of my health in every respect. I do not suffer from biliousness any more, my headaches have disappeared, my nerves are as steady as could be desired, my heart beats regularly and my complexion has cleared up beautifully—the blotches have been wiped out and it is such a pleasure to be well again." The C. W. B. M.

"Mexico—The holiday week witnessed the dedication of our new mission building, the finest in Monterey, by President W. E. Garrison, of Butler college, Indianapolis, Ind. It has also seen our Monterey school pass the 500 mark in its enrollment. There have been 31 additions to the church at Monterey.

"Porto Rico—The girls' orphanage has had needed improvements, and Miss Siler, of Lawrence, Kan., has been added to the force. Dr. and Mrs. Alton have been assigned to the boys' orphanage and hope to return to that work. The building plans have been made."

The speakers were Miss Colla Harrison, of California, James G. Warren, of Los Angeles, who emphasized the importance of teaching the young people the value of missionary work, and Mrs. J. C. Gerould, of Cleveland, O., who gave some account of the work in India, which country she recently visited.

Saturday morning's session was largely devoted to reports. That on evangelistic work in the United States showed that this kind of work was being carried on in 34 states and territories. The committee recommended the thoughtful care of work already established and the extension of city evangelization as rapidly as funds would permit, that the best type of preachers be employed, that capable women be sought as helpers, and that an effort be made towards securing and educating a Chinese ministry.

The organization of a Young People's Missionary Century Brigade was one of the recommendations of the committee which considered that work. It advised also the circulation of literature and the setting apart of ten minutes at each monthly meeting for the study of methods, and asked that the completion of the boys' orphanage in Jamaica be the first work.

The Committee on India recommended that the requests for this work be answered as far as possible, that stations established should be strengthened and that every station should have a physician as soon as practicable. It announced that a home in Rath for outcast women would be erected.

The report of the Committee on Educational Work in the United States showed that there was a prosperous growth.

At the last national convention it was decided to enter South America. So to Mrs. Ella Humbert, of Oregon, was allotted the duty of speaking in behalf of this work, which she did very effectively. It is a land largely "without Christ other than a brass Christ on a bronze cross."

When the hour came for the introduction of missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Louie Hugh were first presented, the latter singing a solo. The young Chinaman told about his work in Portland, and made a plea for a mission in southern China.

W. J. Burner, who, with his wife, has been selected to open the work in Argentine, made a hurricane speech, picturing that great country and its need of the simple Gospel.

The report of the nominating committee was adopted, the old officers being reelected. A roll-call of states followed, the representatives of the different states rising as the officials were presented on the platform. The committe on watchword and aim recommended: Win one, aim for 100,000 members; bring one, aim for $200,000; save one, aim for 1,000 souls.

The report of the committee on the centennial recommended a rally cry of $100,000 for one hundred years, which should be sought among women outside the auxiliaries in offerings of one dollar or more. This amount should be apportioned among the states. Funds should be used in the fields now occupied, but it was recommended that one new field should be entered—southern China, to which an appropriation of $20,000 was advised. A double membership in the auxiliaries is also to be aimed at.

After several pledges had been made and instructions given for telegrams to be sent to absent leaders, Mrs. A. C. Smither delivered a strong address on being "Ambassadors for Christ."

During the past ten months the total receipts were $172,963 and the disbursements $149,838. The total number of new workers is seventeen.

officers apply to him for relief. R. R. Eldred is training the young people to make and lay brick, to erect houses and many other things. The children are taught in the school by Mrs. Dye.

In Scandinavia long strides have been taken in advance. R. P. Andersen is located in Christiania, E. W. Pease in Bergen. A training school has been opened in Christiania. The work has begun on a small scale. The paper, entitled "The Old Paths," is edited by R. P. Andersen.

Mark S. Peckham has been engaged to work in Cuba. He will teach and preach. Angel Godinez, a Cuban, will give most of his time to the work. Preparations are being made to open schools in Havana and in Matanzas. The committee is contemplating the purchase of suitable property in Matanzas.

In Hawaii P. M. Snodgrass and wife have had charge of the Cooley mission. A new chapel has been built. The missionary did most of the carpenter work with his own hands.

The executive committee has carried on a vigorous campaign of education. "The Intelligencer" and "The Voice" have been published regularly. These have been widely circulated. A copy of John R. Mott's book entitled, "The Pastor as a Missionary Leader," was sent to each one of our preachers. Thousands of other books were sold. Many missionary libraries were introduced. Missionary rallies were held in many influential centers. The secretaries have visietd churches and conventions. They have tried to press the claims of the work home to the hearts and consciences of the people everywhere. Knowledge of the facts must precede interest and action.

The greatest need of the society is the need of suitable men. Volunteers of the right kind are very scarce. We are taught to pray the Lord of the harvest that he would send forth laborers into his harvest. May it not be that the lack of volunteers is owing to the fact that that prayer has not been offered? Men are needed now for China, for India, for Japan, for Africa. The need was never so great. The harvest was never so ripe. The Macedonian calls were never so numerous nor so urgent.

The friends of this cause should remember that nothing is so costly as success. The work that is alive and growing makes incessant and importunate demands. These demands must be met, or the work will suffer. The churches are growing in wealth from year to year. The average offering in the United States is 29 cents per annum. Our people do not give that much on an average. It is easy to see that we could easily double what we are doing. We should aim at doubling our receipts and our forces on the field before our centennial in 1909.

We are pleased to report that there is a growing interest in the cause of missions. We are living in the dawn of a better day. Our people should be the greatest missionary people in the world. If every minister of the Gospel had the missionary passion in his own heart this would soon be the case. We would make our influence felt mightily in the most remote corner of this round globe.

One of the new enterprises engaging the attention of the society is the erection of a home for the children of the missionaries. The present plan is to secure a convenient building near some one of our schools, in which the sons and daughters of our missionaries can be brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. and in which they may be trained for their life work. Such a home will enable the parents to continue their work on the fields and be free from any mental distress as to their children. It may be that some one in attendance at this convention will give $25,000 or $50,000 for this purpose. No more suitable memorial could be erected in memory of some one who has entered into the life that is life indeed.

Our Lord used three words that call for especial emphasis. These are, "come," "abide," "go." He calls human souls to himself. "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He asks those who come to abide in him. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, no more can we except we abide in Christ. To those who come and abide in him, he says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation." If we come to Christ and abide in Christ we must go at his command. If we do not go, we shall not abide within him, and our coming shall prove to be in vain.

Report of the California State Conventions

Northern.

The forty-eighth annual convention of the Christian churches of northern California was held in the West Side Christian church, San Francisco, August 15 to 18, 1905.

The Sunday-school session opened with a prayer and praise service, led by R. E. Jope, of Los Gatos. T. G. Picton, of Woodland, president of the Sunday-school association, gave a brief report of the work during the year. He made a strong plea for the observance of boys' and girls' rally day and of decision day. Many Sunday-schools have adopted Normal classes, and training classes, and some have organized their schools into graded Sunday-schools during the past year. The secretary's report showed that eighteen schools had observed boys' and girls' rally day, contributing $162.80, as against $13 contributed last year. Decision day was also observed in some places, and as a result, a large number came into the church from the Sunday-schools. The suggestion of employing a Sunday-school evangelist whose whole time should be given to the upbuilding of the Sunday-schools already in existence, and the organization of new ones, was so enthusiastically received that $435 was pledged there and then to the support of this new enterprise. Valuable suggestions for the conducting of teachers' training classes were made. It was also suggested that if the church would assume the responsibility for Sunday-school supplies, and the children be taught that their contributions for each quarter were not for papers to be read and thrown aside, but for some particular line of mission or church work, those contributions would be largely increased.

W. H. Martin, of Santa Barbara, delivered the convention address Tuesday evening.

Judge McCoy, of Red Bluff, was unanimously elected chairman of the state convention. The report of the committee on ministerial standing was read by Brother McCollough, of Warm Springs. The president, D. A. Russell, of Red Bluff, in his address reported the churches in a healthy and growing condition, with signs of progress everywhere, and very rapid growth in some quarters. The missionary pastors have all done good work. The recommendations were:

1. That churches observe education day some time in the month of January, and that on that day young men be urged to devote themselves to the ministry. 2. That the co-operative missionary work of this state be built up and endowed. As a working basis, the following points were suggested: (a) Individual gifts of $100 or more. (b) The securing of money on the annuity plan. (c) Try to induce people well advanced in years to will at least a portion of their money to be dedicated for all time to the advancement of God's kingdom on the earth. 3. That the state board be authorized for the coming year to take up the question of securing more land at Garfield park, Santa Cruz, and of the improving and beautifying of the grounds.

Brother McAneney introduced President Bell, of Drake university, who briefly addressed the convention. The privileges of the convention were extended to all visiting brethren from different parts of the state and from other states.

The Endeavor session occupied all of Wednesday afternoon. Excellent reports of work accomplished were made by all the officers and district managers and by superintendents of Quiet Hour and Junior work. The secretary reported that every society in northern California had sent in the statistical report asked for. There are 1,869 active, 482 associate, and 188 honorary members. The Endeavorers contributed $779.56 to home missions, $439.55 to foreign missions, and $213.45 to benevolences, making a total of $1,432.56.

They decided to make the work of the Berkeley Bible seminary their special work for the year, to observe education day, and to do what they can in urging young men to devote themselves to the ministry. A collection was taken and enough money collected to put up a sign, Welcome C. E., at the entrance to Woodward's pavilion, where the International Y. P. S. C. E. session will be held. The following officers were elected: President, Lee Tibbals, Watsonville; first vice-president, John Littler, San Jose; second vice-president, Laura Hockensmith, Santa Rosa; secretary, Annie G. Harvey, Fresno, and treasurer, Ed Rose, San Jose.

The very encouraging report of the state board was read by Brother Jopson. A church has been organized at Reno, and now numbers 40 members. A Sunday-school has also been established there. This is the only Christian church in the whole state of Nevada. Alameda, Berkeley, Santa Rosa, West Side and Fortuna churches were mentioned as having done especially good work along home missionary lines. There have been 200 additions by baptism and 229 otherwise. There is a surplus of $75 in the treasury.

The committee on state work recommended the same three points that the president did in his address, and further, that the position of corresponding secretary be made as permanent as possible. This report was unanimously adopted.

At the C. W. B. M. session, in the absence of the president, Mrs. Mary Hartley, the vice-president, Mrs. Murphy, of Lodi, presided. The reports were very encouraging, showing an increase in members and contributions and active work along all lines. Brother Beal made a report as to the condition of the work at Palo Alto, one of the churches being helped by the C. W. B. M. Brother McHatton spoke of the work at Reno. It was decided to continue the support to Brother Madsen, Berkeley, and Palo Alto during the coming year. It was decided that the California C. W. B. M. recommend the national board to take up the Chinese work in San Francisco.

Greetings were brought to the convention from Ohio, Nebraska, southern California, Illinois, Texas and Indiana by delegates to the international convention.

The officers elected were: President, Mrs. Murphy, Lodi; vice-president, Mrs. A. D. Butler, Napa; secretary, Mrs. A. M. Yarnell, San Jose, and treasurer, Mrs. Dr. Rigdon, San Francisco.

Thursday evening the state convention met in the Native Sons' hall for the purpose of welcoming the delegates to the international convention. Bishop J. W. Hamilton of the Methodist church, representing the Protestant churches of San Francisco, made the first address of welcome. Dean Van Kirk, of Berkeley Bible seminary, welcomed the visitors on behalf of the California brethren and the churches of the bay cities. Responses on behalf of the visitors were made by G. W. Muckley, G. L. Snively, and Brother Crabtree.

At the closing session the report of the resolution committee, recommending, among other things, the improvement of Garfield park, the observance of education day, the permanency of the position of corresponding secretary, and the liberal support of the state work, was unanimously adopted.

The report of the park commissioners was accepted and the thanks of the convention extended to Brother McGuire and the rest of the commissioners for their untiring labors.

The excellent and very encouraging report of Brother McAneney as president of the Bible seminary was received, and a rising vote of thanks extended to him for his tireless efforts on behalf of the Berkeley Bible seminary.

A diploma of graduation from the Berkeley Bible seminary was presented to P. C. McFarlane, of Alameda.

Southern.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the churches of Christ in southern California and Arizona was held at Long Beach, August 3-13.

Marvelous has been the growth of the primitive faith and order in this sunny summer land by the sunset sea. A. C. Smither said that when he came to the coast in 1890 there were only three church buildings in southern California, and only about six preachers making the New Testament plea of union and evangelization after the manner of Peter and Paul. Behold what God hath wrought.

This convention reported 52 churches with 8,000 members, 62 Bible-schools with 5,551 scholars enrolled. Thirty-five of these schools observed children's day for foreign missions with an offering of $1,633, and only 19 observed rally day for home missions with an offering of only $421. The time is not far distant, I am sure, when all the schools will observe both days alike, and give as much for home missions as for foreign. This is just and right.

This year seven new churches were organized, part of them self-supporting from the first. Twenty-six places received missionary appropriations. There was a net increase of 2,000 to the churches, a gain of 33⅓ per cent. There were 800 baptisms, 1,800 added otherwise, and not a congregation without some increase. Five or six churches have over 500 members. The churches gave $5,000 for foreign missions, $1,600 for home missions, $4,500 for southern California and Arizona missions, $1,500 for church extension, $2,000 for benevolences. This is a total of about $15,000 for missions, fully $200 for each member.

For local church work $40,000 were given; for church buildings, repairs, and debts, $50,000, making a total of $105,000 for all purposes from 6,000 or 8,000 believers, or nearly $15 per capita. Where is the state that reaches this noble standard? The value of church property is $425,000. Any one of half a dozen new church houses erected within the past two years equals in value all the church property in the state owned by the Disciples of Christ ten years ago.

Sixty-two Sunday-schools were reported, 16 having a teachers' meeting, eight a home department, nine a cradle roll. About one-third of the converts made were from the Sunday-school.

The C. W. B. M. had the sessions of Wednesday and Thursday. The presence of Ernest Gordon and Dr. Ada MacNeill Gordon, his new wife, missionaries soon to return to India, Miss Case, of our Monterey, Mexico, mission, Miss Bertha C. Mason, a former missionary in Mexico, and now secretary of the Texas C. W. B. M., with Prof. Hall L. Calhoun, made a feast indeed.

The women elected Mrs. Reba Smith, Whittier, president; Mrs. W. G. Conley, Redlands, vice-president; Mrs. W. R. Harper, Los Angeles, secretary; Miss Anna W. Cason, Pomona, superintendent of children's work. These officers, with Mrs. Grant K. Lewis and Mrs. R. P. Shepherd, constitute the advisory committee. More than $700 were raised last year for the support of Mrs. Bessie F. Madsen, the living link missionary of the southern California auxiliaries; and more than $100 were raised for the Mexico work. These same lines of work, with any others determined on in conference with national officers at San Francisco, will be the special work for southern California auxiliaries for next year. A special fund of over $300 was raised in cash and pledges in one session of the convention to supply a trained nurse to assist Dr. MacNeill Gordon in the hospital in India.

The report showed 37 auxiliaries. Five new ones were organized during the year. These auxiliaries have 974 members, added 310 new names, take 471 copies of the Tidings, gave $1,067 to the general fund, $475 to the state fund, and raised a total of $2,888.71 for all purposes.

There are ten Junior societies, four Intermediate, and two mission bands. These contributed about $350 for missions from 545 members.

Prof. W. G. Conley, of Redlands, R. P. Shepherd, of Pomona, and Prof. H. L. Calhoun gave Bible studies. All were strong and helpful. The latter gave five lectures, and it is not too much to say, as Pres. C. C. Chapman did say, that no one of the great men who have appeared before the southern California conventions ever pleased and profited the people more.

George Ringo made a fine address on "Pastoral Relations" which provoked a lively and useful discussion, as did also the address by the writer on "Christian Stewardship." A. C. Smither's sermon on "Forward a Little" was in his best vein, strong, eloquent, beautiful, and moving.

The C. E. sessions of Saturday gave us two fine speeches by Walter L. Martin and J. I. Meyers, both of Los Angeles. The evening sermons were by A. K. Wright, Monrovia; H E Wilhite, San Bernardino; J. W. Utter, Covina, and Willis S. Myers, Los Angeles. They were all fine efforts and the people felt proud of their own local preachers.

The addresses of Secretary Grant K. Lewis on "The Redemption of the Great Southwest," of President C. C. Chapman, on "The Outlook," and of Robert P. Shepherd, on "The Moral Monarchy of Christ," with Secretary Lewis' report, were all great efforts, and lifted the state missions' sessions to a very high plane of enthusiasm, which culminated on Sunday in Brother Chapman's noble appeal for funds to carry on the work this year. Right nobly did the congregation respond, and soon the tide of consecration rolled in pledges aggregating the magnificent sum of about $6,000. When did any state convention, even in our older and stronger states, do so well?

No wonder that after such a preparation of the people, where God's presence had been so marked and mighty, Brother Powell, of Louisville, Kentucky, outdid even himself. Great and masterful as he always is, it is doubtful if he ever preached better than this morning. In the evening he preached again on "The Dignity of Man." It was a sermon to make one thank God he was linked with the human race, whose powers and possibilities he so eloquently set forth.

"The Christian Standard Special," en route to the San Francisco convention, arrived in southern California on Saturday, and some hundreds of its brethren and sisters worshiped with us on Sunday. Bro. M. M. Goode, of St. Joseph, Mo., and H. A. Denton, of Maryville, Mo., conducted the great communion service in the afternoon.

At night the "Church Building League" was presented by Brother Smither, and the people responded with pledges enough to make about 50 now who have promised to pay $5 each for each church building erected in southern California and Arizona. Not more than four calls to be made in any one year. Announcement was made of the fact that $2,000 of the $5,000 fund asked for to secure suitable church lots in strategic centers, had been pledged, $1 000 each by C. C. Chapman, and Brother Porterfield, of Long Beach.

Grant K. Lewis announced that the special to the national convention for southern California delegates would start from Los Angeles, Wednesday morning, August 16, and that their convention would continue over the 400 miles of travel.

Pasadena, Cal. Sumner T. Martin.

Eastern Pennsylvania Convention

The seventy-second annual convention of the C. M. S. and ministerial association of eastern Pennsylvania, together with the Pennsylvania C. W. B. M., was held at Sayre, Pa., July 31 to August 3, and without doubt it was the best convention in the history of the church of Christ in that region. Bro. M. B. Wood and his loyal and helpful congregation welcomed and cared for the comfort of the delegates, seventy-eight in number.

Promptly at 7:30 Monday evening the president of the C. M. S. called the convention to order. Devotional exercises were led by Richard Bagby, of Dunmore.

H. G. Weaver, of Reading, who was to have addressed the convention on "The Church, Its Elements of Strength," was detained at home by a death. The time of E. Everett Cowperthwaite was therefore extended for his address on "The Elements of Weakness in the Church." This address met the hearty approval of the ministry and was excellent throughout.

Tuesday morning's session was opened with devotional services led by Vernon Harrington, followed by the address of H. F. Lutz, of Harrisburg, on "Things Which Make a Preacher." L. Maxwell, of Williamsport, who was to have delivered an address on "Things Which Break a Preacher," was absent. A general discussion of the topic led by Frank Talmage, of Le Moyne, was substituted.

The afternoon session was a fellowship session of the three organizations. Miss Elsie Taylor, of Braddock, led the devotional exercises. M. B. Wood, the minister at Sayre, made a timely address of welcome, which was responded to by M. S. Blair, of Alba, for the delegates. E. O. Ervin, of Loch Haven, having to return home, his address on "Evangelism" was advanced to this point on the program. It was a feast; one of the best of its kind.

Tuesday evening began the work of the C. W. B. M. Sayre auxiliary led the devotional services. President, Mrs. T. W. Phillips, of New Castle, then gave her address. Sister Taylor followed with her report as secretary and state organizer. It was a report encouraging in every way to the work.

Next came W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, with an address based upon the narratives of two little maids, "One who helped, 2 Kings, 5," and "One who was helped, Luke, 8." Sister Robertson, a sweet singer from Dunmore, sang "I Know that my Redeemer Liveth."

On Wednesday morning devotional exercises were led by Mrs. C. A. Brady, followed by reports of Miss Elsie Taylor, secretary, and Mrs. Kate E. Roberts, of Carnegie, organizer and Miss Elizabeth Boyd, state superintendent of Y. P. W. Miss Boyd being absent, her report was read by Miss Mae Rickard, of Plymouth, vice-president. These reports were encouraging. Miss Taylor's report showed nearly four thousand dollars raised for the woman's work of eastern Pennsylvania for the past year.

The old officers were retained, with the one exception of the vice-president, to which office Mrs. C. A. Frick, of Westmore, was called. The round table conducted by Sister Taylor came next.

At the session of Wednesday afternoon, the report of Secretary C. A. Brady was filled with encouraging things and showed that from a debt of some six hundred dollars a year or two ago, the C. M. S. has come to a point where it had a balance in the treasury at convention time.

President Bateman came next with his excellent address, "Some Problems of the Field."

On Wednesday evening John Bryan, corresponding secretary, of Mill Hall, led the devotional exercises, which were followed by another address by R. W. Warren, the theme being "Nigh unto Jerusalem." H. F. Lutz followed with an address on "The Home Missionary," a chart talk.

Thursday morning after the business session and devotional service, led by Foster Fuller, of Williamsport, addresses were delivered by G. A. Culley, of Philadelphia, on "The Missionary Spirit" and by L. O. Krupp, of Plymouth, on "Church Finance." Secretary Stephen J. Corey, of the Foreign Missionary Society, gave a splendid address on "The Duty and Work of the Church in Relation to Foreign Missions."

At the afternoon session the present incumbents as officers were re-elected for the C. M. S. Then came a very good address on "The Bible-school as a Force in the Church," by W. I. Burrell, of Covington. Bro. M. B. Wood and others discussed this address in a clear manner. "Christian Endeavor, Retrospective and Prospective," was nicely presented by R. W. Clymer, of Scranton. "The Organization of the Church," by Mark Collins, of Troy, followed and the session closed, everybody adjourning to the basement of the meeting house to enjoy the cream and cake provided by the good sisters of Sayre.

At the closing session on Thursday evening the devotional services were led by Mark Collins. President L. G. Bateman was appointed delegate to the conference between the Free Baptists and the Disciples, looking to a union of these bodies, and then came the address of Secretary C. A. Brady, "Our Opportunities in Eastern Pennsylvania." The convention will meet at Wilkesbarre, Aug. 6, 1906.

Our Budget

—The new building of the First Christian church at Hinton, Okla., was dedicated Sunday, August 27.

—H. H. Peters is assisting Wm. Price in a two weeks' meeting at Holder, Ill., which began August 28.

—The fourteenth annual convention of the Christian church of Oklahoma will be held at Guthrie, Okla., September 11-17.

—The church at Sapulpa, I. T., is planning for a new church building. The work is growing rapidly. Herbert Moore is pastor.

—W. T. Clarkson, of Northside church, Lawrence, Kan., preached in the First M. E. church, Lawrence, on Sunday, August 27.

—J. E. Dinger is conducting a meeting at Agra, O. T., and will begin another meeting at Stroud, O. T., on the second Monday of September.

—H. M. Barnett has resigned the work at Wellington, Kan., and accepted a call to the Forrest avenue church in Kansas City, where he begins September 3.

—E. B. Redd, of St. Louis, preached for the church at Jacksonville, Ill., August 20. The work of the new building at that place is being pushed to completion.

—The church at Saybrook, Ill., Jas. N. Thomas, pastor, will begin protracted services September 10, with the assistance of J. E. Lorton, of Mt. Sterling, Ill.

—H. H. Ambrose has resigned after a year's successful work at Great Bend, Kan. He will enter the college at Bethany, W. Va., and finish his course there.

—The church at Bethany, Mo., installed its new individual communion service on Lord's day, August 20. The outfit was presented to the church by the pastor's aid society.

—Mary E. Tufts, of Missouri, has just given our National Benevolent Association $200 on the annuity plan. This is her third gift, the total amount given by her being $1,000.

Chas. E. McVay, singing evangelist, who has been singing continuously on the Pacific coast since May 1, will return east in October and assist I. H. Fuller in his meeting at La Monte, Mo.

—Virtes Williams, minister of the church at Stillwell, Okla., asks us to correct the statement that he has closed his work at that church. He says there has never been any reason for such a report.

—M. M. Nelson has just completed three years of service as pastor of the church at Rocky Ford, Col. About 200 have been added to the membership and all departments of work are in good shape.

—The National Benevolent Association is in receipt of $500 from L. Gill, Santa Ana, Cal., completing the L. and N. E. Gill Memorial Named Fund of $2,500. Secretary Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo., will be pleased to explain the memorial named fund to all inquirers.

—Our readers will do well to scan the advertisements which appear in this issue; those of other concerns, as well as our own book publications. In the latter, many bargains are offered for the present time only.

—T. Henry Blenus, pastor of the Church street Christian church at Jacksonville, Fla., will assist G. R. Cleveland, pastor of the church at Hagan, Ga., in a protracted meeting in the latter city, beginning September 1.

—E. J. Wright writes that, owing to financial depression in the church, he will return to the evangelistic field, beginning with a meeting in Missouri. Parties desiring his assistance should write to him at Leavenworth, Kan.

—On the first Lord's day in September the church at Billings, Mont., expects to dedicate its new house of worship. The property is valued at $5,000. The Church Extension Board has promised financial aid. J. Thos. Webb is minister.

—The work of the church at Montpelier, Ind., is reported to be moving forward in an enthusiastic manner. Improvements to the extent of $500 are being made in the building. D. F. Harris took charge of the work as pastor two months ago.

—We call attention of our readers to the advertisement of Chapman & Chapman, architects, in the want column of this paper. These are brethren and those in need of the services of architects would do well to correspond with them.

—Christian university, at Canton, Mo., reports a very encouraging outlook. This year will break the record for ministerial students. Churches within 100 miles of Canton who are without pastors can be supplied by writing to President Johann.

—Owing to the yellow fever quarantines the date of the Mississippi state convention has been changed from September 4-7 to November 6 9. The convention meets at Watervalley. W. W. Phares, McComb, Miss., is corresponding secretary.

—I. H. Durfee, evangelist, is assisting Medary Gorsuch, pastor, in a meeting with the church at East Granger, O. Brother Durfee's next meeting will be at Mill Creek. Churches desiring his assistance after that time should address him at Hiram, O.

—Upon the arrival of the Christian-Evangelist Special at Los Angeles, G. A. Hoffmann, who managed the excursion so admirably, was presented by the members of the excursion with a handsome watch and chain. J. Murray Taylor acted as spokesman.

—Harry G. Hill, of Indianapolis, Ind., secretary of the Education Society, has been honored by a third invitation to address the Y. M. C. A. audience in that city within six months. He also has an invitation from the associations at Lafayette, Ind, and Springfield, Ohio.

—The attractive new house of worship at Plymouth, Ind., will be dedicated on September 10, instead of September 3, as originally planned. The postponement is necessary in order that State Evangelist T. J. Legg, who is now in California, may be present to officiate.

—On the evening of August 24, there was a very agreeable surprise party at the parsonage in Ipava, Ill., the occasion being the 25th anniversary of the wedding of the pastor and his wife, Jesse T. and Betty K. Craig. The surprised couple were recipients of a handsome china set and a number of other things, ornamental and useful, on the part of the visitors.

—Harvey S. Stoner has closed his work as pastor of the Second church, Johnstown, Pa., and will enter the evangelistic field. He has served the Johnstown church since its organization in November, 1902, and has received into its membership 123 persons. He will preach for the church at Massillon, O., until October 1, and after that time will be ready for meetings. His address is 292 Wooster street, Massillon, O.

—The church at Aurora, Mo., is very much grieved because Daniel Trundle and his good wife are compelled to make a change of location because of Mrs. Trundle's health. She is an invalid and the physician has stated that it would be necessary for them to remove to Arizona, where Brother Trundle will take a pastorate. Resolutions of regret at the necessity of the severing of Brother Trundle's pastoral relations with the church were passed by the board of officers by unanimous vote.

—The Year Book just issued shows that the Young Men's Christian Associations in America have increased to 1,826, with a membership of 381,982. They own 517 buildings and other property worth $32,004,886, an increase of $2 400,000 during the year, besides $2,733,000 pledged for 143 new buildings. Bible classes have enrolled 71,601 men and boys, and over 14,000 men served on religious work committees. The increased attendance at Bible classes was 35 per cent more than last year.

—In the presence of a large assemblage, the corner stone of the new building of the Hamilton avenue church, St. Louis, was laid with appropriate ceremonies, on the Lord's day, August 27. Members of our other congregations in the city attended, and short addresses were made by F. A. Mayhall, pastor, and by the visiting pastors of our own congregations and of denominational congregations in the neighborhood. The new building, when completed, will surpass in appearance any of the present houses of worship owned by our people in this city.

—The church at Laddonia, Mo., has a place on the roll of honor with both the Foreign and Home Societies this year. They raised almost three times the apportionment of the Foreign Society and almost double that of the Home Society. The Christian Endeavor Society is the only one in Audrain county which received a certificate of honor at the international Christian Endeavor convention at Baltimore. J. D Greer is minister at Laddonia and also at Boydsville, Mo. The latter church is also on the roll of honor of both Foreign and Home Societies this year.

BRUNEAU, IDAHO

No Place on Earth Like Bruneau.

The only place that I ever saw 80 bushels of wheat grow on one acre.
I saw the "T" Ranch of Bruneau Valley produce 12 tons of alfalfa per acre.
I have seen the finest fruits of my life in Bruneau Valley.
I never saw any poor crops, or short crops, or poor stock, or cyclones or thunder storms, or zero weather in Bruneau Valley. Harry Watkins.

It is an unpolished diamond.—Victor Diesing.

The Bruneau Valley is the most productive spot of the world in my opinion.
Dr. J. K. Dubois, Boise, Idaho.

I have traveled over many states and have looked over much land, and I consider Bruneau Valley as superior in climatic conditions and yield of crops and fruits to all of them.
W. N. Newman.

A climate which permits of plowing the year round and harvesting peaches in the early part of June bespeaks its own praise. It will yield two or three times greater than any of the central or eastern states, and the Bruneau Valley will be the states' paradise.
Rev. Eugene Close (Formerly Pastor of Christian Church, Ransom, Kansas).

I saw oats in Bruneau Valley yield over 100 bushels and average it; alfalfa 7 ft. 5 in. high; onions, from the seed, 3 1-2 inches in diameter; potatoes as fine as earth produces; peaches that would melt in your mouth; apples perfect I saw fish to weigh 100 lbs. I have looked over Colorado, Utah, Oregon and Idaho and consider your land and climate the most attractive.
D. W. Kent.

No better land and climate on earth.—Ex-Gov. Frank Hunt.

The finest valley of the valleys of the state of Idaho.—R. E. Knapp.

About 100,000 acres of the finest land on earth can be taken under government entry, you can secure water rights from the Bruneau Land & Irrigation Co. to cover the land.

No lottery chances, the opportunity of a lifetime. Government land can be entered after due examination, and water for the same procured at a moderate cost. Chas. E. Mays.

—The Highlands Christian church of Denver, Col., is erecting a building on a unique plan—that is, the plans of the building itself are not necessarily unique, although they are admirable, but it is being built in sections, as the needs demand and finances justify. This is an excellent suggestion for other congregations. The foundation was commenced two years ago at West Thirty-fourth avenue and Bryant street. Up to the present time two sections have been finished and one wing now in course of construction will be completed in a few months. The estimated cost of the entire building is $25,000.

Stockholders' Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Christian Publishing Company will be held at the company's office, 2712 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., on Tuesday Oct. 3, 1905, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the election of directors, and for the transaction of such other business as may legally come before said meeting.

St. Louis, Aug. 28, 1905.

—The little Flatrock Christian church at New Salem, Ind., will celebrate the seventy-fifth anniversary of its organization on Lord's day, Sept. 10. Stephen J. Corey, of Cincinnati, D. M. Van Buskirk, of Greensburg, Ind., A. D. Houze, of Flora, Ind., and others will occupy places on the program. Miss Florence Frazee and Mr. Pearl Wamsley will furnish special singing for the occasion. A basket dinner will be served in the church yard, and all former members of the congregation are invited to be present. This church is next to the oldest congregation of Disciples in the state of Indiana. Frank B. Thomas is the present pastor.

—Wm. Remfry Hunt writes from central China: "All the missionaries are full of enthusiasm. The work was never so hard, so real, so full of serious problems and so full of hope as now. Horizon signals are all about us. Heathenism has played its last card and lost! The outlook is vivid and taxes the keenest minds to forecast the new program. Japan has the place and honor of a great power and the future of Asia is largely wrapped up in the purposes, plans and destiny of the Land of the Rising Sun. We are hoping Japan will announce herself a Christian nation, and take the lead in the regeneration of Asia. Christianity, with its highest, best and most tactful forces, is winning its way. With the prayers, support and practical sympathies of our great brotherhood back of us, and all the spiritual dynamic of our royal commission, we are striving with faith, hope and love to enthrone the Christ in the hearts of China's millions."

A World's Fair Church.

The pavilion which served as headquarters at the World's Fair for members of the Christian church has been removed and re-erected at a considerable outlay at Old Orchard, a suburb of St. Louis. An addition has been made to the rear of the structure for baptistry, robing room, platform, etc. A splendid basement, cemented and fitted for the needs of a working congregation, has been constructed under the entire building. Thus enlarged and improved the pavilion furnishes a convenient, commodious and attractive church home for the congregation of Disciples at Old Orchard. The formal dedication will occur on Sept. 17, with T. A. Abbott, corresponding secretary of the Missouri state work, officiating. Robt. L. Wilson, well known to the brotherhood, has been called to minister to the Old Orchard congregation, beginning Sept. 1.

Bruneau, Idaho.

The land in Bruneau Valley, Idaho, is U. S. government land, and entry can be made under the "Desert Act." One person can take up land under this act in amount not to exceed three hundred and twenty acres, at a cost of one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre. Of this cost, twenty-five cents is payable in cash and one dollar at the end of four years. There are neither taxes on the land nor interest on the unpaid purchase price during these four years.

The Bruneau Land & Irrigation Co. (see advertisement above) has no land to sell, but sells to settlers water rights in its extensive irrigation system. Harry S. Watkins, formerly pastor of the Christian church at Tacoma, Wash., is a large stockholder and the prime mover in this enterprise, and will be particularly pleased to answer questions from readers of the Christian-Evangelist concerning the soil, climate or the manner and cost of irrigation. Write to him at 327 Sonna Bldg., Boise, Idaho, or to Bruneau Land & Irrigation Co., Colonial Security Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

Tithing Our Income.

R. H. LAMPKIN, Wolcott, Ind.

Dear Brother:—I want to acknowledge the receipt of your splendid book on "The Scriptural Foundation for Christian Liberality."*

I have been waiting to get a good ready to answer your letter and also to speak of your book intelligently. Like much of such waiting, I find the time has gone rapidly by, and I am not much nearer the desired readiness than some months ago.

But I want to thank you for both your letter and your book. I have read your book with great pleasure and profit. You have given us the best and most thorough treatment of his whole subject that I have seen. I should have been very thankful to have had the book before I wrote what little I did for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. You go to the root of the whole matter in a very scriptural and sensible way that I like. The book ought to be in the hands of every preacher in the United States.

I think with you that the tithing of our income is binding on every person to-day, not however by statutory enactment as in the days of Moses and the law, but from a higher reason. And I think that you show this in a very clear manner. It is a moral obligation that holds sway in this matter, than which there is no stronger law in the universe.

I hope that you will push the sale of your book in every possible way, not only for the reason that you have put much into it, but most of all because the truth you are teaching in this work is timely. Push the subject in every way. Few people realize how far-reaching this matter is. I will try and write more.

Importance of St. Louis.

Every day we have some occasion to remark upon the growing importance of St. Louis, whose equality with Chicago as a gateway to the West is becoming better recognized, as is illustrated by the announcement of the inauguration of a "Limited" train for Kansas City.

This train will provide every comfort, convenience and luxury which the word "Limited" implies and regular tickets will be honored without "extra" fare.

The Burlington Management say they are confident the traveling public and the commercial travelers between St. Louis and Kansas City want and will gladly use the same character of service to Kansas City which in the past has been obtainable only to Chicago.

This new Burlington Limited leaves St. Louis daily at 9:06 A. M. for Kansas City commencing August 26th.

The Cradle Roll*

By Mrs. Alice M. Duckworth

Have you a cradle roll department in your Bible-school? Why not? What is a cradle roll department? It is the first division or class of the church and Bible-school; it is composed of the babies too young to attend Bible-school. They may become members of the cradle roll at birth or later and continue until old enough to be brought to Bible-school regularly, when they are transferred to the primary department.

The cradle roll department in its present popular operation is comparatively new to us, but we can trace its origin to the day when Hannah and Elkanah took their little boy, Samuel, to Eli and enrolled him as a helper in the service of the house of the Lord. Later, perhaps about twenty-five years ago, the cradle roll as we know it was started in the Bible-school of a wide-awake primary teacher, who kept a record of the birthdays of the pupils and received from them their birthday pennies. This plan she enlarged to include the baby brothers and sisters of the class. Slowly and gradually the idea spread until now nearly all well organized Bible-schools have cradle roll departments.

The primary superintendent should have charge of this department. You may think they have their hands full with the care of the little ones in their class, but where can you find any one more consecrated and better suited to this work? The superintendent of the cradle roll must be able to meet all kinds of mothers, and win their respect and love, and gain their interest. It means unremitting watchfulness on her part for newcomers in the community and for families not members of any church. It means faithfulness in looking after the members, remembering birthdays. It means skill in originating plans for the enlightenment of those mothers who have never had Christian training, and also plans of helpfulness for those who are shut in from church on account of family cares.

In order to make this work a success, it should have the hearty co-operation of the pastor of the church, the superintendent of the Bible-school, and teachers and scholars, from the smallest to the greatest, as well as the membership of the whole church.

The pastor, when calling in homes where there are babies, can secure their names for the cradle roll, and when convenient, include the parents of the cradle roll members in his visiting list. The superintendent of the Bible-school can make announcements relating to the cradle roll and meet the parents when they attend services. The teachers, pupils, and church members can help by receiving names for the roll and reporting new families in the neighborhood and sickness among the members of the cradle roll

Let me name some of the duties of the cradle roll superintendent. She is to receive the names of the babies, visit the parents if possible, if not, write to them asking them to allow her to enroll the baby as a member of the cradle roll department. A card is to be sent to the parents to be filled in with the baby's name, age and address, signed by the parents, and returned to the superintendent. As soon as this card has been received, a certificate of membership should be sent to the baby. The parents appreciate this very much, some of them in our department have the certificates framed and hung over the baby's bed.

As soon as the application card has been returned and the certificate sent, the baby becomes a member of the cradle roll department and his name goes on the cradle roll.

The cradle rolls can be had in various sizes, materials and prices. A very neat one, all ready for use, can be purchased of the Christian Publishing Co. for fifty cents. One can be made in the home. The pictures of the babies are cut out from magazines and pasted on the roll. It is a good plan to ask or appoint some one in the primary class to adopt one of the babies, look after its interest, carry messages to and from the mother, keep the cradle roll superintendent informed in regard to the baby's health, carry the birthday card to the baby, and so on. It is much better to have a child adopt a baby that is a relative or neighbor if possible.

If you care for a cradle roll where you can use your class colors, you can make one including that feature. Our class colors are red, white and blue. Red is the color of blood. "The blood of Christ cleanseth us from all sin." White is the color of snow. "Now wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." Blue is the color of the sky, which is as wide and deep as God's love. "We love him because he first loved us."

When a child is old enough to attend the Bible-school, a gold star is placed on the roll opposite his name. If one of the dear little ones has been called to the cradle roll above, a picture of an angel is placed beside its name.

Here is a cradle roll service that can be used very nicely: Three little girls come forward, one tiny one standing between two larger ones, and holding a white cradle draped in white and pink.

The superintendent announces the name of the baby, and the girl on the right says:

Little cradle, do you think,
With your pretty bows of pink,
You can faithful be and true,
To this name we trust with you?

She then drops the baby's name, written on a slip of paper, into the cradle:

As we drop it softly there,
We will add a loving prayer,
That the little baby's face.
In our school may have a place.

Girl on left offers prayer:

Heavenly Father, hear our prayer,
Keep within thy constant care,
This dear baby thou hast sent,
To its loving parents lent,
To be taught and trained for you.
May our school its mission do,
Love and pray for, guard it, too.

Then the primary class sing a welcome song:

Again a new baby we welcome to-day,
  Oh, give it a song of cheer;
Its little feet guide in the heavenward way,
  Oh, welcome the baby dear.

We greet you, dear baby, as one of our band,
  To learn of a Savior's love;
We journey together and join hand in hand,
  Till welcomed with joy above.

For the cradle roll then, a song we sing,
  Let each heart bring love and cheer;
All praise to our Father, our Lord and our King,
  While we welcome the baby dear.

The superintendent should have a record book in which all the babies' names are kept. Have them enrolled alphabetically so that it takes but a minute to find any child's name. This is a help in remembering birthdays, for every baby should receive a birthday gift or picture card with an appropriate verse. Send it by mail addressed to the baby, with an invitation to attend Bible school the next Sunday. Sometimes the invitation is sent to the baby, asking it to bring its papa and mamma. The idea of inviting the baby by mail is novel and pleases the parents, and they are always glad to attend. It was told recently that in one primary department there were present to see the baby drop into the bank a penny for its first birthday, its mother, its grandmother and its great-grandmother. Surely a little child shall lead them. A beautiful cradle roll pin is sometimes given to the baby on its first visit to the school.

Once in two or three months have a cradle roll Sunday, when all the mothers and fathers are invited to bring the babies to the school. Decorate the room with flowers and sing the dear, old songs of days gone by, which may awaken memories of hope long dormant in some father's or mother's heart. Make this a place where they can feel that they can freely come with the baby and enjoy that which will rest, refresh and uplift their souls.

Then have mothers' meetings. Plan to bring the mothers into closer touch with each other. Have a short program, but spend most of the time in getting acquainted, weighing the babies, and having a good time. Some light refreshments might be served, if desired.

Visit the babies as often as you can. Be sure to visit the sick baby, for the mother needs your loving sympathy then. The mothers in poor neighborhoods are not the only ones who need help, comfort, advice and sympathy In every way possible prove yourself to be the baby's and mother's best friend, in sickness or in health, in life or in death. The superintendent will find she has much work to do. It is not a small undertaking; but there are few, if any, plans of church work which promise so large a fruitage as does this work. The results are beyond measure. The child is gained and often the mother and the whole family through their love for the child. The value of this work to the child cannot be overestimated. All over the land are thousands of babies, who, without this cradle roll department, would be allowed to grow up without entering any Bible school or receiving any religious instruction or influence. The parents come in for their share of the blessings by your letters, your visits and little remembrances. Their hearts are touched, and when that is accomplished you have the key to the whole situation. Oh, there are so many beautiful ways in which you can help the mothers and fathers, and through them the home.

The primary class is constantly graduating and sending on its members to another department. The cradle roll may be called its recruiting force, as it furnishes many new members. When the child is three years old, the time has come to promote him from the cradle roll to the primary department. Much should be made of this occasion The parents should be invited to be present, the primary room decorated and a welcome song sung by the primary class for the baby being graduated.

They have traveled only such a little way,
  Upon this changeful, mystic scene of life;
They know so little of its thorn-strewn paths,
  Its byways, seeming fair, yet with evil rife;
Such tender little feet, that scarce have known,
  As yet, the need of sandal or of shoon.

Small, hesitating feet; how much they need
  Wise guidance and a patient, watchful care!
For even for such a guileless innocence
  The tempter waits with many a pleasing snare,
And those small feet follow ours so trustingly;
  Oh, Father, may our every step lead up to thee!

Oh, precious feet! Wisdom and love divine
  We surely need who have them in our care,
To temper their sweet restlessness, and the needs
  Upon our hearts, in earnest pleading, bear
To him who too was once a little child
  And whose grace alone can keep them undefiled.

Great Northwest Texas Camp Meeting

The northwest Texas camp meeting commenced on Wednesday night, August 2, and closed its last session Sunday night, August 13. Perhaps there is no other place in the United States where just such a meeting could be held by the Disciples of Christ. It certainly has some characteristics that I have never seen anywhere else in all my experience, and which cannot be found elsewhere, since they grow out of conditions and environments nowhere else to be found.

The immediate background and support of the meeting consists of a few scattered churches of Christ, twelve or fifteen in number, scattered throughout seven counties, consisting of Shackelford, Throckmorton, Young, Archer, Baylor, Knox and Haskell. Each of these counties is thirty miles square, and hence they cover a total area of 6,300 square miles. They lie in the form of a rectangle 105 miles in length by 60 miles in breadth.

The physical characteristics of this country make it a delightful place. It is largely rolling prairie, bordering on the Llano or Staked Plains, having an average elevation of about 2,000 feet. The land is fertile, affording abundant pasture for stock, and is divided up into large ranches, varying in size from one or two sections, to twenty, thirty, and even forty sections. Railroads at present are but few, consequently transportation must necessarily be by private conveyance. The climate is delightful, the location being sufficiently far south to moderate the rigors of winter and the region being sufficiently elevated to temper the heat of summer. But it must not be supposed that the attendance at this camp meeting is confined to the region described. People attend from many different parts of the state, some of them driving in wagons two or three hundred miles, others traveling on the railroads to the most convenient points and then making the balance of the journey by private conveyance. It is no uncommon thing for visitors from other states to attend.

The people as a rule possess those peculiar qualities that characterize a pioneer people. They are enterprising, intelligent, industrious, honest, and strangers to the shams and conventionalities that sometimes mar the social life in older communities. The one characteristic that has most influence upon this great gathering is the intellectual and spiritual hunger of the people. I have sometimes thought that in older communities, where the people live close together and churches are numerous and strong, there comes to be often a lack of appreciation of the great privileges enjoyed. People seem to become over-fed socially, intellectually and religiously. Not so in such a gathering as this. The intellectual and spiritual appetite is so keen that the preacher's task is a peculiarly enjoyable one.

The material equipment consists of a large tent, under which several thousand people may sit and listen to the preaching of the gospel, or receive instruction on matters pertaining to individual Christian life, or collective church life. In addition to this there is a commissary tent, where groceries, ice, canned goods and cold drinks are furnished to the people at such prices as they would pay at their own homes. There is also a restaurant, where meals are furnished at nominal cost to those who are not provided with their own cooking outfit. The families for the most part come in wagons, bringing their tents with them. A desirable piece of ground of fifty or one hundred acres is selected, well provided with shade, over which the tents are pitched in the most eligible locations and the cooking is done, for the most part, in primitive style and therefore has a quality that is wanting in the product of the modern cook, as all pioneers know.

I must not fail in this connection to mention the barbecue. A great pan five feet wide and eight feet long with a tightly fitting cover is arranged over a furnace. In this an entire bullock is cooked at one time. It is first boiled and then browned in pan-roast fashion and served to the people in such quantities as the families desire, at very moderate cost. The aim in all the arrangements is to enable the people to live well at the smallest possible cost. The spirit of speculation or money-making is absolutely banished from the camp.

Does any one ask, Why all this? I answer, The direct purpose is twofold, first, an opportunity is afforded people who are not Christians to hear the gospel. It is therefore the aim of the management to secure a strong evangelist who can preach the gospel with clearness and convincing power, and he faces an audience such as but few men are permitted to preach to.

In the second place it is the purpose to instruct Christians, and all others as well, in the great principles of Christian life and duty. The Bible, the church, the divinity of our Lord, church work, missionary work, benevolent work and Christian education are all brought to the attention of the people. Incidentally other important ends are served. The social life of the people is cultivated and the keen social hunger in a measure appeased. The inspiration of a great crowd is felt and people are made stronger and more hopeful by touching elbows with others, and lastly the tendency to provincialism and local church selfishness is largely counteracted.

In numbers the crowd is as large as the average speaker can effectively address. The size of the crowd varies with the character of the meeting, ranging from a few hundred up to several thousand. The audience is in the most emphatic sense a prepared audience. The people do not come to be amused, or merely entertained, but to be instructed. There is an eagerness to hear that makes the preacher's or teacher's task peculiarly delightful. Oftentimes there are hundreds of young people in the audience and it is a rare thing to hear even a whisper. The audience is also intelligent and intellectually acute. Good solid thought is not only clearly grasped but greatly appreciated.

The people of the plains of Texas hear in this great assembly far better music than is furnished in the metropolitan opera. Imagine a chorus of two or three hundred voices, clear, fresh, strong and as musical as the voices of the birds, assisted by two cabinet organs and several orchestral instruments, and you have musical conditions of a rare kind, and music is the result such as any one might well travel across a continent to hear.

The evangelistic preaching was done by Bro. J. L. Haddock. His preaching is clear, forcible and convincing. He is preeminently a man of the people and, consequently, able to get close to them, not only in his social intercourse with them, but in his preaching. Brother Haddock might be criticised by some as being too hard on sectarianism at times, but it should be remembered that he has lived and worked under peculiar conditions. He has been out on the picket line. He has had to meet bitter prejudice, gross misrepresentation and even outrageous slander and falsehood concerning the people he represents. He preaches the gospel with clearness and in love. The enthusiasm of souls burns in his bosom. He has also been most wonderfully blessed in the helpmeet that God has given him. Sister Haddock has a sweet, spiritual face, a dignified bearing and manner and a cordial, warm-hearted disposition that endears her to all with whom she comes in contact. Brother Haddock's singer, Talmage Stanley, is rather a cornet player. While he sings occasional solos to the edification of the audience, his principal work is to lead the congregation with his cornet, which he does in a wonderfully sweet and masterful way.

As it was my privilege to lead in the Bible teaching, I feel I am not competent to speak of the character of the same, even if I were disposed to do so. I felt, however, as I stood before the deeply earnest, hungry audience that they deserved the very best that I could give them, and if I failed to instruct them properly I cannot lay the blame upon conditions. No teacher ever stood before a more inspiring class.

In the morning at 8 o'clock some Christian Endeavor worker met with the young people for instruction and devotions. At 9 it was my privilege to give the morning Bible lesson. At 11 o'clock Brother Haddock gave an evangelistic sermon. At 4 o'clock I gave a second Bible lesson or preached a sermon on some phase of practical Christian life, and at 8 o'clock in the evening Brother Haddock again preached an evangelistic sermon. All meetings were preceded by inspiring song and devotional services. After the night service the ordinance of Christian baptism was administered. At 9:30 on the Lord's day the Lord's day school was held, the best Bible-school workers being called into service.

One of the most surprising features of the whole gathering was the splendid order that obtained throughout. In the meetings the order seemed to me to be absolutely perfect. Around the tent there was no confusion or talking. There were no amusements going on anywhere to take the attention of the people away. At night, after the services were over, everybody dispersed quietly. This excellent order is attributable largely to that man of masterly spirit and indomitable energy, Bro. O. J. Wood. He has been one of the most prominent workers in this great enterprise from its beginning, eight years ago.

The immediate visible results are 60 additions to the church, but it is, perhaps, safe to say that the greatest results cannot be tabulated. Much seed has been sown which will surely yield an abundant harvest. Eternity alone can measure the results.

The next meeting will be held at Benjamin, Texas. A site will be selected bordering on a residence section and a pastoral section, which is important. Pasturage must be provided for hundreds of horses, and if a strong local population can be secured as a background the results must be large. Brother Haddock will do the evangelistic work again next year, if his life is spared.

I count myself to have been peculiarly fortunate in having been permitted to attend this great meeting as one of its speakers. I feel that I am a larger man by reason of this splendid fellowship that I have enjoyed. The spirituality of this meeting cannot fail to prove a blessed benediction to all who have attended it and I feel that the contact with these splendid brethren will make life larger and fuller.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Eastern Items.

On the eastern shore of Maryland, there are four congregations of Disciples of Christ. Bro. J. R. Biggs, Princess Anne, R. F. D. No. 1, is minister for three of them that are in the country. At Perry Hawkins a woods meeting was held in the grove adjoining the church, from July 16 to 30. The writer assisted from July 16 to the afternoon of July 23. In that time there were eight confessions. D. A. Nicoll, from Lansdowne, Md., assisted a few days, beginning on July 20. After I left there were six added, making fourteen, and the meeting had not closed at the last report I had. Brother Biggs was to continue over July 30. On the night of July 23, I preached at Snow Hill, the fourth congregation on the eastern shore. Bro. J. L. McDonald resigned as minister there. We need a good man for that point and others that might be opened at important towns, such as Salisbury and Crisfield. The latter is an important oyster town, and Salisbury is at the intersection of the branch of the Pa. R. R., running from Philadelphia to Norfolk and another from Baltimore to Ocean City, Maryland's summer resort on the Atlantic. Salisbury claims 10,000 people.

From Snow Hill I went to Bethany Beach, Del. Our eastern assembly for Christians at this point has now about thirty buildings, including the auditorium that will accommodate 1,000 people. It also has a post office, this season, and Bethany Beach, Del., appears on Uncle Sam's list.

From Bethany Beach we took our journey to Gordonsville, Va., via Baltimore and Washington. The Piedmont assembly was in session at the Tabernacle in the grove near town. It has a pleasant location, delightful fellowship, sweet music and good addresses. J. J. Haley, from Richmond, spoke on foreign missions, and your correspondent tried to enthuse the brethren on home missions. Bernard P. Smith, from Atlanta, Ga., gave a fine discourse on Christian Enthusiasm and another on Christian Endeavor. J. D. Hamaker, of Strasburg, gave an excellent address on the C. E. pledge.

Colorado Letter.

The Disciples in Denver have had a miniature national Christian missionary convention. Sunday, August 13, was a great day in their experience.

A train loaded with delegates on their way to the San Francisco convention arrived at an early hour and spent the day in Denver. F. M. Rains preached in the South Broadway church at 11 o'clock. Representatives of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions spoke at the same hour in the Central church. C. C. Smith preached in the Highlands church. C. W. Dick was sent to the Berkeley church to speak the word. H. C. Saum preached to the East Side congregation. Archibald McLean preached in Grace Methodist church.

In the afternoon a mass meeting was held in the Central church. Eight foreign missionaries were introduced by A. McLean as only A. McLean introduces missionaries. The following brethren spoke in this meeting: A. L. Orcutt, B. L. Smith, F. M. Rains, W. J. Wright. W. Bayard Craig, pastor of the Central church, presided. Miss Mattie Pounds and Mrs. Atwater spoke for the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. All spoke well. The speakers gave facts to the people. The facts kindled enthusiasm. This meeting was thoroughly missionary.

The evening of Wednesday, August 16, was devoted, in the South Broadway church, to a statement of "impressions" received from the delegates, visitors and meetings of the previous Lord's day. I. J. Spencer preached in the South Broadway church in the evening. A half dozen brethren spoke, at the same time, in the Central church.

Friday morning, August 11, about 300 persons on their way to the San Francisco convention, arrived in Denver. J. H. Garrison, G. A. Hoffmann, Paul Moore, W. S. Dickinson, were in this company. Breakfast was served at 7 o'clock in the morning by the ladies of the Central church, in the dining room of their splendid building on the corner of Sixteenth and Lincoln.

The only regret that I heard in connection with this affair was that the ladies felt compelled to charge twenty-five cents for their dollar meal. They did not try to make money. They would have been more than pleased to entertain this large company free, but the Central Christian church in Denver, like our congregations generally, has not a superabundance of wealth.

After breakfast our guests rode about the city. They saw the finest town in the United States for its age. Denver is not yet fifty years old. This Friday morning company remained with us only for three or four hours. The time was all too brief. Come again!

The annual meeting of the Colorado Christian missionary society was held with the Central church Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 11, 12 and 13. This time was selected by the acting board so as to have the pleasure and profit connected with the passage through the city of men and women on their way to the national convention at the Golden Gate. The attendance at the state convention was small—unusually small, but it was a good convention. All of our general interests were represented by speakers on the program.

No previous convention in Colorado ever received such information and inspiration as this convention. Missionary facts generate enthusiasm. The convention resolved to raise $3,000 next year for work in Colorado. This is a larger sum than the Disciples have ever attempted to raise in any one year in the state.

The number of men and women in this commonwealth who desire to be, and to be known as, "Disciples of Christ," or "Christians," is 5,500. Colorado is a great field for "our people." The cultivation of this territory will pay abundantly. There are 42 congregations of the Christian church in the state.

Last year an "Assembly" was held on the Chautauqua grounds at Boulder. This was so successful that an "Assembly" was held this year at Gato, a place 37 miles from Denver on "the Moffatt road." Dean Haggard, of Drake university, and C. C. Smith, of the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, attended, and by their presence and wise words added much to the pleasure and profit of the "Assembly." Every word spoken in the state convention concerning the "Assembly" was in its favor. The result was a unanimous determination to make the holding of an annual "Assembly" at Gato a part of the work of the Colorado Christian missionary society.

Denver this week, August 13 to 19, is alive with "Eagles." The annual convention of the "Fraternal Order of Eagles" is in session. It is estimated that there are 30,000 visitors in the town. This order was founded in 1898. It had, a year ago, 165,000 members. The benefits disbursed during the last fiscal year amounted to $258,689. I would be pleased to say some things about fraternal orders and what they are doing. These things may be said in my next letter. There is not space in which to say them now. I will not become an Eagle at present. What a contrast between the character and conduct of the delegates to the general convention of the Christian church and the character and conduct of the delegates to the Fraternal Order of Eagles! President Pelletier in his annual report said: "More than one-half of our aeries have not complied with our laws in the matter of bonding their officers in a fidelity or surety company, and we have been repeatedly confronted with absconding secretaries and other financial officers." This is not the kind of an institution of which I wish to be a member.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The Pike county meeting, held at Louisiana, was not largely attended, but what lacked in quantity was amply made up in quality. The faithful preachers were there. The business men of the county were conspicuous by their absence. Some of the women were kept at their homes by the heavy storms which came just at the opening of the convention. Clarksville auxiliary sent four representatives, Bowling Green, seven, Frankford, one, and Paynesville, one, the two latter being Christian men.

We are glad to report the reorganization of the auxiliary at Louisiana with seventeen members and more to follow. The officers are, Mrs. Kate Frier, Mrs. May Ransom, Miss Gertrude Gourley and Mrs. Elwood. We are so glad that these dear sisters have again joined with the other women who are serving the Master through C. W. B. M. channels.

The county board recommended and it decided by vote of convention to appropriate a portion of the county funds to sending Mrs. J. L. Moore through the county to visit every church and to hold C. W. B. M. institutes with them. This, we trust, will bring rich returns to all activities of the churches, as it has in other counties that have shared with state C. W. B. M. in this kind of work.

Lyman Abbott in Columbus, Ohio.

Lyman Abbott, preacher, editor, lecturer, has recently been "in our midst," as the country editor would say. For six nights the First Congregational church (Washington Gladden's), which seats about a thousand, was crowded to its utmost capacity, while many stood around the walls of the building. In the afternoons at 2:30 conferences were held in the lecture room, which many of the ministers of the city attended. These were interesting and helpful in that there was opportunity given to ask any question, discuss any problem presented by the address of the night before. Dr. Abbott also answered questions written on cards at any of the lectures. Such themes as, "What is Christianity?" "What is it to Follow Jesus?" "Christ, the Gift Giver;" "What is the Significance of Christ's Passion and Death?" "Jesus Christ as the Revelation of God;" "The Perpetual Presence of Christ in the World" were discussed.

Never have I witnessed deeper interest in meetings of that character. As early as 7 o'clock the building would be well filled and by the time services began standing room would be at a premium. The attention was profound. The impression was lasting. No doubt hundreds attended because of the fame of the lecturer and especially because Mr. Abbott is regarded as most radical in some of his views. It is not likely that very many, other than those connected with some congregation of believers, heard him. Mr. Abbott felt that, for he said in one of his afternoon conferences that he had hoped to reach a large number of non-professing Christians. The meeting was intended to be a sort of evangelistic service.

One evening when there seemed to be the most tender feeling pervading the vast throng, how I wished Dr. Gladden had given the gospel invitation and urged people to come forward, or arise from their seats, and confess Christ before men, instead of asking any who wanted to commit their life to Jesus to "simply sign a card and leave it in the pew." I am satisfied that if one of our evangelists had had control of the meeting and had given a warm exhortation, many would have responded to the invitation of the gospel.

At one of the afternoon conferences this question was asked: "Dr. Abbott, are you a Unitarian?" "No, I am not," said Dr. Abbott. "I accept the belief of all evangelical Christians in regard to Jesus. I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Redeemer of men." Then he went on to say that many men refused to say many of the unwarranted things said by Trinitarians, particularly several years ago, and that no doubt the position of the Unitarians was a protest against the unscriptural things said concerning Jesus, and that with many of the positions held by them he was more or less in agreement; but he affirmed very positively his belief in the divinity of Christ—the deity of Jesus. I could not help thinking, as I listened to him, that for saying just about what he said here in Columbus in 1905, Alexander Campbell was declared to be a Unitarian sixty years ago.

He said he believed in one God, but that God had manifestated himself in a variety of ways, in nature, in providence, in the word, in the tri-personality of Father, Son and Holy Spirit—here he used the identical words of Isaac Errett, in his tract on "Our Position." Not only here, but in many of his answers to questions he gave utterance to things with which I have been familiar since my childhood. Another example: The question was asked, "What is repentance?" He replied, "Repentance primarily signifies a change of mind, followed by a change of action; for example, if one is going in a wrong direction, and will change his mind and action and turn around and go in a right direction, that would be repentance." Then he quoted Acts 3:19: "Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out when times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord." I was just about to call his attention to the revised translation of that verse, when Dr. Gladden spoke up and said, "Dr. Abbott, is it 'be converted'?" "Did I not quote it correctly?" asked Dr. Abbott. "Yes, according to King James," replied Dr. Gladden; "but you know the verb, in the Greek, is in the middle voice, as is more correctly translated in the Revised Version, 'turn again.' " "Yes, you are right; that is the correct idea; for repentance is an act of man, not of God," said Dr. Abbott.

I nudged a Congregational preacher sitting next to me and said, "Why, that is rank Campbellism!"—no, not "Campbellism," nor any other "ism," it is the plain teaching of the word of God. But some folks have been a long time finding it out. Religious teachers, many of them, have always taught that it was impossible for a sinner to turn away from sin towards righteousness until he was mysteriously moved upon by some power; and until he saw some strange sight, or heard some strange noise, which he might take as an evidence of God's favor, he was perfectly helpless and could do nothing for his own salvation. Well, the world "do" move, and some theologians in particular.

Dr. Abbott's lecture on "Jesus Christ as the Revelation of God" was as strong and as scriptural teaching on that subject as any I ever heard. The only thing I heard him say that I could not indorse was his statement regarding the powers given the apostles, in which he took the position, if I heard him correctly, that if Christians now had the faith they ought to have, they, too, could heal the sick, cast out demons and speak with tongues. However, if I had had the time to sit down and ask him just what he meant by that, I might have gotten another impression; for a little later when someone asked, "What did Jesus mean when he said to his disciples, 'And greater things than these shall ye do, because I go unto my Father'?" he replied, "Well, isn't that being verified now? Are not more sick people healed in our sanitariums, hospitals, asylums—all the result of Christianity—than ever the apostles were able to do?" I said, "But, Doctor, do you not think that the Master referred to the spiritual change that was to be wrought through the labors of the apostles, rather than to the curing of physical diseases? Is it not a 'greater' thing to save a man from sin and death than to cure him of some bodily ailment?" "Yes, I suppose that idea is in it, but I think it is not all of it," replied Dr. Abbott.

In all of his lectures and conferences there was very little of a controversial nature; but there was much of that deep reverence for the word of God, the exaltation and insistence upon a higher spiritual life, the necessity of committing all our ways to him who alone can save. I am sure the visit of Dr. Abbott to Columbus will do good. I could but think so many times, as I saw the great crowds hanging upon his every word, that such must have been the breathless interest with which throngs of the most intellectual, the most pious, attended the lectures and addresses of Mr. Campbell as he made his famous tours about the country.

Dr. Abbott is very frail, his voice not strong, his gestures few, his language the simplest and easily understood by all. With Dr. Patton, of Princeton, who recently gave a course of lectures in the Central Presbyterian church, and Dr. Abbott last week in the First Congregational church, Columbus has certainly had the opportunity of hearing two great men.

Illinois Notes.

At Galesburg we found N. G. Brown and his amiable wife hard at work in midsummer developing young and old in the King's business. The church has grown to be strong and quite an important factor in the city's life.

The valiant little church at Hermon, usually ministered to by one of our boys from college, was in the midst of a protracted meeting, with three threshing machines at work in the neighborhood. Harold E. Monser, of Kewanee, was the evangelist, heroically contending for the faith and pleading with men to turn unto the Lord under very difficult circumstances. Brother Monser is one of our strongest evangelists and he ought to be constantly in the field winning souls for Christ.

The church at Lafayette is greatly enjoying the ministry of Brother Sinclair, a splendid young man who is taking post graduate work in Eureka college. The church was largely built up by J. H. Quinlan, now of New Boston. It numbers about 125 members with a good Sunday-school and a live auxiliary to the C. W. B. M.

At Toulon M. W. Nethercutt is holding the fort successfully. The church is one of the older congregations with about 100 members, and the usual auxiliaries in good condition. This church has the rare and proud distinction of putting four men into the ministry. L. E. Newcomer, of Austin, preacher and physician, whose ministerial power ought to be more fully employed, F. S. Ames, the minister to Hyde Park church, Chicago, grew to manhood in this church; R. H. Newton, our efficient minister at Normal, is a product of this church, where his people still live; Clyde L. Lyon, still in college, but preaching regularly, was raised here.

St. Augustine is another church built up largely by students from college. R. E. Conklin is spending the summer on the Pacific coast in the interests of the scientific department of the college. J. W. Hiatt is the faithful minister of the church, who saw that the college secretary was well treated and helped in his effort, as a servant of the church, to build up Christian education in Illinois.

Kewanee is a new town of probably 15,000 people with large manufacturing interests. It has been about four years since the state board of missions planted the cause here. A. C. Roach was the faithful servant on whose energy and wisdom much has depended. H. E. Monser and his faithful companion live here and are pushing the work with most commendable zeal. Sister Monser fills the pulpit most acceptably in the absence of her husband. The church numbers about 267 souls. The Endeavor Society is far above the average. There are five Sunday-schools managed by the church which enroll about 500 pupils. A good C. W. B. M. of 34 members is doing vigorous work.

Moral and Positive Commands.

THE EDITOR, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: When God created man, he placed him in the garden of Eden to dress it and keep it. "And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat. But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." That was a positive law or command given to Adam to test his loyalty and obedience.

Laws are of two kinds, positive and moral. A positive law is right, because it is commanded by competent authority. A moral law is commanded because it is right. Obedience to a positive command is a better test of loyalty than to a moral command, because obedience to moral law is, more or less, innate in man.

The command given to Adam in the garden of Eden, "Thou shalt not eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil," and the command given to the penitent believers on the day of Pentecost, "Be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins," were both positive commands. They were right because given by competent authority, and only for that reason. There would have been no harm in eating of the fruit of that tree if God had not prohibited it, and there would be no merit in being baptized if the Savior had not commanded it through Peter and the other apostles.

The question is often raised: When are our sins forgiven? and also: How do we know when our sins are forgiven? The scripture answer is, When we are baptized for the remission of sins. But my sectarian friend says: Why, that would be water salvation.

All the Christian world, both Catholic and Protestant, agree that Adam fell from his estate of innocency, and became a sinner and rebel against God, when he committed the overt act of rebellion and disobedience by eating the forbidden fruit. Now, I submit that, if being baptized in water for the remission of sins, in obedience to the command of the Savior, is water salvation, then the eating of the forbidden fruit in disobedience to the command of God was apple damnation. If eating the forbidden fruit brought immediate condemnation, certainly the baptism for the remission of sins brought immediate salvation. The apple was the element in the first instance and the water was the element in the second instance.

It was not the fruit, nor anything connected with the fruit, that brought condemnation to Adam, but his overt act of disobedience; and it was not the water, nor anything connected with the water, that brought salvation to the penitent believers on the day of Pentecost, but their overt act of obedience.

The great lesson which the Christian world should learn is to render implicit obedience to the commands of the Savior. Paul says: "He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" (Hebrews 5:9). Under the old law, we are taught that "obedience is better than sacrifice." WM. F. MADDEN.

Columbus, Ohio.

[This distinction between moral and positive commands was much in vogue among us twenty years ago, and is still held by many as a helpful distinction. Many others, however, reject it as putting baptism on too low a plane, making it an arbitrary command, instead of resting upon profound moral reasons growing out of the nature of man and the gospel facts. If its symbolic significance be what we have always held it to be and what the New Testament seems to clearly teach, it can hardly be regarded as arbitrary, or as deriving its fitness wholly from Christ's command.—EDITOR.]

Experience in the Pew.

THE EDITOR, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: About two years ago I resigned a pastorate and entered upon other business. Since resigning, I have been in the pew, and have listened to a number of preachers of different religious organizations. From that experience I record a few observations:

1. The pulpit is too often unnatural, even insincere. The man in the pulpit is not the same man that he is in private conversation. Almost any preacher helps me when I engage him in conversation on themes connected with life and religion. The same man often bores me when talking from the rostrum. He doesn't say just what he thinks and feels, and therefore his sermons are often to me only so much noise. Emerson never said a truer thing than when he wrote: "If men would avoid that general language and general manner in which they strive to hide all that is peculiar, and would say only what is uppermost in their minds, after their own individual manner—every man would be interesting."

The conscience of many a minister has been seriously injured, and his preaching made flat and dull, because of the gradual shifting of "the seat of authority in religion." Too many have been more eager to show their loyalty to "Confession" or tradition than to present to hungry men the untarnished vision of truth and religion which God has vouchsafed to their own souls.

2. The pew wants and appreciates most what may be called common doctrine. It is common doctrine because it fits human nature and can be worn by anyone. Doctrines that are peculiar to any one religious body and that cannot be preached to almost any promiscuous gathering of men and women, have but little preaching value. The preacher who explores the regions of human experience and thus enriches his life, will have an appreciative audience, if he is natural and sincere. But the pew cares little for "unskillful plagiarisms from the common stock of thought and knowledge," and still less for any "ism" however old or new. The Disciples of Christ have some statements reduced almost to an "ism," namely, faith, repentance and baptism.

3. To be of much use a preacher must have an adequate appreciation of human nature. "Man was made," says Genesis, "in the image of God," and Jesus calls men "sons of God." It was John Calvin, not Jesus, who elaborated the theory of human depravity. Probably no two men ever lived who differed more in their view of human nature than did Jesus and John Calvin. How much more is man than a sheep, grass, birds, or lilies? And in his walks and talks with men Jesus inspired them to a better life by calling out the good in them. The problem of the preacher is to show men the worth and dignity of human life and inspire them to live to the top of their capacity.

This is so, for one reason, because, after all is said about the authority of the Bible, men are guided by conscience, or "Christian consciousness," something that is very much like the Quaker brother's "inner light." A scripture text can have no authority unless it is at least partly understood.

To close as I began, let me repeat a little. Too many preachers are saying: "The modern view of things is true, but it won't do to preach it," and here is the basis of that insincerity which is the bane of many a pulpit. THEO. A. JOHNSON.

How Shall We Escape? and Other Messages. By Rev. French E. Oliver, Evangelist. (Fleming H. Revell Co.)

These chapters are really evangelistic discourses and were delivered as such by the writer. They will probably have far greater effect from the platform or pulpit than they will in cold type. They are brim full of a warning against sin and are messages of the fire-alarm kind. Whether they will be successful when cast in book form is a matter that the publishers may be able to determine.

The Epistle to the Ephesians, by Joseph Parker, D. D. (A. C. Armstrong & Son, N. Y. Price $1.50 net; 272 pages.)

Dr. Robertson Nicoll has been one of the most successful editors of religious publications. It is not often that any series which he starts ends in failure. The book under consideration belongs to the practical and devotional commentary, and is the second volume from the pen of Dr. Parker. His particular style is almost too well known for us to attempt to characterize it. Suffice it to say that his comments are full of suggestion, though one might often take exception to particular points of the exposition. There is a general summary of the epistle at the beginning of the book and the comments follow, verse by verse. Here is a specimen of Dr. Parker's style with particular application to the minister: "If a man shall be a lecturer, a politician, an adventurer, orator and a preacher, he will be a poor preacher. You cannot be all that and a preacher. A preacher is never thrown in; he is never mixed up in an indefinite designation of an etcetera."

History of Presbyterianism on Prince Edward Island. By Rev. John MacLeod. Sermons by pioneer ministers of Prince Edward Island nearly a century ago. (Winona Publishing Company, Chicago. 279 pages. Price $1.50 net.)

From the nature of things this book must appeal to a limited circle, but to those interested it will prove a valuable record of achievement. The history of the rooting and sturdy growth of a religion is matter of as much importance as it is of interest. The author of this book was peculiarly endowed for his task and he has given a very readable, and yet very informing, account of how Presbyterianism was planted and how it succeeded in Prince Edward Island.

The Blue Book of Missions for 1905. Edited by Otis Dwight, LL.D., Secretary of the Bureau of Missions. (Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York, N. Y. $1.00 net. 200 pages.)

The Blue Book published last year was hardly more than a directory of American missionary societies. But the demand for it was so widespread, and so many suggestions came in from all over the world, that the committee of the Bureau of Missions planned the present volume. It is an admirable production, containing the essence of the annual reports (for 1904) of one hundred or more missionary societies, with statistical tables of the latest data as to population, area, religions and missions (both Protestant and Roman Catholic) in each of the non-Christian countries of the world. It also contains a large collection of miscellaneous information carefully indexed for quick reference. It will even help you to cipher out the cost of sending a telegram or of going in person to any mission field. It will give you the names of the latest books on mission work. If you want to know the value of a coin of measure mentioned by some missionary—consult the Blue Book. In fact it is an admirable compendium of missionary information.

Modern Masters of Pulpit Discourse. By Prof. William Cleaver Wilkinson. (Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York, N. Y., 8 vo. cloth, 434 pages. Price, $1.60 net.)

Dr. Wilkinson approaches his subject from the standpoint of a poet and a man of literature. His chapters deal with 18 prominent preachers of this country, Great Britain and France. There will be a general agreement with Professor Wilkinson that the men he has selected as masters of pulpit discourse deserve to be classified under such a title. As to the relative order of merit there would, of course, be a wide variation of opinion, but few will take exception to the first chapter in the book being given to Henry Ward Beecher, while no one will question the right of Dr. Talmage, one extreme of preacher, but just as great in his own class, to come next in order to the other great Brooklyn preacher. Dr. Richard Storrs and Phillips Brooks are the third and fourth preachers discussed. Those who are familiar with the great Manchester sermon-builder, Alexander McLaren, will hardly question his right to come to the forefront in such a book. John Henry Newman, Chas. Haddon Spurgeon and Henry Parry Liddon make a triumvirate of great English preachers that could hardly be equaled by any other three representing such varied types of thought and style. Then comes the Frenchman, Eugene Bersier. As to those who follow, with the exception of one or two, whose right to a place in this volume would hardly be questioned, there might be some changes. For instance, W. M. Taylor, John Hall, John Broadus, would not by many critics be regarded as masters of pulpit discourse, although they were eminently successful preachers. Dwight L. Moody, of course, had to be included, and Dr. Gunsaulus is a specimen of the preacher who can put brains into rhetoric and create a contagious enthusiasm, who might be included as a type of the twentieth century pulpit orator. As to Dr. Wilkinson's criticisms and opinions, these are for the most part independent, acute and judicial. The book will be very helpful to preachers, especially to the young men who will use it as a means of suggestion and who will not seek to become an echo in style or thought of any of these great pulpit divines. We have heard men who tried to preach like Spurgeon, to talk like Spurgeon and to cut their clothes after the same fashion. But Spurgeon was a broad-shouldered man and not many of his imitators could get near to him even in wearing the same kind of apparel. But the book is non-technical and will be enjoyed by the general reader as well as the preacher.

THE BULWARK OF ZION.—Psalm 48.

Zion a Type of the Church. The ancient city of Jerusalem was built, for the most part, on the mount called Zion, which was known in Israel's history as the City of David. The name Zion came to be used as synonymous with Jerusalem, and is so used in our lesson. When Christianity supplanted Judaism, springing out of its very bosom as it did, it was but natural that the older religion should furnish abundant types for the new. Hence Jerusalem became a type of the church of Christ, and is so used in Heb. 12:22-24; Gal. 4:24 26 Let us apply the beautiful language of our psalm to the church of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Its Beauty. "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King" (verse 2) The beauty of Jerusalem is even now extolled by travelers, as it is first seen from the summit of the surrounding hills; although a nearer view reveals the squalor and filth that characterize all Moslem cities in our day. In the times of Israel's glory, the city was far more attractive to the vision; and when David and Solomon had raised up their splendid palaces and the magnificent temple with its walls, it must have been exceedingly impressive to the beholder, even where the spirit of worship did not prevail. When to its native glory was added the consciousness that it was the earthly dwelling place of God, the heart could but thrill at the sight of it. And is not the church of our Lord, which he has purchased with his own precious blood, and cleansed by his Holy Spirit, worthy of the admiration and homage of our hearts? As the body of Christ, however unworthy, can it lack wholly the beauty of its living head? Read Eph. 1:22,23; 3:10,11; 5:25-27; 1 Tim. 3:14,15; Rev. 19:6 9 When we are tempted to scorn or revile the church, let us forbear, remembering that, with all its faults, the church is the most beautiful of all the institutions that exist among men for their mutual profit and joy.

Its Security. "Walk about Zion, and go round about her; tell the towers thereof. Mark ye well her bulwarks consider her palaces." In the day of Israel's fidelity to Jehovah, all the violence of enemies could not shake the confidence of the people. God was round about his people as a wall for defence So is the church of the living God a secure refuge for every one that trusteth in him. Founded on the Rock of Ages, the immortal Son of God, it cannot be shaken. Even hell itself seeks in vain to disturb the peace of those sheltered within these walls. Read Isa 28:16; Matt. 16:16-18; 1 Cor 3:10,11 Those who abide under the shadow of the Almighty need fear no evil, though they be called even to walk through the valley of the shadow of death (Psa. 91:1 2; 23:4) What peace would visit the restless hearts of a troubled world, if they would but make God their refuge, their very present help in time of trouble!

Its Happiness "Let mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad." The church is a place for unfailing joy. Jesus bids us throw away all worry, and find in him the abiding peace and joy which the world can neither give nor take away. "Rejoice in the Lord," is the keynote of one of Paul's noblest epistles (Phil. 2:1,2,17,18; 3:1; 4:4 7). He who will have fellowship with Jesus in service, will share in the happiness that flows from communion with God (John 15:7-11; 16:20 24). Beside this true joy the pleasure of the world loses all its fascination.

WHAT IS PRACTICAL CHRISTIANITY? —James 2:14-26.

For the Leader.

Do we mean by such a subject as this, What is practical Christianity? that there is such a thing as a Christianity that is not practical? Or do we mean that there is such a thing as not practicing what we theoretically hold as a matter of belief? Or do we mean that there is a practical side to Christianity, as when we consider it as a service, or as a duty performed; and a theoretical side, as when we consider it as a system of truth? In a sense one must answer in the affirmative all these questions. Not that there is a Christianity that can not be practiced, but there are some persons that do not practice it though they hold it as a matter of belief.

It was the danger of holding a theory and neglecting the doing that James sought to correct in his epistle. He does not set one over against another—faith and works—but he does argue the necessity of works with those who were neglecting the same. Let us be careful lest we, while not probably holding any theory like those persons evidently held, fall into the same fault—neglecting to do the things we believe.

For the Members.

1. What is the end of a promise? Is it not the fulfilling of the same? Is it a matter of any importance that we promise the Lord anything without doing it, without keeping the promise in a faithful effort to keep it? Surely it is not. God is full of promises, as the prophet would say. He wants the belief, the foundation, the pledge, but all this that he may receive the fulfillment. There are those who talk loudly of the love of the Lord, yet they have not been found upon the side of the Lord when it came to the matter of putting into practice the talk. God is not pleased with this kind of a Christian life.

2. The world is in need of sympathy. How sweet is the word kindly spoken to the sad one! There can be nothing wrong with sympathy. It is a thing to be diligently cultivated. We must wish all men well. It is the nature of love so eloquently discussed by Paul—this feeling, sentiment, this attitude of the soul toward all men. But this is one thing, and the sympathy that is empty, the sympathy that ends in expression, is another thing. There is all the difference in the world between the sympathy of a person who is a doer of a sympathetic deed, and one who ends the matter in empty words. James says we cannot discharge our benevolent duties in words. We cannot feed the hungry on words. Sentences, though never so beautiful, add no warmth to the cold, shivering form that stands at my door asking shelter for the night. Do your sympathy!

3. What is practical Christianity? It is the practice of the teachings of Jesus the Founder of Christianity Why, we find persons to-day—and more than we should like to admit—who doubt if the Golden Rule is practicable. What is that but a statement that the teaching of Jesus cannot be practiced? It is that, pure and simple. What shall we say of a boasted loyalty to Jesus that denies that his teaching can be put into practice? Is it not a heresy worse than those for which men have been put to death? Yes. Some of this same class would load the heresy hunter's gun and go for big game in the places where men called in question the fact of Jesus' divine claims, but they ground their arms and utter the worst heresy that ever polluted the human heart—doubting the ability of men to practice Jesus' teaching and the practicability of that for which Jesus gave his life. In the 25th of Matthew Jesus gives a vivid description of the judgment. In this he bases all hope upon our part upon the practical features of our religion. This is the test. How is it with us to night?

THE LIFE-GIVING STREAM.—Ezek. 47:1-12.

Memory verses, 3-5.

Golden Text.—Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life.—Rev. 22:19.

Among the prophets whom we know by name and personality, Ezekiel was the greatest prophet of the Exile. He was born in Jerusalem, was a young man when Jeremiah was at the zenith of his career. While Jeremiah remained in Jerusalem until its final destruction, which closed the reign of Zedekiah (586 B. C.), Ezekiel was carried into captivity with the first party of exiles eleven years before when Jekoaikim was deposed and deported together with a company of the principal citizens (597 B. C.). Ezekiel thus observed from a distance the events of the final years at Jerusalem. His call as a prophet occurred six years before the destruction of Jerusalem and most of his prophecies are carefully dated.

The prophecies of Ezekiel which are gathered in our book of Ezekiel fall into three groups, as follows:

(1) Chapters 1 to 24, written before the fall of Jerusalem. This part rehearses the sins of the nation, vindicates the justice of Jehovah in bringing it to punishment, and declares that the hope of a speedy deliverance is vain. With regard to this last element, Ezekiel in Babylon and Jeremiah in Jerusalem were simultaneously combating the blind and groundless optimism of the false prophets who predicted that Babylon would very soon fall.

(2) Chapters 25 to 32, written about the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, but before the news of that event had been received by the earlier exiles. This section is devoted to condemnations of the various enemies of Judah, including Ammon, Moab, Tyre, Philistia and especially Egypt, for all of whom dire calamities are predicted in payment for their sins. By contrast, there are some stray beams of hope for a restoration of Judah.

(3) Chapters 33 to 48, written (or delivered) after the fall of Jerusalem. These cover a period of sixteen years (586-570 B. C.). This last section divides itself into two parts: (a) Chapters 33 to 39 deal with conditions among the exiles in Babylonia and give us most of our information about their religious status; (b) Chapters 40-48 contain the prophet's vision of the city of God, that is, a symbolical presentation of his outlook for the restoration of the nation to its true dignity and destiny.

Ezekiel had striking characteristics as a prophet. He introduced and popularized the use of elaborate apocalyptic imagery, such as the symbolism of beasts and ideal cities. He had an intense realization of the dignity and majesty of Jehovah—his "holiness" in the Hebrew sense. The opening vision (chapters 1 and 2) shows this. With this went a deep sense of the imperfection and unworthiness of man. He introduces the phrase, "son of man," and applies it to himself as a term of humility, by way of contrast with divine things.

He laid a new emphasis upon the responsibility of the individual. National solidarity had overshadowed individual obligation with the earlier Hebrews. Men were punished for the sins of their fathers. Guilt was transmitted. Punishment was dealt out to men in groups—the family, the city, the nation. Contrast the words of the Decalogue, "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me" (Exod. 20:5), illustrated and enforced by the familiar cases of punishment en masse in the early days, with these words from Ezekiel: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son. The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him" (Ezek. 18:20).

He emphasized the redemptive purpose of God's punishments. "As I live, saith Jehovah, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live" (Ezek. 33:11). Read also the vision of dry bones (37:1-10).

This spirit of hopefulness, an undeveloped form of the Messianic hope, found its fullest expression in the vision of the ideal city (chapters 40 to 48) in which God would even yet, notwithstanding the fall of Jerusalem and the ruin of the temple, cause his people to dwell in peace and glory. Ezekiel's priestly predilections are shown in his elaborate description of the ritual and the paraphernalia of worship and the duties of priests and Levites in this new Jerusalem.

The river flowing out from the city in a deepening current (the feature chosen as the topic for this lesson) indicates that the beneficent influences of this new regime are not to be limited to the city. Ezekiel was a thorough Jew and he planned the city of God as the dwelling place for the chosen people, but he saw also that the blessings which would issue from the consummation of this heavenly order would go out in widening circles to the ends of the earth.

CLIPFELL.

While visiting relatives at Lansing, Mich., June 30, 1905, H. F. Clipfell, a most consecrated man, from the very midst of boyhood associations, took his final departure. Owing to failing health he, with his devoted wife, gave up his home and bade farewell, May 20, to sorrowing friends at Redwood Falls, Minn., expecting, after visiting friends in the east, to settle down with their children in Minneapolis. Brother Clipfell was a pioneer Disciple of Minnesota. He knew from experience what faith, devotion and sacrifice meant, and but for his moral heroism the Redwood Falls church would have been lost to the cause of primitive Christianity. For his Christian character and devotion he was deeply loved and sincerely respected, and his wife, daughter and son, all sharing the father's faith and devotion, have a host of friends who sympathize with them in their grief. Brother Clipfell was retiring to spend his waning days with his children and in a closer fellowship with God's people. But now he is called up higher to rest from his labors and to fellowship "the general assembly and church of the first born who are in heaven." E. A. ORR.

Mankato, Minn.

EDWARDS.

Caleb Edwards died very suddenly in Quincy, Ill., July 6. Brother Edwards was very dear to me and to my father's family. He was for 16 years pastor of my home church in the little town of Payson, Ill., a remarkable record for one of our smaller churches. He baptized me with his own hands and ordained me to the ministry. He was one of the first to encourage me in entering the ministry. He accompanied me when I preached my first sermon, driving me out to the little country church in his own buggy. I will never forget the glow of kindliness and appreciation on his good face while he listened to that sermon. During the 16 years of his ministry in Payson he was often in our home. Other lives have been cast in larger and more conspicuous places than was his, but none have been more nobly lived. I have seen Brother Edwards under the severest trials, in sorrow and in stress of church work, and never did I hear him complain or resent his lot. His soul was bigger than any circumstance that could confront it.

Rock Island, Ill. O. W. LAWRENCE.

JENKS.

At her home in Minneapolis, Minn., July 16, Mrs. Adelaide Gail Jenks was released from suffering by

> "God's angel of perfect love,
> The angel men call Death."

She must have "found his face fair" as he unfettered the spirit from the frail, sensitive body and opened to her vision the "glory of God." A disciple of the Lord since girlhood, she has devoted her energies to the success of the cause in the homeland, and for the extension of the kingdom abroad, giving generously to their support. A lover of literature, gifted in verse, her sweet poems have long been read in various periodicals. Whether in green or desert lands her pathway led, to her trustful spirit the Master ever whispered, "It is I." During long weeks of suffering she was sustained by night and by day by the tender and faithful ministrations of her two sons until the end. The burial was at lovely Lakewood.

> "Her feet have touched the hills of God,
> Heaven's morning air flows sweet upon her brow,
> She sees the King in all his beauty now,
> And walks his courts with full salvation shod."

C. L. R.

KELLOGG.

Nancy Burtt was born in Clark county, Ind. Feb. 19, 1819, and died at Lodi, Cal., Aug. 8, 1905. She united with the Christian church when she was 15 years old, and lived faithful to her vow till the end, a term of 71 years and five months. I know of no longer term of service by anyone in the church of the restoration. When about 30 years old she was married to Alonzo Kellogg, a widower with a family of children whom she helped to rear. To this marriage were born four children, three boys and one girl. The girl, who is now Mrs. S. S. Murphy, was born after her father's death. Mother Kellogg was a constant student of the Bible, retaining her mental vigor to the last. She read our religious literature and kept well posted in all our church work. She had a very tenacious memory and knew the Bible almost from cover to cover. E. J. Kellogg, of Craig, Mo., O. P. Kellogg, of Decatur, Ill., and Mrs. S. S. Murphy, of Lodi, Cal., are the three children who survive her. The oldest son, John, died three years ago. Mrs. Kellogg and her daughter, Mrs. Murphy, were never separated till death took the mother. She leaves ten grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. The funeral service was conducted at our home in Lodi, Cal., by J. P. Dargitz. The body was taken to Woodland, Cal., and laid beside that of her son. "Blessed are they who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

S. S. MURPHY.

McDOWELL.

Mary A. Fisher, born in Indiana, July 25, 1829, died at her home near Bladensburg, Ia., July 3, 1905, aged 76 years. She was married to John H. McDowell in 1851, who preceded her in death one year. Ten children were born to this union. She united with the Christian church in early life and was faithful. She was a true wife and a loving mother. The funeral service was conducted at the residence by the writer. E. A. HASTINGS.

PORTER.

Mrs. Minerva Porter, mother of R. H. Manning, was born in Miller county, Mo., Jan. 5, 1844, and died in Lenora, O. T., July 26, 1905. She had been a consecrated Christian for forty years, and gave much of her means to Christian work. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the Christian church, Lenora. E. B. HUFF.

Seiling, O. T.

POWELL.

William L. Powell was born in Montgomery county, Ind., Feb. 25, 1837, and died suddenly of apoplexy July 11, 1905, in Gallatin, Mo. He was left an orphan at the age of nine and the support and care of his mother was thus early placed upon his shoulders. In 1857 he came to Daviess county, Mo., and since has resided there. In 1858 he united with the Old Union Christian church near Gallatin. On April 1, 1860, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Miller. To this union five daughters and two sons were born, three daughters and one son still surviving, who, with the beloved wife, mourn his departure. On Feb. 5, 1862, Brother Powell enlisted in Company A of the First Regiment of Missouri State Militia and served three years, after which he returned to his farm, where he resided, with the exception of the past two years, during which time he and his family have lived in Gallatin, where they are honored, esteemed and loved. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor from the church in Gallatin. One of the saints of God has entered home.

WHITTLESEY.

Leona May Whittlesey was left, by some unnatural mother, upon a doorstep, one night in June, in Colorado Springs. The event became widely known, and had large space in the city dailies. The authorities were unable to find the mother, and were about to send the wee thing to a foundling hospital in Denver. It weighed only three pounds. My daughter, Mrs. Mary Whittlesey, requested the privilege of adopting it, and it was granted her. There was not much hope of raising it, but it was given a good home and tenderest care. On Friday, July 28, its spirit took its flight from earth. The funeral service was conducted by Crayton Brooks. Doubtless he who notes the sparrow's fall received the little one into his bosom. WOOD.

Laura Helen Wood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benj. F. Smith, was born in Fayette county, Ky., Nov. 4, 1843. She died at her home near Holden, Mo., June 24, 1905. She was one of three children, the others being Mrs. Geo. S. Anderson, of Texas, and Prof. A. F. Smith, of Kansas City. Married to Maj. Wm. L. Wood in 1871, who died four years ago, she leaves three children—two sons and a daughter. Sister Wood became a Christian when 16 years of age and was a faithful member of the church at Holden at the time of her death. She was a woman of strong character, much loved by those who knew her best. The funeral services were conducted by the writer. J. W. BOULTON.

Family Circle

The Reconciliation.

Farmer Wiggs and Farmer Watkins had a falling out.
At the start they weren't quite certain what 'twas all about—
Just some little huff regarding a division fence,
But the tiff, by careful nursing, grew to be intense.

Years rolled on, but neither neighbor sought to cure the strife;
Seemed as if they were determined to be foes for life.
Folks declared 'twas wrong for neighbors to be quarreling thus,
So they tried, but all for nothing, to allay the fuss.

So it went till Farmer Watkins fell so ill one day
He was sure his time was nearing to be called away;
Presently it dawned upon him he could never go
Leaving here on earth behind him such a bitter foe.

Then it was that Farmer Watkins called his neighbor in,
And remarked, "It don't seem likely I'll git up ag'in,
So I wanted to forgive ye all ye've done to me,
An' if I have hurt your feelin's, cross it off," said he.

Tearful Neighbor Wiggs commended Neighbor Watkins' plans,
Then was their new bond of friendship sealed by shaking hands.
"But," said Neighbor Watkins, " 'lowin' I git up once more,
Then the old fight's on, remember, same as heretofore!"

Reuben on Labor.

Labor is God's way of introducing people to each other. If you don't labor you can't love. Verily I say unto you,

Unless you open the pores of the skin
The Kingdom of Heaven can't come in.

Sympathy comes in as the sweat goes out. What makes Tolstoy love the peasants of his land? Because he goes bare-foot and plows corn in his shirt-tail. He bears their burdens, and knows whereof he speaks. Gladstone chopped in the woods with his axe until the sweat poured forth and then sat down on a stump and thought out good laws for the people.

Blessed is the man who has discovered the value of daily toil with the hands; not all day, but just enough to see what a whole day, a week, a year, would be. St. Paul labored by day and preached by night. The wise men fed sheep in the old days as well as last year. Then if work is no disgrace why put the young men to breaking their necks over each other to get away from it? Yes, I would tell the majority of graduates to get a team of mules and run a farm wagon, for the professions are running over.

If you must preach, preach; if you must be a lawyer, hang out your shingle; if you must practice medicine, get your pills; but don't run yourself through school to find a short cut to a soft snap. Get an education in school if you can, out of it if you can't, and use it for your enjoyment, and for making your particular little locality a better place to live in. And whenever you get too big for your community, move out or build an addition to the town.

I preach the doctrine then of every man being a gentleman and a scholar, and let the matter of employment be a side issue, a way to make meat and bread for him and his. There are then no high jobs and no low jobs; we join hands and promenade all. Then if any man knows anything let him tell it, and if any man would be great let him serve, and the fellow that serves the most is the greatest man, and him we will make our preacher, our prophet.

Guy Thornton's Ragtime.

By Elizabeth Price.

Up to a certain point in his motherless childhood, Guy had developed so gently and girlishly that the aunties who had him in charge were entirely satisfied. He never omitted the small courtesies of speech and manner which Aunt Henrietta painstakingly taught him. He never wore his cap across the threshold of a room or forgot to use the door-mat conscientiously. Soiled hands or a grimy pocket-handkerchief would have shocked him, while slang and lurid figures of speech were in his estimation only the slightest remove from profanity.

Aunt Leonora had charge of his studies, and took great pride in his steady, if leisurely, progress through the school-books out of which she had gotten her own education. But his music! Oh, that was a theme that never failed to arouse gentle Aunt Leonora to enthusiasm. "His talent is remarkable!" she would exclaim. "His long, slender fingers are those of an artist, and his technique is already better than mine. I assure you, Sister Henrietta, we may expect great things of Guy."

They had finished McGuffey's Fifth Reader, when Guy's father, descending upon them for his annual visit from his distant city, suddenly became aware that the slender youth with the ladylike manners was no longer a baby. The knowledge came to him with something of a shock and it was with newly opened eyes that he surveyed his only son.

"Not a prank all day—not a halloo! Even his music sounds like a girl baby's." Twon't do."

That was the beginning, and the end saw him settled in a certain well-known boys' school, a gymnasium-suit in his closet, boxing-gloves behind the door, Indian clubs over the mantel, and dumb-bells on the hearth. "Make a man of him—a good one and pure, but a man. And, by the way, professor, he might drop the music altogether for the present." That was Dr. Thornton's instruction.

The aunties wept at thought of the contaminating influences about their darling. Guy himself eyed his new quarters askance till something within him suddenly awoke, a new life stirred into action, and his education had begun.

The Christmas holidays were spent with father at his hotel, seeing the sights and hearing the sounds of a great, bewildering city. The summer vacation was passed in traveling from point to point of interest with a trusty tutor and several fellow-students.

So the time passed until Guy had been away from home almost two years before he arranged to revisit the old home.

The blissfully expectant aunties were met with a greeting so vigorous it almost took them off their feet. "Hello there! How are you! No end glad to see you!" That was what he said, then he tilted his hat sideways and removed a cinder from his eye with a much crumpled handkerchief.

Miss Henrietta looked bewilderedly at Miss Leonora, then appealingly back at the big, broad, brown youth with closely cropped hair, a square, somewhat belligerent jaw and an unmistakable swagger.

Once in the carriage, Guy slapped the staid

THE KOLA PLANT.

HAY-FEVER
AND
CAN BE CURED.

The African KOLA PLANT is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific. Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 26th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Closson, 128 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York coachman on the back, and referred to the dignified horses as the "same old cows," startled the ladies out of their wits by a series of salutatory greetings as old friends bowed from the pavement; and last, but not least, informed them, after a survey of the vehicle they occupied, that "the hearse looked a trifle antiquated."

It was dreadful—there was no denying that. But the gentle souls were loyal as well as proper, and, once they recovered their equilibrium, began making excuses and planning their work of reform. "Only a month, sister. We must be very firm," declared Miss Henrietta.

"And very kind," added Miss Leonora. "I'll review his music after tea. I am anxious to see what progress he has made."

Just then the lad came swinging in with an armful of music, which he deposited with a bang on the piano. "Your studies, dear?"

"No, indeed, I don't use studies. They're all bosh for boys. The governor says so. These are my songs and things I play just for fun. Dandies, too; regular rippers, some of 'em. Just listen to this." And the stately parlor with its inlaid furniture, its antique brocades, its prim and ancient pictures, lent deafening and unwilling reverberations to the strains of a popular ragtime selection, while the aunts held their breath with anxiety for the safety of their piano.

"Isn't that a rattler? I've got dozens of 'em," and the boy ran his fingers over the pile with pride.

"We think it would be better for you to do some regular practicing while you are here, dear," suggested Aunt Leonora, trying to speak with the recommended firmness.

"And review your studies. It is so wise to have regular habits, Guy," added Aunt Henrietta, hoping she was sufficiently kind.

"Oh, this is a vacation, and it's hard enough on a fellow to have to dig after school begins. Father said I needn't, and he's the majority, you know. As for music, I don't care for the kind I used to study. I'd give more for a good ragtime than a bushel of Mendelssohn and all the rest of 'em. Oh, yes, I've heard plenty of music. The governor don't care a rap for classical things, and he's up to date."

"What governor do you refer to, Guy? We don't understand."

"Why, father, of course."

The shocked silence was broken by a burst of ragtime melody that tinkled the chandelier prisms and drove the sisters for refuge to their sitting-room.

"He doesn't seem quite as tractable as he used, Leonora," quavered Miss Henrietta, lying down on a friendly couch. "But Annabel is coming next week. She is accustomed to boys; suppose we permit the dear child to take a rest from duties until we get the benefit of her advice."

"Perhaps we'd better We wouldn't want to be hard on Guy—his first visit for so long."

One week later Mrs. Ryder arrived from her distant California home. She was much younger than her sisters, and had been their pet and pride in the years of her happy childhood. She had married before Guy's advent, and her duties as home-maker for a stirring family of her own had prevented her taking the long journey east earlier. So she and Guy met for the first time on the day of her arrival. There had been leisure before, however, for the sisters' recital of their anxieties and perplexities concerning their wayward nephew, who had gone fishing for the day. A desire to do him full justice, the true and unwavering affection they felt for the child of their love and care, mingled with the necessity for making a clean breast of affairs, so Annabel would know how to advise, made a rather bewildering tale. But Mrs. Annabel had not been a mother of boys for naught, and she listened to the pathetic story with wise little nods and intelligent comments that gave immediate comfort.

"He is really rough, Annabel; almost vulgar, it seems to me, though I so do hate to say it, and wouldn't except among ourselves. And he used to be such a gentleman."

"And slang—oh, my dear, that is beyond description—almost profane. Of course, I know he wouldn't talk so if he realized how wrong it is. But his father doesn't seem to hold quite our views."

"I could bear the rest better, if his music hadn't gone to ruin. He used to love it so. Why he read lives of Beethoven and Handel before he had left our care, besides many sketches of other great composers. As for practicing—when I think of his scales in all the positions, and arpeggios and five-finger exercises, and how he used to practice them by the hour; and now hear that dreadful noise he calls 'ragtime,' I am ready to despair. Even his beautiful hands have changed. They look like a prize-fighter's now, or, as I should suppose a prize-fighter's would look."

"I'm afraid, Annabel, if one can consider such a possibility of darling Lillie's child, that if Guy keeps on—much as I love him—I'm afraid he will make a bad man." At this climax Miss Henrietta disappeared behind her handkerchief.

Mrs. Annabel straightened up. "Never!" she declared briskly. "Never! You two kept him too much compressed, and the inevitable has happened. Since the chance for expansion came, he has gone to the other extreme, and demands more space than he can occupy. Leave him to me a while, will you?"

"Willingly. Though I'm afraid you will be disappointed, for we've tried hard to interest him in higher things. Henrietta read several of Poe's poems to him, and did them beautifully, but he said they were 'all rot.' Then I played Handel's 'Largo' and Schumann's 'Traumerei' with all the expression I am capable of, and he actually looked bored."

"He was bored, Leonora. Healthy, rollicking boys don't need Largos and Ravens, Even ragtime music has its place as a factor in the education of some boys. My experience has been that the most effective way to disgust a person with undesirable things, is, not to force them out of their grasp, but to substitute something they will like better."

"You may be right, Annabel. At all events we are not prepared to contradict you."

Presently Guy came in, tousled, torn and disheveled, too much elated over the string of trout that accompanied him into the sitting room to care for his appearance. The old ladies protested wildly and kept their distance from the wriggling mass as they introduced their nephew to his unknown aunt. The look of half disgusted disappointment on the lad's face cleared away as Aunt Annabel gave him a hearty kiss and admired his catch to his heart's content.

It was two hours later when a dreadful din began in the parlor. Annabel had disappeared, and the aunties set out to see if Guy had cornered her in the parlor to hear his voice. What was their dismay at beholding their sister at the piano playing "Whistling Rufus" with might and main, while the lad sang at the top of his voice.

"Glory Day—that's all right, all right!" declared Guy as the song ended. "I haven't got the kinks out of my windpipe before since I came. 'Fraid of the aunties, you know."

"Did you ever!" gasped Miss Henrietta.

"I never did!" said Miss Leonora. And they told the truth.

The next few days were largely devoted to

Guy's music. He and Aunt Annabel became chums at once, and between them they kept the old piano tinkling or banging from morning till night. Guy reveled in his favorite selections while the aunts wondered if it were Annabel who had gone demented or only themselves.

But Mrs. Ryder had not lost sight of her purpose even while she kept silence concerning it. She was fairly setting before her motherless nephew, one phase of a subject and waiting for the time to come when she hoped to introduce him to the other phase, the "something he would like better."

One morning after looking over her mail, she announced that her tickets had come for the symphony concert in the city that evening. "I shall depend on you for escort, Guy; your aunts are not feeling equal to the trip,"

"Classical stuff, I suppose?" asked Guy discontentedly.

"Assuredly yes," was the cheerful reply. "And it will be exquisitely rendered. This orchestra has a national reputation, and I've been anxious to hear it for a long time."

The boy said no more. He could do no less than accompany Aunt Annabel, who had been so lovely to him. "But if there's anything I despise it's that sort of racket," he grumbled to himself, wrestling with his tie as he made ready for the down train.

If Mrs. Ryder guessed his mental disturbance, she gave no sign, but was unusually bright and interesting, chatting serenely until the hall was reached and the conductor gave the opening signal. Guy settled back to endure what he couldn't cure. After all it was interesting to see the symmetry of motion among the players even if one didn't care for what they played. How gracefully and in what perfect rhythm the bows moved across the many violins—what a master that leader must be to hold the whole orchestra like a single instrument in his frail hands! They were playing an Allegro from a Beethoven Symphony, and before he knew it Guy was listening to the melodious strains. Aunt Annabel watched him slyly—saw the interest kindled in the alert black eyes as the boy leaned forward and placed his elbows on the balustrade. During the fourth selection from the symphony he turned with a quick motion.

"That isn't half bad, is it, aunt?"

"I like it very much, Guy."

"It's a shame the old codger had to be deaf, wasn't it?"

"It was a sad tragedy for Beethoven, Guy."

The beautiful numbers followed in quick succession, and in one listener at least the interest steadily increased. It was late in the evening when Brahms' immortal waltzes were played, perhaps the most exquisite movements that ever emanated from a master brain. Rippling, dimpling, glancing songs of birds, music of laughing streams—what did they not suggest? Aunt Annabel forgot to watch the boy as the charm of the music bewitched her Did ever mortal ear hear sounds as sweet before? She felt a pang at the close—a sense of loss. Then she remembered Guy. The audience was applauding madly, but the silent figure at her side turned tear-brimmed eyes to hers and said, "Oh, I say, Aunt Annabel, I didn't know there was music in the world like that."

She had her chance on the way home, and she used it to the lasting good of the boy.

"That is the refinement of music, my lad," she told him. "There are many grades, but only the best is worth one's real endeavor."

"I thought classical music was all bosh," confessed Guy. "I've never heard much only Aunt Leonora's, and hers didn't sound like that."

Aunt Annabel smiled in the darkness at the remembrance of her sweet old sister's faint and timid sonatas. But she only said, "I am glad you see for yourself what music may become. The same is true of all other good things: Of language, which may be pure and ennobling or merely a medium for the expression of coarse thoughts; of personal appearance, of intellectual attainments; of all the elements that make up our lives. It is for us to decide which grade we will choose as our goal. We may live ragtime lives, think ragtime thoughts, use ragtime speech, play ragtime music. Or we may mold ourselves into lives of perfection as far removed from ragtime as are Brahms waltzes."

"I guess that's what Aunt Leonora and Aunt Henrietta have tried to teach me, only I was too stupid to understand," said a quiet voice at her side. "All the fellows called me prim and old-fashioned when I started to school, and made fun of me for being so. Then I tried to forget all I'd learned and be as different as I could, for I thought maybe because they were only women they didn't know much."

"But you see they do, my dear. They live that Beethoven Andante every day. Every sweet, soft strain reminds me of them."

"And I'm living 'Whistling Rufus.' I'm glad I found it out in time."

Next day another pile of music joined the one on the piano. Aunt Annabel brought it down, making no comment, but Guy pounced upon it at once, and was soon twanging away at one of his old studies, while Aunt Leonora listened with tears of joy in her faded eyes. "It's not much, but it's good metal what there is of it," was the boy's comment as he finished. Then he turned impetuously to the two long-suffering but still adoring aunties on the divan.

"I say, I haven't lived up to all you used to teach me, but I haven't forgotten it. I'm going to try to be a man yet that you won't be ashamed of." Then he kissed them both tempestuously and ran away while they wept blissfully on each other's shoulders, and Aunt Annabel hummed softly but happily a fragment of Brahms.

And Guy is keeping his word.—Herald and Presbyter.

Lullaby.

By Walter de la Mare.

Shut now those summer-haunted eyes;
'Tis but the lonely owl that cries,
Tu-whit, tu-whoo!
And, O, its burden is, Come soon,
Sleep, to the drowsy little one!

Stir not thy hands! The wind that goes
To breathe the sweetness of the rose,
Sighs softly through;
And O, its whisper is, Come soon,
Sleep, to the drowsy little one!

Fold thy bright lips! The voice that wails
Is the far-echoing nightingale's,
Lone to the moon;
And all her music is, Come soon,
Sleep, to the drowsy little one!

The Advance Society.

Well, young friends, it's pretty warm—just the time of the year when most people want to do only what they have to. And yet in spite of the thermometer, our faithful members of the Av. S. have been working right along at history, poetry, quotations and Bible. It is a little thing to read five pages of history on some pleasant day when you don't feel like doing anything else. But when you take pains not to let a week slip by without reading five pages, it becomes a healthful, helpful habit that tends to make you more of a man or a woman, according, of course, to circumstances. And a week slips by pretty fast after all. If you are not careful, many weeks will glide away without leaving you any brighter or better. And if they do, what's the use of you? The world is improving all the time, and if you aren't improving, it's no place for you. Look at this new Honor List, and take courage and resolution from the example of these people who are determined to improve themselves. Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky. (25th quarter. My mother is visiting her right at this time and I am keeping house; wouldn't you like to see me cook? I'd like to see you eat it, when it's cooked. Why not come around? I can give you cornbread and eggs, and you can buy your own milk. By day a gaunt shadow prowls around the premises; it used to be Felix before he began subsisting on my viands, but he's hardly enough of anything now to be called a cat. Oh, yes, and I must tell you about our orphan Charlie—but I'd better go on with this Honor List and get it done first and then do something else.) Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind., 6th (Her report is of 14 leaves, fastened together with the Av. S. colors, old gold and blue, a really pretty combination. By the way some one asks if one must copy quotations in the reports. It isn't required—but really, I must get on with this list); Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia. (4th—her quotations are all fine, as this one from Beecher, "The man who has lived for himself has the privilege of being his own mourner," and this from Herbert, "He who cannot forgive others, breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself"); Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo. (7th and 8th; Edna did not send in her 7th on time, owing to the illness and death of her mother; she has the sympathy of the Av. S.); Mary Lindale, Glenwood, Ind.; Mary Rice, Harrisonville, Mo. (6th); Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn. (17th—and a dollar for our missionary and orphan); Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo.; Mabel G. Damerell, Walnut, Kan. (10th); Sadie Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia. (Her report is neatly typewritten); Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo. (7th—with her usual mite for Drusie); Wilhelmina Mosby, Denver, Col. (I would like to know if Wilhelmina received the Av. S. pin I ordered her. Some one asks me to describe the same. It is a small gold pin shaped as an open book, with "Av" on one open page, and "S" on the other—an attractive little ornament); Grace Everest, Oklahoma City (2nd—her report is shaped like a little book, the pages sewed together).

Dunlap, Mo.: "My name is Lillie Fisher. I am 10 years old. My school teacher began keeping the Av. S. rules with me, but the fifth week she went visiting and forgot her Bible verse, but I didn't forget mine. I live on a farm 10 miles east of Trenton, where my father lived when he was a little boy. My mother has taken the Christian-Evangelist 25 years. My aunt Lizzie Wallace, Cameron, Ill., wanted me a long time to join the Av. S., so she could see my letters in the paper. Her birthday and mine are in February." (I wouldn't have a birthday in any other month.) "I have two cats, Topsy and Bluebird." (I have a cat, his name is Felix. He is not very kind to birds, so you had better keep Bluebird at home.) "I send 50 cents for Drusie, our missionary, and orphan Charlie. My two uncles each gave me a quarter, and I send them too, to do as you think best." (Well, we have a street fair beginning here to-day, and I expect those two quarters would get me into two of the shows. However, I'll put them in with your other money.)

Mrs. Helen M. Bunker, Exline, Ia.: "When the Av. S. first adopted 'Little Joe,' our own two orphan children sent you something for him. A few weeks ago the letter that Ella wrote you was printed. It had been so long since they sent the money, we thought it might not have reached you, but as it did, we send again. Ella is not with us now, but Everett sends 50 cents for Charlie; he earned it raking hay for a neighbor. I send 50 cents for Drusie. Everett is Charlie's age. May God's blessing rest on those who labor for love of Him." (That's a very short letter, but you can't think how much good it has done me. A good many letters, some written as long ago as last Christmas, are still unprinted. It's because our space is so limited. As soon as "The Woodneys" is finished we'll have more room. Don't you wish the story would end to-morrow? Now just think of this little boy, himself an orphan, raking hay to make enough money to send to help support another orphan! I like to think of the boys and girls who deny themselves to help our orphan and missionary.) Mary A. Rice: "I send in my sixth report. I am glad Charlie is having a nice visit in the country. I picked up some apples for Drusie and Charlie; I hope they will enjoy them; divide it half and half." (This is a delicate way of saying that she sends a dollar of her own earnings.) Mrs. Ireland, Kirksville, Mo.: "I see from the Christian-Evangelist that Charlie is to spend this month with you. I send a couple of nightshirts, too large for my own boy. I trust he is having a good time romping with your old-gold pet, Felix, even if the fur does fly." (The shirts came, and were in excellent condition. Charlie hasn't come, yet. After Mrs. Ryman kept him for a month on her farm, her father-in-law took him to Grayson, and he has been visiting friends of the family. I have talked to him several times over the telephone, for Grayson is not far away, and once he drove into Plattsburg to call on me. He found my father and mother at home, but I was out on another farm. You ask what I was doing there. Well, swimming and eating ice cream and apples, and playing on the piano, and we killed a great big rattlesnake which bit the dog and his head swelled all up till you ought to have seen him. But Charlie—speaking of our or-

I'm afraid Charlie will not be so plump after dining at my board. Some of you do not know that I am without a lady. Not long ago one of you sent a check for the orphan payable to "Mrs. J. B. Ellis." I had the creepy feeling of endorsing that check with my wife's name before I got a wife. It was curious. Mrs. Robt. Stricklett, Fearis, Ky., sends a dollar for Drusie.) Clara E. Shriver, Nebo, Ill., on our last Honor List?) Mrs. L. Brinkworth, Oneida, Kan., sends 50 cents for Charlie and Drusie. (Is Oneida where they make all those dry, sandy biscuits? While Charlie was at Mrs. Bessie Ryman's, she gave him a party.) She writes: "Tuesday afternoon I entertained all the children I could find. I do not know how many were invited. I asked each mother, if she could not come, to send her children with a neighbor, and I asked each to bring some preserves for the orphan home where Charlie stays. We had 35 children and 10 grown people, besides ice cream and cake. I am delighted to report 16 quarts, one pint of preserves and more promised. This is the first response for the home we have had in this neighborhood. I put Charlie's initials on the marshmallow cake with marshmallows. He has been very nice all the time he has been with us." (I will tell you more about Charlie after his visit to Plattsburg.)

Thanks to contributions sent in at the last minute, I was able to send Drusie another five dollars. It was a big disappointment to me when I had to skip last month. Let's send her five dollars next month; what do you say? She writes: "I want to thank all the dear friends who have so kindly remembered me with offerings and helpful letters. I always praise the Lord for every line of cheer from the homeland. I wish you could be present here in North China at some of our meetings. If you could see the people as they first hear about Christ—some eager, some doubting, some scoffing and opposing—then attend one of our meetings for Christians and see the faces aglow with the love of Christ and hear their songs, you would think it all worth while to save just one. You would never want to return to America, for you could not get away from the need of these poor lost souls. I told you about the strange fire burning the idols in the walled up temple. Regarding what the Chinese consider a miracle, whatever view one takes of it, it certainly has had the effect of turning men to the gospel. When we got there yesterday, we were received with courtesy, if not with awe, by the people of the street. One of the leading men invited us into his house where a meeting soon gathered in a large room. After preaching to them, Mr. Holding asked if they would like for us to pray for them to God and received a hearty assent; we sang, 'He Leadeth Me,' and explained what prayer is, then prayed. Some bought gospels and began reading in an interested way. Pray the Lord to send his harvesters not only here in China, but in Africa, India, and all the world."

THE THREE CORDS OF LOVE.

THERE are three kinds of love—perhaps, rather, I should say, three instruments on which love plays. It may manifest itself through the heart, through the soul, or through the mind. My love for you may be either practical, admiring, or communing. The love of the heart is practical; it ministers in common things. The love of the soul is admiration; it looks upon a far-off glory and longs to be near it. The love of the mind is communion; it has touched a point of equality with its object; it can listen and respond. A mother's love for her child is that of the heart; it is helpful. A poet's love for nature is that of the soul; it is wondering, admiring. A friend's love for a friend is that of the mind; it is intellectual sympathy—communion. I think our love for God plays successively each of these tunes. We begin with the heart; we say, "Our Father"; we try to work for our Father. By and by the vision of wonder breaks upon us—the love of the soul; we bow with admiration before mysteries of the universe. At last comes the glad morning—the love of the mind; we begin to know God—to commune with Him, to speak with Him face to face as a man speaketh with his friend; that is the manhood of our love.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."

Vol. XLII. September 7, 1905 No. 36

Current Events.

The Amazing Peace. The peace conference is apparently all over but the good-byes. The main facts of the surprising developments of the past week are doubtless familiar by this time to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The agreement of the envoys upon terms of peace was as surprising to themselves as to the rest of the world. M. Witte frankly admits that he was "amazed" at the Japanese acceptance of the terms which, under instructions from the Czar, he laid down as final. On the lesser points of the negotiations it was impossible for the Russians to resist Japan's demands. The cession of Port Arthur, the evacuation of Manchuria, the Japanese protectorate over Korea, the surrender of the southern Manchurian railroad—these were all points about which there could be little doubt. The peaceful progress of the negotiations while these topics were under discussion blinded no one to the danger of a rupture when the more important topics should come up for consideration. First in importance and difficulty was the question of indemnity; after that the cession of Sakhalin Island to Japan, the possession of the Russian ships interned in neutral harbors, and the limitation of the Russian naval force in the far east. The two groups of envoys, each acting under strict instructions from their respective sovereigns, reached a point where agreement was impossible. The least that the Mikado would permit his representatives to accept was more than the most that the Czar would allow his representatives to grant. There is not a shadow of doubt but that the conference would have ended then and there if President Roosevelt had not thrown himself into the breach, at imminent peril of giving grave diplomatic offense for intervening after he had declared that there would be no intervention while the envoys were enjoying our hospitality, and strongly urged both governments to moderate their demands and compromise. The appeal was successful. It did not materially alter Russia's attitude, but Japan was convinced of the wisdom of making all the concessions, if necessary, to secure peace. And so she did. The interned ships were given back. The limitation of Russian naval power was given up. The northern part of Sakhalin was conceded, retaining only the southern part, which was formerly Japanese territory. The demand for indemnity was entirely abandoned. This was the hardest concession of all. The demand had been veiled under polite phrases, such as reimbursement for the cost of the war and ransom for the return of Sakhalin. The final agreement entirely abandons the principle of indemnity, under whatever name, and provides only that Japan shall be reimbursed for the cost of caring for Russian prisoners.

A Japanese Victory. The peace terms are a victory for the Japanese. When the strain was over, M. Witte, according to the published reports, burst into a rather ecstatic eulogy of himself and his achievement in getting such unexpectedly good terms. Unquestionably he got all that was to be had and much more than his government was entitled to by all those precedents by which our ideas of justice and fairness in such matters are controlled. This may be good diplomacy, or again it may not. In any case it was a victory of stubbornness rather than of subtlety. The Russians were unable to convince even themselves of the justice of their contention; much less could they convince the world or the Japanese. It was not a question of convincing anybody, but of stubbornly and recklessly refusing to settle upon any other terms than those which they had proposed. It can scarcely be supposed that the Russians expected Japan to be forced by physical or financial necessity to accept her terms, but it is conceivable that Witte and the Czar shrewdly guessed that Japan would be more susceptible to the pressure of world-wide public opinion than they were, and would therefore prefer to make a disadvantageous peace rather than bear even half of the odium of going on with the war because of disagreement about indemnity. In reality, that was just what happened. Russia was willing to sacrifice either her soldiers or her reputation to save her roubles and that something called honor which sometimes, in the case of governments, consists in refusing to pay one's debts. Japan, although successful in the war up to date, was sincerely anxious for peace, both to prevent further loss of life and money and to conform to the universal sentiment of humanity in favor of peace. So everything was sacrificed and peace was made. It was good diplomacy for, while the war has given Japan a high standing among the fighting powers, her generous concessions for the sake of peace will give her a new status among the civilized powers. This in itself is worth more to a rising young nation than a cash indemnity. It was good business, too, for to carry the war on to the point where Japan could compel the payment of an indemnity would have cost more than the indemnity would amount to.

The President's Triumph. President Roosevelt has gained more glory than anyone else from the successful issue of the peace conference, and he deserves it. It was a hazardous thing for the head of a government under whose auspices a peace conference is being held to undertake to influence the negotiations. Such an effort could result successfully only when backed by the utmost moral earnestness and sincerity, with no trace of selfish motive, and made in the most skillful and diplomatic way. Both of these conditions were met and the President voiced effectively the peace sentiment of the civilized world. It was a piece of that extraordinary and exceptional diplomacy which transcends diplomacy. The professional diplomat is seldom capable of it. It is being rumored that the Nobel prize for this year for the promotion of peace may be awarded to the President. It would be rather absurd for any one else to receive it. The prize, it will be remembered, is one of five established by the will of the late Alfred Nobel, the inventor of dynamite. The prizes amount to $40,000 each and are awarded each year to the five persons who, in the judgment of the committee, have made the most valuable contribution during the year to the sciences of chemistry, physics, and physiology, to pure literature and to the advancement of peace.

How John Hay would have rejoiced in the part our government has played in making peace and securing the open door in the far east!

An Old Question. It looks like there may be some exciting times in South Carolina. "Take South Carolina out of the liquor business," is a cry that has been raised, and former U. S. Senator John McLaurin, who has been urged to run for governor on an anti-dispensary platform, wants to "take men out of a partnership with the devil in a liquor traffic that is sending souls of men to hell and with its corrupting influences tainting the very fountain of good government." Mr. Tillman, who is the author of the dispensary law, is a bitter enemy of Mr. McLaurin, and with these two leaders in opposition the fight will be a hot one. Mr. McLaurin is a member of the Cotton Growers' Association and represents the newer commercial ideas of the awakened south, while Mr. Tillman's ideas and actions are familiar to most of our readers. It is not at all surprising to us that charges of fraud, graft and corruption are being made in connection with the operation of the state liquor business.

Specials for Drunkards.

There are some people who always have to resort to that old saying that you cannot make people sober by act of Parliament whenever legislation of a restrictive kind is suggested. But the truth in the old saying is of a very minimum quantity, while the mere suggestion of penalties has often a deterrent effect. This is well exemplified in a peculiar arrangement which some of the railroad companies of England recently announced. Anticipating the usual contingent of drunken passengers on the evening of the bank holiday, they arranged that to save annoyance of the sober passengers and ladies all inebriates should be put into a special compartment by themselves. The consequence was that no drunkards offered themselves as passengers, the new regulation apparently having shamed them into sobriety or kept them away.

Mr. Bryan as a Preacher.

President Roosevelt has for some time been the most noted preacher in this land. For while not occupying a regular pulpit he has been delivering some first-class sermons in different speeches that he has made. Mr. Bryan, another political leader, has, on many an occasion, also taken the part of a lay preacher. But recently he has come out more pronouncedly than ever before, according to one of the editors of the "Interior," who heard Mr. Bryan's new address, "The Prince of Peace," given at the Bible conference at Winona. It must be a very fine deliverance. It would get him a call instanter, says our contemporary, if he presented it as a candidate before a pastorless congregation, and the argument and manner of delivery is described as follows:

> Mr. Bryan was not simply religious in his line of discussion and appeal; he was evangelical; even more, he was spiritual. His main purpose was to show that the reception of Christ into the human life brings peace to the hearts of men when no earthly successes satisfy, and that the spirit of Christ in society increases peace continually in the personal relations of humanity. Incidental to this, he made a manly, straightforward defense of the reality of miracles, the divinity of Christ, the reasonableness of atonement and the assurance of immortality. His arguments were not such as would satisfy a professor of apologetics, but they were made up of a practical, common-sense logic that would strike square in the center of a plain man's difficulties. His eulogies of faith and self-sacrifice, and his plea to young men and young women to trust themselves fully to the friendship of Jesus Christ, were in the best manner of Mr. Bryan's superb oratory, touched and reinforced by burning feeling. In his introduction Mr. Bryan declared that he had no apology to make for turning from politics to religion as a theme of public speech, because matters of government touch only a small segment of our lives, but religion covers the whole circle. "And besides," he said with a smile, "I hate monopoly so much that I don't want even the preachers to have a monopoly of talking religion."

An American Colony.

As a nation we have not yet gained any such reputation as colonizers as belongs to our English forefathers, but the reasons for this are easily explicable. All our energies have been bent to the developing of our own great country. Yet there have been some Americans who have gone into far lands with the settlement idea as their plan. Among these was a band of enthusiasts, who, some twenty-five years ago, set out to establish a new order of life at Jerusalem. They seemed to be inspired by a desire to be amid the scenes of our Lord's earthly mission when he appeared the second time in glory. This colony still exists in a kind of communistic way. They have no acknowledged head and no separate property, but live in comfort in buildings of their own, just outside the Damascus gate. They are self-supporting, dealing much with tourists, and carry on schools that are popular with the well-to-do classes. They number some 150 people and, while not engaged actively in missionary work, they have won the affections of the poor, and their irreproachable and industrious lives count not a little in commending Christianity to their Moslem neighbors.

Addicks Gone?

It may possibly be a trifle premature to chronicle "the passing of Addicks," as some of the papers are doing, for Mr. Addicks is a shrewd and shifty citizen with a feline facility for lighting on his feet. But at present it does appear probable that his political race is run. Reports from Delaware indicate not only that Addicks has lost most of his money (though not necessarily all of it by a good deal) but that his staunchest friends have fallen from him, convinced that his senatorial ambition is hopeless. The Addicks episode forms the most remarkable chapter in the history of senatorial elections. It has been virtually a sixteen-year deadlock. In 1889, having then recently moved into the state for that purpose, he launched his candidacy for the United States Senate and went into the market for negotiable statesmen in the Deleware legislature. Having had previous business relations with this legislature in franchise matters he knew the scale of prices and anticipated neither difficulty nor unreasonable expense in acquiring a majority of votes on a joint ballot at the next senatorial election. But many unforeseen obstacles presented themselves. Some couldn't be bought and others wouldn't stay bought. The whole protracted incident has been an awful example of venal politics, but it has its encouraging features. That a man with all Addicks' money should be unable to buy a seat in the Senate in sixteen years of constant effort is not altogether to the discredit of Delaware.

An Epic of Graft.

The following verses, contributed anonymously to a daily paper, may lack something of Homeric grandeur and Horatian elegance, but they are worth printing again as a comment on some events which are always current:

I wonder if the grievance of a humble private resident
Could reach the sympathetic ear of our impulsive President?
I'd like to make a strong protest against the baneful crime
That seems to have resisted well the gnawing tooth of time,
Of paying to our congressmen ten times more than they need
For traveling expenses (sic) and also for their feed
While on the way to Washington, poor, over-burdened men,
And back to their long-suffering constituents again.

It's 20 cents a mile each way, and was adjusted so
A long and tedious century and sixteen years ago
When they must go on horseback or by stage or eke on foot,
And even then one-half of it was pure and simple loot.
Indeed, the times we've fallen on are sad in the extreme
When bribes and graft and looting are of daily news the theme;
When trusts and corporations and combines and such devices
Conspire to put the wages down and put up all the prices;

When prodigal extravagance is fostered in high places,
Despite the curbing influence of all the Christian graces;
When $500 inkstands for some unknown reason must
Be actually furnished to our servants in high trust,
And when nothing's too expensive our official needs to fill,
Providing always, mark you, that the country pays the bill.

The Divine Labor Organization.

"Labor Day" brings us again to consider some of the most important interests of the race. "Lazarus is very uneasy and he is becoming perilously impatient," says a recent writer. It is a fact that Lazarus and Dives are still found and one is clothed in purple and fine linen and the other gets the crumbs, but we dare say Lazarus is an actor in this drama as well as Dives, and that in real life neither is an essential figure.

Perhaps the kindest law of heaven is that which was proclaimed in the beginning to Adam, that in the sweat of his brow man should earn his bread. Hewers of wood and drawers of water, men bending under burdens and carrying yokes, people that dig and weave and plant and build, workers in wood and marble and iron, by whom all food, clothing, habitation, furniture, and means of delight are produced for themselves and for others; men whose deeds are good though their words be few, whose lives are serviceable be they never so short, and worthy of honor be they never so humble, as well as men who paint, or preach, or legislate, or teach, or govern, or write books, or exercise the healing art—all laborers are worthy of happiness and of hire, and no true workman will say the law of heaven is an unkind one or that he ever found it an unrewarded obedience if rendered faithfully to the command, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."

But myriads upon myriads of human creatures have obeyed this law, have put every nerve of their being into its toil, have devoted every hour and exhausted every faculty and alas, what failures! Why is it that with all our cultivating and weaving and building there are hungry and unclothed and homeless ones? Why is it that with all our legislating and philosophizing and organizing, combining and associating, Dives is here and Lazarus is here? The divine labor organization has been ignored. Poverty is not a necessary evil. Dives and Lazarus are not essential characters in human life. The true scripture prayer touching these conditions, "Give me neither poverty nor riches," is one that may be answered for the whole human race, and all the troublous questions and problems which vex and threaten society, Christianity can settle by the simplest laws. You may try every principle of political economy so far discovered. You may have every typical Dives quit giving crumbs, surrender his purple and fine linen and distribute all his goods to keep the poor. You may by the most powerful combinations of government answer the cry of Lazarus: "Give me for my body's sake and for my soul's sake and for your soul's sake—give me what God has provided for me. Give me a living share of the necessities and comforts of life!" You may do all this, and it will be only a little while before Lazarus will be very weary again and become perilously impatient.

There is but one real, permanent, universal remedy. It is in the gospel. The golden precept, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," is the touchstone of the labor question, and for the illustration and enforcement of this principle the highest of all labor organizations—the divine labor organization—was instituted. "We are laborers together with God." God is a worker and we work with him. In our common partnership are divine partners and human—all men who are true workmen working together with God. A society founded by God must be perfect. An association of divine and human partners, in a blessed fellowship under the perfect principles of God's law, regulating all the relations of men toward each other and bringing them into perfect sympathy and harmony and co-operation, labor-sharing and profit sharing, rendering all conflict impossible, abolishing Dives and abolishing Lazarus as well, and making men one universal brotherhood, under the loving Fatherhood of God—such an organization is the church of Christ.

But has the church attained this condition? Where is it true to its leader's example and teaching? In the beginning it was so. Read Acts, second chapter. The church was a community for the time being where none could suffer want. The partnership worked for the glory of God and the highest spiritual and temporal welfare of the whole body and of every individual member of the body, and labored to extend the beneficent principles of the religion of Jesus into all lands and homes and hearts. Was not this a perfect organization, the principles perfect, the combination perfect? Wherever it prevailed did not peace and prosperity and happiness, as far as is possible under earthly conditions, prevail? And to-day, if man would co-operate with heaven and with his fellow in harmony with this law of heaven, who can deny that all differences between man and man would end, wars would cease, injustice and wrong perish to the ends of the earth and "All men's good would be each man's aim; and universal peace lie like a line of light across the land, and like a lane of beams athwart the sea through all the compass of the future years"?

What is the cause of your strikes and the sacrifice of millions by the cessation of business? Is it not the failure of men to apply the law of God in their relations one to another? What is the cause of drunkenness, and the ignorance, poverty, misery, and crime which follow the terrible curse of intemperance? Is it not in the sinful indulgence of appetite, the dreadful wrong which the man who drinks does himself, and the tempting to evil which the man commits who puts the bottle to his neighbor's lips? In other words the unrighteous violation of the law of this great fellowship? What is the cause of poverty, which is an unnecessary evil, the failure of the world to feed itself and clothe itself and shelter itself? Is it not idleness or intemperance or extravagance or irreligion in some form, either on the part of him who suffers, or somebody else who fails to fulfil his duty according to the law of Christ? And would not the remedy of the gospel effect a permanent reformation?

All the epidemics that break out every little while between capital and labor, the quarreling between the tree and its fruit, for capital is in every case the fruit of labor, would find ready solution by bringing both master and workmen under the gospel of Christ. The teachings of infidelity will not do it, nor political economy, nor organizations and trades unions, nor strikes and boycotts. We must rise to a higher estimate of man than any of these remedies involve. The whole difficulty lies in a low value placed on man.

"There was an ape in the days that were earlier,
Centuries passed and his hair became curlier;
Centuries more gave a thumb to his wrist—
Then he was a man and a Positivist."

That is the man of science. Political economy deals with him as representing so much work and so much capital. Trades unions estimate him as a fellow in certain common labors and interests. Let him be regarded as a partner in a divine organization, where the employer sees Christ in his workmen, and the workman sees a brother in his employer; and as Boaz said to his reapers the employer shall say: "The Lord be with you," and the workmen shall answer: "The Lord bless thee." Christ is not only the reconciler between God and man but between man and man as well.

Dr. R. F. Horton, one of the leaders of English congregationalism, thinks that if Columbus discovered the American continent, John Calvin created the American nation. According to Dr. Horton there are four architectonic names of western civilization: Cæsar, Augustine, Pope Gregory VII and John Calvin, who liberated the idea of the church from Cæsardom. Dr. Horton says truly that the worst side of Calvin seems to have made the strongest impression. The man whose historical knowledge is slight stumbles at the theology which claims Calvin as its father and knows nothing of the great genius that made nations. But if Calvin should have much credit for our nationality, the time will come when another man, who revolted from his early Presbyterian training, will stand out as another architectonic character — Alexander Campbell — a unifier of American religious life.

Questions and Answers.

Q. Is it permissible in church trials in the Christian church, to allow witnesses outside of the church to testify as to the innocence or guilt of a member against whom charges have been preferred, when such charges can only be substantiated by witnesses outside the church?—X.

A. If the purpose of the trial be to ascertain truth (as we suppose it is), then it would be permissible to receive the testimony of the witnesses referred to, if they be of such character as to give value to their testimony.

Q. 1. What relation does a minister sustain to the official board of the congregation he serves?

2. Is he a member of the official board with privileges equal or superior to the members of such board elected by the congregation?

3. Is it the general practice and is it scriptural for official boards of congregations numbering two hundred to four hundred members, to meet for transaction of general business of the church as one body comprising elders, deacons and deaconesses, or two distinct bodies or boards, one of elders and one of deacons and deaconesses?—INQUIRER.

A. 1. The minister ought to sustain the same relative position to the congregation that a business manager or superintendent of an enterprise sustains toward that enterprise. He ought to have the direction of the work, subject to the advice of his board of officers.

2. A settled minister becomes a member of the congregation, and ought, by virtue of his office, to be a member of the board of officers, with the same rights and privileges accorded to other members. Being called to the work by the congregation, he derives his authority from the same source as other members.

3. The brethren do not all agree on this question, but it seems to us that when the general work and interests of the church are to be considered, all officers ought to meet as one body. In the apostolic times there was evidently a division of the detail work, and when this is to be considered it might be sufficient for that portion of the officers having direct charge of that kind of work to meet for its consideration, as divisions or committees of the general body. In general, we believe there should be but one body directing the affairs of the church, because temporal and spiritual affairs are and ought to be closely blended.

Notes and Comments.

"The Advance" very truly remarks that when it comes to Christ's view of gifts to good causes he made more of the widow's mites than of the millions of rich men.

The Secretary of the Navy says that "the trouble with public affairs is simply dishonesty." But William Allen White has been compelled to admit that Governor Folk's Sunday "lid" is iron-clad, bessemer-steel, copper-riveted. Let the people choose honest men, and then help them to remain honest by backing them up when they do their duty.

The croaker who is unable to see that the world does move will soon be out of a job, since the Catholic Temperance Union has grown large enough at Wilkesbarre, Pa., to call out a parade of ten thousand uniformed Catholic abstainers. This growth of the right sort among Catholics we hail with delight.

Dr. Alexander McLaren, one of the greatest of preachers, in his presidential address to the Pan-Baptist Congress, developed his thought from the two phrases, "In the name of Christ," "By the power of Christ"—the relation of the living Christ; the relation of the indwelling Christ. All, he declared, would be wrong, however orthodox, earnest, eloquent, learned, up-to-date, wise in methods our churches are, if these things fail. "We are coming to a time," he declared, "when in the evolution of Christian doctrine and in reference to the experience of the Christian life, there will be far more prominence given to the indwelling Spirit of life and holiness and power than ever there has been. If once we have learned where our strength is we shall never be so foolish as to go forth in our own strength. How long would it take to pick the ore out of the matrix with hammer and chisel? But pitch it into the blast furnace, and by night you will be able to draw out the pure stream, molten, radiant, flashing."

Real prayer meetings—that is the crying need of the hour, thinks G. Campbell Morgan. In many ways this English preacher moves very close to the lines of the Disciples of Christ. In an interview at Northfield he has just given utterance to the following:

"I think the first thing for the church to do is to restore its forces to their true function, to get rid of wasting its energy on things which do not constitute its mission. I feel that tremendously. The real life of the church has been sapped by fungus growths of all sorts of things that don't belong to the church. The first thing for her to do is to realize that her work in the world is the Lord's work, which was seeking and saving the lost. Not merely the seeking of them, but the saving of them, the teaching and training of them in the spiritual life. What the world wants is saints who are living as saints, and the church has got to clean up its own borders; then she must get into line with a minister who will lead her in evangelistic work for God.

"It is not altogether the fault of the ministry that our churches have no accessions. The church is not only a conservative club, but it is an aggressive force. I feel everybody ought to be doing something, finding their own sphere and filling it."

It is not often that the subject of prayer comes up in scientific meetings, but something of a sensation has just been created by the remarks of Dr. Theodore Hyslop, a brain specialist, in the meeting of the British Medical Association. Discussing causes of insanity, Dr. Hyslop combated the idea that religious emotion leads to mental troubles or aggravates them. Frequently we read in the newspapers of people whose vagaries are attributed to religious belief. Quite the contrary, according to Dr. Hyslop. "As an alienist," he said, "and one who knows the sufferings of the human mind, I would state that of all the hygienic measures to counteract disturbed sleep, depression of spirits and the miserable sequels of a distressed mind, I would undoubtedly give the first place to the simple habit of prayer. Let there be a habit of nightly communion, not as a mendicant, nor repeater of words more adapted to the tongue of a sage, but as a humble individual who submerges or asserts his individuality as an integral part of a greater whole. Such a habit does more to clean the spirit and strengthen the soul to overcome mere incidental emotionalism than any other therapeutic agent known to me."

Governor Mickey, of Nebraska, has issued a declaration that men who use intoxicating drinks or profane language are not fit to serve the state. Let Ohio now elect Mr. Pattison, for we believe it needs him, though he may be a Democrat, just as we believed Mr. Roosevelt was needed in the Presidency, and Mr. Folk as governor of Missouri. We want men who are fit to serve the state and who will consider the best interests of the masses of the people.

A great deal has been said privately and in the public prints lately upon the subject of the Sunday "lid," the reference, for the most part, being to the closing of saloons on Sunday. But the Sunday question is a much broader one than a question of drinking. In England there is noticed the same growing slackness as to the righteous observance of the Lord's day as here, and church dignitaries have begun to speak out.

In our land the Roman Catholic bishop of Syracuse, N. Y., has just been taking his parishioners to task and announced that he would withhold the honors of Christian burial from such as should die as the results of accidents incurred while violating the Lord's day. He says:

"Many who call themselves Christians, and some who call themselves Catholics, start out on Saturday nights and Sunday mornings to spend the Sunday at some pleasure resort, places of very questionable amusements, such as dancing, midways, and drinking places. All these forget the observance of the third commandment, "Keep holy the Sabbath day." While the Sabbath is made for man, man is made for God. Hence the first duty on the Sabbath is to give glory to God according to prescribed forms of divine service, then sanctified rest and innocent recreation."

An endorsement of this deliverance was received from Hon. Andrew D. White, fomer president of Cornell University, and ambassador to Germany. Dr. White says:

"Although I was brought up under Puritan ideas as regards Sunday, and they have had considerable effect upon me, they have been so far modified by observation and reflection, that I am quite willing that the afternoon of Sunday, after the earlier religious services are over, shall be given to reasonable rest and recreation, beyond, indeed, what I formerly thought wise. But the extremes to which our communities have gone of late in appointing every sort of game and amusement through the morning hours, and of making Sunday resorts less and less decent, are such as to create just alarm among all thinking citizens."

Editor's Easy Chair.

Our Christian-Evangelist party arrived at Portland in sections, but we soon got together at one or two of the hotels. Of course the Lewis and Clark Exposition was one of the chief attractions at Portland, but it is by no means the only one. The exposition looks small to anyone who saw the Louisiana Purchase Exposition at St. Louis, but the grounds are beautifully laid out and the buildings and exhibits are well worth seeing. We were specially interested in the agricultural and forestry exhibits. It was a surprise to learn that one-sixth of all the standing timber in the United States is in Oregon. The fruit and vegetable exhibits were something wonderful to easterners. Altogether it is a worthy celebration of a great achievement in our national development. Being a sort of vest-pocket edition of the World's Fair at St. Louis, it is easier to see and is reported to be paying its way. Thousands of people are making it the occasion of visiting the coast, and most of these visitors take in the whole coast from Los Angeles to Seattle. Our convention and others helped to swell this western current of travel, which will no doubt inure to the benefit of the coast states. Portland itself is an interesting object to the visitor from the east. A ride on the electric car over Portland Heights gives one a fine view of the city, which lies spread out in the valley below through which the Willamette river flows, dividing the city in twain and forming a junction with the Columbia, twelve miles below the city, and constituting a highway for the ships that pass up its majestic current into the gates of the city.

Arriving in Portland Friday morning, the first day was devoted to seeing the exposition, and on Saturday most of our party took a trip up the Columbia river, in a steamer, as far as the Cascades, going through the locks, and return. It was a delightful excursion, up a noble, historic stream, and amid scenery as fine as that along the Rhine. The majestic mountain peaks, the deep, dark canons, the waterfalls, rushing down the mountain sides, and the rapids in the river, formed a panorama of unceasing interest. The process of passing through the locks was a new one to most of us, and was watched with interest. As our steamer was lifted to higher levels, or gently lowered to lower levels, in order to pass up and down through these locks, the thought was probably suggested to others than the "Easy Chair," that the secret of overcoming obstacles in our way through life, is to be lifted or lowered, as the case may be, by a power not ourselves, but of whose use we may avail ourselves, if we will. This excursion was the last the "Easy Chair" was permitted to enjoy with the members of our party. Returning to Portland in the evening, most of those of the Christian-Evangesist Special who had hung together till now, went on at night to Seattle, and thence by the N. P. Railway and Burlington to their eastern homes. Others left by the Oregon Short Line & U. P.; but we tarried in Portland over Lord's day, preaching in the morning for Bro. E. S. Muckley, at the First Christian church, to what seemed an adjourned meeting of the great convention. There were perhaps a dozen preachers in the great audience. In the afternoon there was a large "echo" meeting addressed by many visiting ministers and some of the local pastors, and participated in by all our churches in the city. There was but one sentiment: The San Francisco Convention was great, and well worth while.

Our next stop was at Tacoma on the Sound. Besides visiting relatives here, a subordinate object was to capture a large silver salmon in the Sound. With the aid of our nephew, William Harvey Darland, who is an expert at such matters, and who furnished the tackle and rowed the boat for us, this ambition was realized. About sundown, as we were rounding Point Defiance, we felt the tug which we knew meant business for the next few minutes. After a gallant fight the splendid fish was brought alongside the boat, and on feeling the point of the gaff he made such resistance that the displacement of the salt water wet his captor thoroughly. But what mattered that, when the great, silver-sided salmon lay in the boat—our first trophy of that species! In the absence of scales we estimated him at eight or ten pounds, and a silver beauty he was. And some of the steaks from him made good eating the next morning. We failed to meet Bro. W. A. Moore, the new pastor here, from Missouri, but heard good report of his work. Brother Cowden's home is here, also, but he and wife were in Alaska, visiting their sons. Here we met John and Jesse Turner, with their wives, besides Mrs. Darland and family, all formerly of southwestern Missouri. The city is beautiful for situation, sitting on the terraced hills overlooking the Sound, it is just now experiencing a period of growth, and development. The ride on the little steamer up the Sound to Seattle is a delightful experience. On the boat we encountered two delayed members of our party—J. Murray Taylor and wife, of Washington, D. C., who were making their way east by easy stages.

As we neared the landing at Seattle we took a snapshot of the New York of the Pacific as it lay spread out over the hills and in the valleys, smiling in the light of the afternoon sun as if half conscious of its great destiny. There were two familiar faces at the landing to greet us—H. O. Shuey, the banker, and his brother, T. J. Shuey, evangelist and pastor, located at Abingdon, Ill., who has been visiting his brother and preaching some in Seattle. The Editor's youngest brother and several of his sons reside here, and with them our brief stay was spent. We had a call one evening from Bro. B. H. Lingenfelter and wife who are now charged with the care of the mission church in Fremont, a part of the city of Seattle. For many years pastor of the First church, Brother Lingenfelter is specially qualified to work in this growing city. There is a new mission at Green Lake also, which it is believed can be built into a church. Bro. L. A. Chapman has been called to the pastorate of the First church and begins his work with the first Lord's day in September. The city has made rapid growth since our visit here three years ago. In its location and its surroundings Nature has decreed that Seattle is to be one of the great cities of the continent, stretching toward Tacoma on the south and Bellingham on the north, and vying with San Francisco as a port of entry for the commerce of the Pacific. This makes it a most strategic point for vigorous home mission work.

Leaving our friends at Seattle—the city of lakes and hills—on Thursday at 4 p. m., with Mount Rainier lifting its shining head in the south, we were soon crossing the Cascade Range, and plunging through the two mile tunnel at the summit. Morning found us at Spokane, a beautiful city of apparently 75,000 population. We greatly desired to see the Allens and other friends here, but engagements ahead forbade our stopping. On through Idaho, with its mountain peaks, quiet valleys, clear mountain streams and crystal lakes into Montana our train sped on, and is speeding still, toward Billings, where we are scheduled to spend the Lord's day in a church dedication service. Others on our car are bound for the Yellowstone Park, a visit to which we would much enjoy, but that pleasure must be postponed until some future trip. After the dedication at Billings we have planned for a short stop at Sheridan, Wyoming, and thence by way of Omaha, Lincoln and Chicago to Pentwater, Mich., where we hope to spend a few quiet days before returning to St. Louis. What an empire is this state of Montana we are now passing through! Brother Cowden tells of a minister in the east writing for work in Montana, in order that he might "sniff the breezes of the Pacific"—a feat, Brother C. remarked, that would have required a nose 1,200 miles long! So little do the people east appreciate the distances across these imperial states. But here we close to send these paragraphs forward, for they must travel on Sunday to reach St. Louis in time for next week's issue.

The Purpose of God as Revealed in the New Testament*

By E. W. ALLEN

The New Testament answers its highest intention only as it is approached with sincere desire to discover the purpose of God in human life, and the laws which make that purpose possible of realization. The truth the New Testament reveals is the purpose of God for man. Plans for others are impracticable of fulfillment unless revealed to them. This is both the philosophy and the apologetic of revelation. That God's purpose may be known by every man, and is herein fully revealed, is the distinct claim of the book.

No one can read the record of Jesus' ministry without perceiving clearly his idea for the world. It is summed up in that phrase which occurs more than one hundred times in the synoptics, "the kingdom of heaven," or "the kingdom of God."

The phrase has different meanings, as it is used for a present and a future state, and describes both an inward and an outward condition. But Jesus viewed the world from above. He saw in it the movement of the life of God on the souls of men. Wherever this Spirit of God finds welcome in a human life, there the kingdom of God has come.

In the purpose of God the kingdom is already existent, and when his will is done on earth, then his kingdom, which is now spiritual and interior, will be as visible and as controlling as it is in heaven.
visible and as controlling as it is in heaven.
Christ's command to his disciples to go and disciple all nations, and his declaration that his gospel should be preached everywhere, involves the thought of a universal kingdom.

In the Acts of Apostles we have the purpose of God not only succinctly stated, but what I believe to be more significant still as to the knowledge of that purpose, the movements it makes, and the stages and direction of its acceptance.

The day of pentecost was the opening door to a world-wide extension of the kingdom of God. The presence of the "foreigners from every nation" was the pledge of its complete sometime dominion. In his address to the Jews in Antioch of Pisidia Paul claimed to be working under the commission of God. James, in the conference at Jerusalem, interpreted the wonderful progress of the Gospel's acceptance as in accord with the predicted purpose of God.

While Paul was circumscribed in his activities at the end of his career, he saw no limit to the world plan of God, and with confident asurance begotten of many triumphs, he closes the record of the apostolic age, "Be it known unto you, that this salvation of God is sent unto the heathen, and they will hear it."

The apostolic period, detailed in the Acts, is not only a part of the history of the communication of truth by God; it is both a history and a prophecy of the apprehension of the truth by man. If the Lord himself sensibly interfere to send Peter to Cæsarea, and to call Paul to bear his name among heathen and kings, then not only those steps, but the results of them, are visibly included in the purpose of God and marked with the seal of heaven. The church rightly interpreted these events and glorified God, saying, "Then to the heathen also hath God granted repentance unto life." They interperted them as God's dealings with them to "open the door of faith unto the heathen." Through all the narratives of these stirring times the historian makes his way straight in one direction, as a man guided by that instinct of selection which belongs to the ruling presence of a definite purpose. By an undeviating course we follow the development of the purpose of God in its relations, first to the Jewish system out of which it emerges, and then to the great world to which it opens itself. The Lord by special intervention raises up the persons, guides the events, and certifies the issues with his own signature and seal. But when the greatest step of all is to be taken in the onward course of God's purpose how striking is the authentication! Paul's conversion, training, commission, direction, the Son of God undertakes himself. This evangel of God through Paul receives a development so extensive and so distinct that it seemed almost another gospel to many who witnessed it.

E. W. Allen, Ft. Wayne, Ind.

In the Acts of Apostles we have the destiny of this purpose implied; in the epistles its doctrinal acceptance. Great principles are wrought out and settled in men's minds by consultation, reasoning, controversy; by events which compel their more distinct assertion, and by action of opposing principles firmly resisted. So this purpose of God fought its way through narrow provincialism and race prejudice and religious bigotry and human selfishness to fullness of expression.

The parables and sayings of Christ illustrate the kingdom of God as having its own life and end, its own history and destiny. In the Acts of Apostles its visible shape appears. Its realization of the purpose of God is the thought which runs through the epistles.

"And I, John, saw the holy city, new Jerusalem." In the appearance of the city the revealed course of redemption culminates and the ultimate purpose of God is fuly disclosed. The kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

The world-wide purpose of God finds expression in Christ. This promise of universalism is without parallel in history. The most conservative interpretation of the great commission of Christ is in effect this—"The world is mine, and this Gospel, for which I am crucified, is the means by which men and nations shall be brought into subjection to the universal kingdom of truth and righteousness of which I am the divine, foreordained and eternally predestinated King."

So declared Peter, and thus agrees the testimony of Paul and John, the latter completing the canon and giving the epitome of apostolic teaching in these words: "We have beheld and bare witness that the Father hath sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world."

This redemption is real, and it has in the life of humanity its realization. He redeemed the world by becoming himself the perfect Redeemer, attaining and fulfilling the perfect righteousness. He redeemed the world by becoming one with humanity in the life of the world.

Here is the summary of the New Testament teaching: "Of him [God] are ye in Christ Jesus." We have condemned the doctrine of universalism for the future, without anxious thought for the New Testament universalism of to-day. Evolution as a philosophy may not be tenable in accounting for creation, but the evolution of man and not indviduals is the divne purpose and program. The doctrine of the New Testament is not so much eschatological as evangelical. The close of each gospel confirms this. The reproof of the angel at the ascension should be felt by every generation since—"Why stand ye looking up into heaven?" God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. The universal organization of the human race on earth into one social, spiritual kingdom in Christ, has been the grand, far-off event toward which the whole creation and the whole process of history moves.

It is God's purpose that men should be partners with him in the salvation of the world. Every man who receives Christ becomes a trustee for other men to give Christ to them. I think many of us feel that the piety of our day enclosed itself too much within the limits of individual life. That I should be pardoned, saved, sanctified, are worthy desires for me. But I am a member of the kingdom of God, a citizen of the city of God. There ought surely to be a consciousness within me corresponding to that position. There ought to be affections which will associate me in spirit with that larger history in which my own is included, and which will make me strive that the kingdom of Christ should come, and the city of God be manifested.

* An address, condensed, delivered before the Foreign Christian Missionary Society at the San Francisco Convention.

"We are the means to some majestic end,
Through us must come the universal good,
In us the forces of the Maker blend,
Upon us depends the larger brotherhood;
With us mankind must journey to the heights.
Let us go forth and set the world to rights."

Think you God's purpose shall fail of accomplishment? Look at the capital he has invested in it, I reply. He has planned it and invested in it all of his love and grace. Choosing nations and individuals, in the end he spared not his own Son. He sent forth the Holy Spirit to be the guiding and anointing power in carrying it to fulfillment. He has at length employed his church to crown it with success.

The living God is ordering his world, and in this attempt to evangelize the world, we are not setting out on any mad human enterprise, but we are simply "feeding our life into the great sweep of the orderly purpose of God." When the people of a nation come to regard the elements of wealth, literature, art, or even religion, as ends to be enjoyed, rather than as means to make man, they have missed the purpose of God. When a church accepts a laissez-faire philosophy of existence, and with self-complacency asserts that it accepts no responsibility for the condition of its neighborhood or the world, it has missed the purpose of God. That was the difference between the church of Antioch and the church of Laodicea. That is the difference between the man who lives for his God and his race, and the man who pours himself out upon his own ease and pleasure.

This world is to be saved. This is God's purpose. This purpose is revealed in Christ. This world must be saved by us.

Christianity is the resplendent history of a suffering, crucified and risen Christ; of patient love victorious over passionate iniquity; a glowing enthusiasm, kindled and fed by that victorious love. Wherever this purpose of God is proclaimed as a fact to be realized, it awakens responses from human hearts. Christ still draws all men unto him wherever he is lifted up. The people who really believe that the world Deliverer has come into the world, that he has attested his love by dying, that he has demonstrated his power by rising from the dead, that he imparts his life to his disciples, that strong in his strength they are able to vanquish sorrow, to flood the sullen tomb with celestial light, to break the chains of every form of slavery and set all oppressed free, to illuminate the dark places of the earth and give education to the ignorant, to stem and turn back corruption from government, deceit from society, selfishness from commerce, to beat the swords into plow shares and the spears into pruning hooks, and that the evidence of this power and the guarantee of this hope are in a risen and victorious Lord, whose resurrection and living presence are attested by nearly 19 centuries of history—the people and the ministry that believe these facts and possess this enthusiasm, and go forth in this spirit, and preach this Gospel of all conquering faith and hope and love, are invincible.

Missing Links[*]

By Walter S. Goode

Science has long sought the "missing link." It remained for this age of discovery to reveal it. In John 5 we have its picture sketched. A multitude of sick, blind, lame and withered, all waiting, waiting with anxious, hoping, fearing hearts for the coming of the angel and the healing they so need.

Here lies a helpless one, a living death. For thirty and eight years has he borne his infirmity. He longs with an unutterable longing to be whole, to walk, to leap, to live, but always disappointment is his lot. Suddenly there bends over him a face full of a great compassion, and a voice, gentle and tender as a mother's, speaks, "Wouldst thou be made whole?" Back comes the answer, bitter, hopeless words from a bitter, hopeless heart, "Lord, there is no man to bear me to the pool of healing—no man, Lord, no man." This is the missing link.

Over a world of men helpless in sin, that face of compassion is bending to-day. "Wouldst thou be made whole?" Back comes the answer from out their helpless night, "Lord, there is no man to bring us the healing that can make us whole."

That church, so called a church of Christ, that man or woman, so called a follower of Christ, who neither goes nor gives to bear Christ's healing word to men, is a missing link—a missing link in the golden chain of sacrificial love the Master welds to bind the world to God.

Long ago it was a custom in the churches when the communion emblems had been passed, for one to stand and ask, "Has any one been missed?" And then if hand were raised, or voice cried out, "I have been missed," with quick and eager steps, as to one in dire need, the bread and wine were borne.

To-day if our Lord were to ask that question of earth's millions, how many would cry out, "We have been missed"?

From the green isles of the sea voices in volumes like the ocean's roar would cry, "We have been missed." From the jungles of Africa, her dark skinned sons and daughters, a babel of tongues, voices innumerable cry, "We have been missed." From India's parched plains, from Ganges' fertile valley they wail, "We have been missed." From Tibet's high walled fastnesses, from China's teeming fields, from Yangtse and Hoangho one-third of all the race cries out, "We have been missed."

W. S. Goode, Youngstown, Ohio.

As infants crying in the night,
As infants crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry.

And why have these been missed? Because of missing links; because of lack of loyalty to Christ; because of lack of love for God and men and "Life is just our chance o' learning love."

Heaven's resounding anthem is, "Christ for the world"; earth's answering echo when in tune must be, "The world for Christ."

Three essential factors are to be considered in making the world Christ's: The message, messengers, money.

The message is God's part. At infinite cost he hath prepared it for us and committed it to us. The messengers and money are our part and we "are slow and late." "Christ alone can save the world." To doubt would be disloyalty. "But Christ can not save the world alone." To acknowledge this is to face our task. Truly spake the old violin maker, "God can not make Antonio's violins without Antonio."

Since Christ gave his last command on Olivet, sixty generations have lived, sinned, suffered and died. Sixty generations—between twenty and thirty thousand millions of souls—and but a small percentage knew of him. Well may the church echo Cecil Rhodes' sad cry, "So much to do, so little done."

But you may say, "Is not the church of to-day doing a great work?" Assuredly—but nothing like great enough. Last year she gave to foreign missions $19,000,000, maintaining 17,227 missionaries. Yet not one-third of the church membership is praying or paying for missions. A postage stamp a week from every church member in the United States alone would yield $20,000,000 a year. If one-fourth of the Protestants of Europe and America gave one cent a day the result would be $100,000,000 a year. Surely this is no time for boasting.

In 1890 the property of the Protestant church members in the United States was estimated at $13,000,000,000. Of that the church gave 1-32 of 1 per cent, or $1 out of $3,289, for foreign work.

In 1898, Robert E. Speer estimated the property of Protestants in America at $20,000,000,000, and that 1-50 of what the church was adding every year, with what was already being given, would be sufficient to speedily evangelize the world. To-day 1-100 part of the annual income of the professed followers of Christ in Protestant lands would yield $200,000,000.

A quarter of a century ago Dr. Strong wrote: "There is money enough in the hands of church members to sow every acre of the earth with the seed of truth." God has intrusted to his children power enough to give the Gospel to every creature, but it is being misapplied. Indeed, the world would have been evangelized long ago if churches had perceived the relation of money to the kingdom, and had accepted their stewardship." These words are even more terribly true to-day.

So much for the Christian world at large. Now, what of our own brotherhood? We claim to have the earmarks of apostolicity. Every one of our 1,250,000 members is old enough to know and to choose. This year our cry was "A quarter of a million dollars for foreign missions." A million and a quarter Disciples—a quarter of a million dollars. That is 20 cents apiece. We reached it. We thank God, and take courage. How ought we to feel about it? Back in Ohio, when a man feels low down, trifling and mean, he says he feels like thirty cents. Perhaps eye hath not seen, nor ear hath not heard just how a man feels when he feels like twenty cents. But I prophesy the day will come when we shall all feel like bright, new dollars, and then "In God we trust" shall be written large on our expanding missionary effort.

A few years ago one Episcopalian church in New York City gave $280,000 for missions—$100,000 more than our whole brotherhood gave that year, and $30,000 more than we have given this.

Not long ago Old South Congregational Church, of Boston, took an offering for foreign missions of over $9,000. That year that one congregation gave more than all our churches, as churches, in the whole state of Ohio, more than all in Kentucky, twice as much as those in Missouri, three times as much as those in Iowa.

Brethren, if we can't have both, I'd rather see a man right on missions than on "faith, repentance and baptism." If that be heresy, make the most of it. But I have read that you, brethren of California, are not afraid of a little heresy; that you are on heresy as Mrs. Partington was on total hereditary depravity—"It's a good doctrine if it's well lived up to."

John Randolph used to say he let no man abuse Virginia but himself. Just so do I feel about our brotherhood. We're not yet an apostolic church, for apostolic means missionary. Last year it took nearly three thousand of us to send out and maintain one missionary. That's not apostolic. And when the money is raised and ready it takes long search to find in all our hosts one ready to go. That's not apostolic.

The Moravians send out and support one missionary to every fifty-eight church members. At that rate we should have working abroad 21,534 missionaries, instead of the 438 in our last report. The Moravians are more apostolic than we. Their every member expects to go or send.

Think of our hundreds of churches that help not! Think of the tens of thousands of our people who ignore the Lord's last command, having no part nor lot in this divinest work of all. Should not these be a burden on mind and heart, a petition in our daily prayer?

If Christ were to appear among our churches, he would approve the plea we make. He would say "Well done" to much of our teaching of the Word. And as he witnessed our gathering together on his day to break the loaf, and in our simple worship saw men planted in the likeness of his death, perhaps with joy he would say: "'T is like those early days so long ago." But when his glance took in our strength and wealth, his word to us would be: "One thing thou lackest. Go, sell, give. These hungry, feed them with the bread of life; these blind, open their eyes; these naked, clothe them with robes of righteousness; these sick and in prison, O, church of mine, visit them with the mesage of liberty and life! So shall ye be my disciples, for if ye do it to the least of these, my brethren, ye do it unto me."

To save the world, present efforts are inadequate and unworthy. Eight hundred million souls, your brothers and your sisters, sit in darkness. They sin without Christ to forgive. They sorrow without Christ to soothe. They die without Christ to save. They die one every second, sixty-six every minute, 4,000 every hour, 95,890 every day.

Next there is need of more abundant giving to save the church from bitter years of wandering and shame, from judgment at the hands of Christ her head. This is her time of testing. Her supreme mission is to save the world. The world is open to her message. Her equipment is complete. She lacks not one thing but the spirit of willingness.

As if in answer to that question Bishop Thoburn says God in this day would sweep away his church from earth if she were to falter and fail in the missionary enterprise. She dare not falter. She must not fail!

The bride of Christ can not be untrue to him. The eyes of heaven and earth are fixed upon her. The conflict between Christianity and world-wide heathenism is on. Conscious of her high calling, she blanches not, but flies her battle signal—"The destiny of earth's millions depends upon this action. Let every man do his utmost!" In answer there must be such a pouring out of men and money as that the world shall wonder and adore.

Finally, there is need of more abundant giving. Surely in this world of men we are saved only as we help save some one else. If, in this hour of crisis for the church—if, in this hour of danger for the world, our ears hear not, our hearts feel not, our hands help not—then we are lost.

There is no place in the house of many mansions for missing links. All there are Living Links—those who in this world have stretched forth hands to save.

The Prayer of Faith.

To him who rules o'er Israel,
We lift our hearts in prayer.
Trusting his sacred promises,
We cast on him our care.
We pray in faith, and, asking, yearn
Our heart's desire to see.
Yet faith means more, in scope and pow'r,
Than mere expectancy.
God does not answer every prayer,
Yet not a prayer is vain,
And faith's petitions can not fail,
Nor e'er unmarked remain.
We come to God in loving trust
That disappointment braves—
Not with a faith that thinks to get
Each boon it asks and craves;
But with a faith unswerving, firm,
Which knows that God above
Heeds each request, knows ev'ry need,
And meets them all with love.
For he who never falls asleep
Hears every lisping cry.
He sympathizes with our griefs;
His love is ever nigh.
Faith knows that he is kind and just,
That what he wills is best.
It lifts its prayers, content to ask,
And let God do the rest.

NO DIFFERENCE

Old People Just as Happy as Young.

Age cannot wither nor custom stale the infinite variety of life.

When the right food makes one new each day there seems as much simple happiness when one is old as when young, but bounding health is the requisite and right food produces that.

A happy woman of 77 tells her experience:

"For three years," she says, "I was greatly troubled with a nervous affection of the stomach, which at last brought me to such a condition that I could neither eat nor sleep with any sort of comfort. I grew very despondent and felt that my hold on life was very uncertain. It was difficult for me to find food that I could digest. My doctor kept me on a diet of rice for a long time, but it did not seem to give me any strength.

"I am glad that at last I decided to try Grape-Nuts food, for it has done a wonderful work for me. Before I had used up the first package I began to take a new interest in life, and I rapidly increased in health and strength. My stomach has regained its normal tone, and in the two years that Grape-Nuts has been my only food, I have not had a sick day. I am 77 years old and Grape-Nuts has restored to me the pleasure of living. I am sorry I did not begin sooner to use it. I cannot praise it too highly." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

A 10 days' trial is sufficient.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

This will have a taste of the sea. The breath of the ocean's brine is good for a man. Here in little Delaware the joys of the great deep are realized to the uttermost. The red men long ago loved this region. The Delawares, that noble branch of the great Algonquin family, called by Fennimore Cooper the "Lenno-Lenape," had their haunts along this coast. How do we know? Their footprints are still here. The Delaware river itself was the Makeriskitou, formed by the Oquago and the Popactou, and we still have the remains of their language in the Choptauk and Nanticoke, in Pokomoke and Chincoteaque and Appoquinnimink. Then came along the Swedes and the Finns in 1637 and made New Sweden, and then the English, who conquer or absorb everything, and we have "Penn's Lower Counties," New Castle, Sussex, and Kent, divided into "hundreds," and governed by Penn till 1703, when they seceded, and in 1776 declared themselves free and independent and took the motto, "Liberty and Independence." One word was not sufficient. It was like the sign in the Washington street cars, declaring: "It is not lawful to expectorate or spit on any street car." So this little commonwealth, which has only 2,120 square miles and about 300,000 souls, and pays its governor only $1,333 salary, claims both liberty and independence. And it puts on all the necessary airs. When we opened our auditorium at the beach we invited the governor to make an address, and he wrote under the great seal of the state with its ship and its shield, on which are the cow, the sheaf and the ear of corn, held up between the farmer with his hoe and the revolutionary soldier with his gun: "Owing to our throat trouble it is impossible for us to make promises for outdoor addresses unless they are to be very short. We hope to get through another winter in good shape, and that our throat may then be strong enough to accommodate the wishes of our many friends." This, however, is not quite as rich a use of the editorial "We" as I noted in one of our religious papers. The editor wrote: "We took dinner at a restaurant, but came around to the Planters' Hotel to pick our teeth and answer our correspondence. More people do this than you think, but won't acknowledge it." "Now is the time to subscribe."

Here is the sand. This tiny commonwealth has grains enough and to spare and it is white and clean and beautiful. Great dunes, graceful and picturesque, line the shore, running back sometimes a hundred yards or more, and between them waves and eddies and tons of soft and snowy sand. "First in a child's outfit," somebody says, "should be a sand heap. Almost the first thing that human beings want to do after they learn to eat is to dig. A cart load of sand is one of the cheapest and most satisfying playthings in the world. It is worth a houseful of dolls and painted monkeys on sticks. Watch Johnny and Nellie at their work and you will wish most heartily that you could find the same novelty and enthusiasm in your employments. That sand pile is a very cosmos. Mountains are builded from it with the use of tin shovels and beach pails; there are caves in the cool depths near the foot of those Himalayas—caves big enough for the cat to turn round in; Johnny makes a fort on his side, and Nelly makes a garden on hers. Johnny's fort mounts murderous clothespins and the garden has trees and fountains made of burned matches, wisps of paper, and broom straws, while china dolls walk abroad there to take the air. 'What trifling!' did you say? Not so. This is one of the most serious affairs in life. Don't you see in this play the little ones are learning?" Yes, as England's battles are fought out at Eton, who shall say that temples and state houses are not planned and problems of society and government and war and education solved, and masterpieces in art and in poetry outlined in these sand heaps? Jimmie had heard a great deal of the Prince of Wales, and though his ideas on the subject were somewhat vague, he was greatly interested. Visiting for the first time the seashore, he walked along the beach, examined it closely and then turned to his nurse with the question: "Where are they?" "What?" asked his wondering companion. "The prints of whales," replied Johnny. A paradise for the little ones is at Bethany, if they love the sand, and grown people will find it a joy forever. Yesterday I walked seven miles along the sea front over its soft, tempting reaches, and stretched myself on the top of one of the dunes amid the sea grass, and watched the clouds and listened to the boom of the surges, and thought I got a glimpse of the city that hath foundations and heard the near by harping of the harpers with their harps; and as I sauntered homeward and inscribed on the beach a record of my adventures there came to memory those lines of Hannah Gould:

Alone I walked the ocean strand;
A pearly shell was in my hand;
I stopped and wrote upon the sand
  My name—the year—the day.
As onward from the spot I passed,
One lingering look behind I cast;
A wave came rolling high and fast,
  And washed my lines away.

And so, methought, 'twill shortly be
With every mark on earth from me:
A wave of dark oblivion's sea
  Will sweep across the place
Where I have trod the sandy shore
Of time, and been, to be no more,
Of me—my day—the name I bore,
  To leave nor track nor trace.

And yet, with him who counts the sands,
And holds the waters in his hands,
I know a lasting record stands,
  Inscribed against my name,
Of all this mortal part has wrought;
Of all this thinking soul has thought,
And from these fleeting moments caught
  For glory or for shame.

The shells are also a never-ending pleasure to the beacher. Here they are, thousands of them, scattered along the sand, and every wind brings new ones to light, and every wave tosses up strange and beautiful forms from the great depths; and how pure and white and perfect they are, and what a story they tell of the interesting creatures that made them and dwelt in them, and what a song they still sing of the murmuring, sobbing, ever-sounding sea! The pearly hall of the Nautilus is more beautiful than any palace. Pearls which are the effects of disease in certain mollusks are among the costliest ornaments of the wealthy. The golden Cyprea was once the badge of royalty in Hawaii. A single Carinaria has sold for $500. The giant clam, Linnæus tells us, sometimes reaches 498 pounds in weight. "Out with your shells" is equivalent to out with your money where they use the Cyprea moneta, the cowries in Southern Asia and on the coast of Guinea and in parts of our own insular possessions. Ostracism in Athens meant banishment by popular vote of a citizen dangerous to the state. Six thousand votes banished for ten years. These were written on the ostracon or oyster shell, and dropped in an urn. There was no trial, nor opportunity of defense. Aristides the Just was so ostracized. Conchology is one of our pursuits on the beach. We study the Word and the works of God.

OUST THE DEMON

A Tussle with Coffee.

There is something fairly demoniacal in the way coffee sometimes wreaks its fiendish malice on those who use it.

A lady writing from Calif. says:—

"My husband and I, both lovers of coffee, suffered for some time from a very annoying form of nervousness, accompanied by most frightful headaches. In my own case there was eventually developed some sort of affection of the nerves leading from the spine to the head.

"I was unable to hold my head up straight, the tension of the nerves drew it to one side, causing me the most intense pain. We got no relief from medicine, and were puzzled as to what caused the trouble, till a friend suggested that possibly the coffee we drank had something to do with it, and advised that we quit it and try Postum Coffee.

"We followed his advice, and from the day that we began to use Postum we both began to improve, and in a very short time both of us were entirely relieved. The nerves became steady once more, the headaches ceased, the muscles in the back of my neck relaxed, my head straightened up and the dreadful pain that had so punished me while I used the old kind of coffee vanished.

"We have never resumed the use of the old coffee, but relish our Postum every day as well as we did the former beverage. And we are delighted to find that we can give it freely to our children also, something we never dared to do with the old kind of coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum Coffee contains absolutely no drugs of any kind, but relieves the coffee drinker from the old drug poison.

What I Know About Church Discipline

By Amos R. Wells

I have had to help put through several difficult cases of church discipline, and, like everyone else that has had such an experience, I think I know a great deal about it—until the next case. But the next case is always different. While I am in this pleasing state of happiness is a good time to write an article on the matter; and everyone will read the article, because everyone is interested in the subject, and no one hitherto, while possessing the cocksure confidence I now enjoy, has thought to write about it.

One thing I know—just now—is that it is better, when church discipline is plainly appropriate, not to postpone it. Weeds are most easily uprooted when they are little. Stains are most readily washed out when they are fresh.

To be sure, there is the parable of the tares, and the injunction to "let both grow together till the harvest." But if we apply that injunction to church discipline, the parable would forbid it altogether. It is rather a picture of God's world, in which for the present the evil and the good dwell together; but there will come a time of separation. As to the church, however, Ananias and Sapphira were weeded out of it summarily enough, while Paul did not hesitate to give instructions for excommunication from the brotherhood at Corinth. The bride of Christ must be kept pure. The body of Christ must be kept strong.

Another thing I know, and that is the wisdom of the scriptural injunction that two of the brethren should wait upon the culprit, and talk the matter over. When confronted with such a task, we all walk crab. Discussing a man's imperfections behind his back is exhilarating, like punching a striking bag; but telling a man his faults to his face—from this our delicacy shrinks.

Nevertheless, it is the manly way. Even the person "under discipline" must acknowledge this, however mad he gets. "These are fair-minded men," he says when he cools off. "They do not condemn me on hearsay. They investigate. They give me a chance to defend myself." If you can't get two men to talk over the charges with the accused, the church needs training more than the accused needs discipline.

A third thing I know is that church discipline is not like a process of law. It is not necessary to go into court to establish every point. What is essential is that the church should be convinced of the necessity and Christian wisdom of the course that is adopted.

We must be guarded, of course. We must bring no charges in public that we cannot prove; but legal proof is not required if the church is convinced. In the most serious case I have known, the testimony of a physician and of a lawyer were conclusive, so far as the committee was concerned; but neither could be made public, and no court would compel the physician or the lawyer to testify. The committee in charge proceeded therefore on subordinate grounds, being sure that even there the necessity of expulsion could be made clear to the church.

It is like a club, whose members absolutely determine who shall remain in the association, and no member has grounds for legal complaint if he is expelled, provided it is done quietly. All that is absolutely necessary is for a church to be satisfied that the continuance of a person as a member is harmful to the cause of Christ.

In the fourth place, I know that inquiries precedent to church discipline should be kept secret just as far as possible. This is in the interest of the accused, the church, and the community. No rascal but can form a party for his defence as soon as he becomes a defendant. Let the most brutal murderer get into a cell, and he is showered with flowers and tears by maudlin sympathizers. Gossip is as harmful to an investigation of this kind as the footprints of a market-place are to a fox-hunt. It is well for the church officers, at the outset of a case of discipline, to enter into a covenant of strict secrecy, excluding even their wives. Let them not even discuss the matter among themselves outside the committee sessions, as on the street or in the cars. I have known such an investigation to be carried on patiently for months by ten persons, men and women, yet so secretly that the church and town waxed hotly indignant, and thought it "high time the church did something about it!" When the committee were prepared to move, they found the public quite unanimously with them.

And that leads me to name a fifth principle I have discovered, namely, that it is far better for a church in such matters to incur a reputation for weakness than for harshness. The former will be corrected by time, but not the latter. Men pardon what seems undue forbearance far more readily than apparent severity. We must ever place love foremost. We must show the public, as well as the culprit, that we care more to purify the sinner than the church.

Therefore I have learned (my sixth discovery) that the committee in charge should examine only what witnesses are needed, and these as briefly as possible. Outsiders—that is, those not members of the church—should not be brought in at all if it can be helped. Consider just what fact is to be established, and if a single testimony establishes the fact, hear no more, though fifty are ready to testify. Minimize the scandal. Every case of discipline is a peril to a church. There is a way of fighting fire that spreads it.

But the witnesses must be frank, though few. Their testimony must be distinct, and well understood. If the committee possesses a shorthand writer, his services will be most valuable in preserving the exact words of the witnesses. If you are without such an aid, let the most careful writer of the committee set down, as the witness speaks, the points of his testimony, and before he goes read them over to him for his confirmation. The records will be most useful for reference as the case proceeds. Of course, all true Christians, in their goodness of heart, will be reluctant to testify against another. There is need of real self-sacrifice and heroism on the part of everyone connected with a matter of church discipline, witnesses, prosecutors, judges, and all. It is easier to face a cannon than an angry tongue, especially if it is a woman's; and church trials at the best arouse much bitterness. It is thankless work, and everyone—that is not impelled by spite or censoriousness or pride—shrinks from it. Upon all concerned the very highest motives must be brought to bear, for no others are adequate—the desire to please our Master, to rescue an erring brother, and uphold the honor of Christ's Church.

Sometimes the visit of the two delegates, and their frank and loving talk, is all that is needed; the man confesses, promises amendment, and may be given, without further ado, his chance to prove himself sincere in his repentance. But if it is a serious matter, you will probably need to go farther than this, and very likely the next step will be to bring the culprit and the church officers or committee face to face. You may be sure that this will do no good, that he will merely deny everything, brazen it out, bluster, and threaten the committee with the dire terrors of the law. Nevertheless, do it. Give the man every chance. Make it plain to him that you are eager for him to clear himself, if he can; that you are really on his side. Be firm, pay no heed to his brag or threats, show him that the church is not to be bullied; but at the same time make it plain—so plain that he cannot deny it or forget it—that you are his friends.

It may be that, even at this stage, you can wisely put the man under probation; you may say to him, if, for example, he is accused of dishonesty and trickiness in trade, "We will not go further in our investigations or deliberations unless you want us to; we will hold the matter in abeyance; we will wait and see if further complaints come; we will give you a chance to commend yourself to all men by the transparent truthfulness and solid uprightness of your conduct." And then, if he accepts this proposal, the committee should make full use of this opportunity to help the man. They should use it definitely, systematically and hopefully. The strongest church members should be set to aiding him in his endeavors toward a better life. No service is more pleasing to him who came to earth on precisely such an errand.

But if all the conferences are fruitless, and if it comes clearly to the sad necessity for expulsion, then the sad alternative must be accepted with decisive firmness. It will be a decided advantage if those in charge of the case can act as a unit; but if some good cantankerous Christian chance to be a church officer, he will probably break up all prospect of unanimity. Never mind; move serenely along the broad highway of majority votes, and let him splutter. Nothing was ever accomplished by long waiting for unanimity.

Nevertheless, the prosecutors must have a clear understanding among themselves. They must be agreed, or at least a strong majority, on the course to be followed, every precise step of it. Each stage of their dealings with the culprit must have its written record—a copy of the letter sent him by the original two delegates asking for an interview, if one was sent; a copy of the letter sent him by the committee, requesting his appearance before them; his replies to these letters, and all other necessary documents, but none that are not necessary.

In presenting the case to the church the least said, the better, provided enough is said to carry conviction. A full account must be given of the steps taken in dealing with the wrongdoer and of the results reached, but few details of crime or sin, of testimony and inquisition. The body of men that has pursued the inquiry should be so weighty that its judgment will be accepted almost on the mere statement of it. Large reliance should be placed on the common knowledge of the character of the offender. Do not yield to the idle curiosity of those that are eager to unfold the entire shameful story.

The process of excommunication differs widely. There is no need to discuss here such points of procedure. But the sinner should be put out of the church in order that some time, and as soon as possible, he may be got in again. Ours must be a double watchcry in every church trial: Excommunication, in order to purification and reformation—purification of the church, reformation of the sinner. Here also the famous case in Corinth is a model for us: "Sufficient to such a one is this punishment.* * * Ye should forgive him and comfort him, * * * confirm your love toward him." God's people, like God, must be redeemer more gladly than judge. There is no triumph like restoration. "There shall be joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine righteous persons, which need no repentance." And that is the principal thing I know about church discipline.

Boston, Mass.

The National Convention—C. E. Session

The Christian Endeavor session of the International Convention of the Christian churches, as well as the great communion service, was held in Woodward's pavilion, which is best known as the scene of many prize-fights. R. H. Waggener referred to this when he rose to make some presidential remarks, and said that he was "standing for the first time in his life in the ring," and it was a rather insecure footing, for he stood on a chair. The building is a large wooden structure, of rough finish, hexagonal in shape, and with two galleries running around it. An elevated platform, erected in its center, was on this occasion filled with singers and the speakers of the evening. E. L. Powell, president of the convention, was in the chair, but his duties were more centered in trying to keep himself warm than in flights of oratory. We had been warned to bring winter underwear and light wraps, and the weather in 'Frisco during the convention justified the advice. On the night of the Endeavor session there was more discomfort than at any session.

R. H. Waggener, the national superintendent of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Disciples of Christ, had no regular report to present, but made a general statement which showed that in our churches today we have about 7,000 societies, and it is now a question whether we stand first in rank with the denominations or "first-and-a-half," whereas, nine years ago we were seventh on the list. Within the ten months just passed our young people have contributed more than in any preceding twelve months. In five states we have made a forty per cent gain where we started in for the ten per cent increase, and one state—California—gave a report from every county. The greatest increase reported was from some parts of Nebraska, where as high as a 400 per cent increase was mentioned.

After a prayer by W. E. Crabtree, of San Diego, Cal., C. M. Chilton, pastor of the First church at St. Joseph, Mo., a man —to quote the chairman—"whose voice sounds like heart-throbs," gave a fine address upon "a plain subject and one that demanded plain matter-of-fact treatment" —the Endeavor Society and the pastor. Brother Chilton viewed the subject from the standpoint of the duty of the pastor to the Endeavor Society rather than from the reverse view point. The age, he contended, is not favorable to the religious life, the attention of men being centered on the things of this world by the very conditions in which we live. It is in the very atmosphere of the world that a young man succeeds as he makes money, and a young woman succeeds as she marries a man who makes money. The ministry must linger long in prayer and drink deep of the spirit of Jesus Christ to escape the world's spirit. The church is divided and appears everywhere in weakness. Then, too, the strain upon the faith of men is great in this age by reason of a train of new thought. The problem has grown upon the church, and with it the importance of the period of youth. Christian Endeavor has come to help solve the problem. The speaker went on to examine the constitution of the Christian Endeavor Society, which he regarded as one of the ablest documents of the nineteenth century. What the Christian Endeavor Society needs today, he said, is to return to its original objects, and he discussed some of these, showing how intimately the pastor is associated with the workings of the society under the constitution. Its officers, its membership, its business, must have the pastor's approval, and he ought to be an active member of it. His duty is to broaden its work. The chief danger, as Brother Chilton sees it, is that of formalism. What is needed is that opportunity should be given for the whole round nature of young people to be exercised. A social atmosphere in the church must be created. Then, instead of being at its end, the Christian Endeavor movement will be but at its beginning.

J. H. O. Smith followed with an address on "Christian Endeavor—a Battle, not a Dream." That we are not children at play, but soldiers on the march, with a fight to a finish before us, was the substance of his speech, which was of the highly florid type of oratory full of historic allusion, poetic quotation and the weaving of sentence upon sentence of descriptive phrasing together.

Current Religious Thought.

The Cumberland Presbyterian publishes an article on the subject of the reunion of that body with the mother church. The reasoning contained in the brief extract which we append is of the kind that will eventually lead the followers of Christ to abandon all sectarian names and wear his only, because of the greater good that can thereby be done. Read these lines and make the proper exchange of terms:

How I love the word "Cumberland"! What heroes and heroines have fought and suffered and died under her banner! What baptisms of fire burned upon the altars of their hearts! "Cumberland!" Shall I give thee up? But I do not give it up. The revision perpetuates its identity in doctrine and polity. Says "Cumberland": "I am neither dead nor lost. I am the immortal but concealed leaven in the reunited church. Presbyterianism is above and greater than I. I have increased your ability to build where you could not build, to go where you could not go, to give church homes to thousands of my scattered and homeless children in many a sunny south town."

Anti-union brother, "Cumberland" loves you; but she loves the church better. In the reunited church our force will exceed the force of numbers, and sweep in one grand evangelical wave over this fair land of ours. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good; for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel."

After the Convention

A journey and an experience, such as we of the Christian-Evangelist Special and other good brethren passed through during our trip to the great convention at San Francisco, leads us to think the brethren have not all forgotten the apostolic injunction, "Let brotherly love continue." The brethren who met us at San Bernardino and Riverside and welcomed us, the old friendships renewed at the convention and new ones made, were helpful experiences on life's journey.

When we started on our journey homeward, at Portland and some of the rest of the great northwest, it seemed like a family reunion to meet so many who had journeyed with us on our train again.

At Portland we saw E. S. Muckley, a college mate at old Bethany, who had returned from the convention for the Lord's day. But we could not tarry here, for after we had seen the Lewis and Clark Exposition and some of the city, we were due at Seattle to worship with the brethren there on the Lord's day. We reached there in good time to breakfast and attend the worship. Three of our brethren, Abbott, Boone and Crawford, made short addresses, and Brother Earl presided at the Lord's supper. After the service the brethren showed us their city, and in going from one section to the other we had a delightful ride on Lake Washington.

Next morning found us at Spokane (the last syllable must be pronounced with the short sound of a), and a hungry party we were, ushered to the church by brethren and treated to a royal Missouri breakfast, as the large number of Missourians in our party would claim, for among other good things were hot biscuit, and the sister who made them was from Missouri. But the Virginians with us were proud that she could trace her ancestry back to the Old Dominion, and felt they had a claim to some of the honor for her skill. Happy after-breakfast speeches were made and we went sightseeing on special electric cars; all this and the breakfast free. At night we assembled in the large auditorium of the church, which will seat about 1,600 people, and had a service, giving the brethren some of the enthusiasm of the convention. We were sorry not to have Bro. B. E. Utz, their minister, present, he having been called away.

As our genial manager, Brother Hoffmann, had been minister of the congregation at Helena, the capital of Montana, 25 years ago, we stopped next day at this point. Some of us climbed to the top of Mt. Helena, and had a view of a beautiful landscape of mountain ranges, on one hand, while in another direction we could see Helena nestling among the hills, and in still another, a valley with some fields of green along what seemed to be a stream of water.

When we returned to our berths at night, on our sleeper, some of us found that we must forsake the fellowship of the party and hurry on, as our course lay via St. Paul, and their party was bound for St. Louis.

At St. Paul we saw the beautiful capital building of marble, a magnificent structure, costing $4,000,000. Leaving at 8:40 p. m., we sped on to Chicago. Here our immediate party was narrowed down to three, Claude C. Jones, who was on his way to preach at the 34th Street Church, Washington, D. C., on Lord's day, Miss Effie Long, of the Downsville church, Maryland, who hoped to reach home Saturday night and begin teaching on Monday, and the writer, due to preach at Winston-Salem, N. C., on Lord's day. At Chicago we said good-bye to Bro. F. T. Bullard and Mrs. Bullard, bound for Lynchburg, Va., and Miss Mary I. Orvis, of Richmond, and Miss Anne M. White, of Bowling Green, Va. These seven having enjoyed a special companionship for more than three weeks, it was with regret that we separated.

The reader can imagine, or find in our papers, accounts of other special excursions, which, no doubt, had as blessed a fellowship as ours.

And now I must write of the convention. There was fellowship there. Individual greetings, fellowship of colleges in their banquets, ours of Bethany in the Puritan Restaurant, was a thing of joy. Fellowship in convention assembled, services of devotion, Bible readings led by J. H. Garrison, on "The Holy Spirit," fellowship of applause over good reports, and fellowship in the largely attended communion service on the Lord's day, and in giving at that service an offering for the old and disabled ministers and their wives. What a blessed fellowship is this! They have preached the gospel, they should live of the gospel. Then there was the larger fellowship in preaching and worshiping in the many churches of the city and the cordial welcome extended by their ministers to our visiting brethren.

All the sessions of the convention were held in the First Congregational church, Bro. J. H. Garrison preaching in this church on Lord's day morning a strong sermon on "Watchman, what of the night?" The closing part was a strong plea, familiar to Disciples, so plainly and pleasantly put as to breathe charity for all. The reports showed progress and gains on almost all lines. The speakers were mostly young men, some of them new on convention programs, but some of the addresses made one feel that these alone paid us for the trip across the continent. The speeches whose impressions stick in the memory were by F. M. Dowling, E. L. Powell, R. P. Shepherd, J. M. Rudy and W. A. Moore. There were others that were also good, but we think the keynote of the convention is summed up in the title of F. M. Dowling's address, "A United Church and an Evangelized World." Shall we do our part at home to bring it in God's Time?

Among the Pueblo Indians

In the vicinity of Santa Fe—that is, within twenty-five or thirty miles—are to be found some of the best specimens of two of the most interesting types of Indians and Indian residences. They are the prehistoric cave dwellings or cliff-dwellings and the modern Pueblos.

The Pueblo Indians of to-day are the most decent, industrious and amiable aborigines with whom it has been my pleasure to associate. They are not lazy nor dirty nor mean to their wives nor inhospitable to strangers. They do not "stalk haughtily" nor say "Ugh!" like the Indian of fiction and fancy. They do not talk about "fire-water," nor drink it in great quantities. They do not say "heap big Injun," nor use jargon-English of that type, but speak fairly pure Spanish and sometimes good, though limited, English. They are good and industrious farmers, their reservations including some of the best irrigated land in the territory. They wear blue-jeans oftener than blankets and feathers. They receive no supplies or rations from the government. They go to church on Sundays. The saying that "the only good Indian is a dead Indian," receives no credence among those who know the Pueblos. I myself am personally acquainted with some whom I would trust—with reasonable care, of course—even in a horse deal.

And yet, with all this array of commonplace virtues, they are the most picturesque and interesting of all Indians. It should be said that, though they are often spoken of as the Pueblo Indians, they do not constitute a single tribe. As shown by their original languages, there are three distinct stocks of Indians who inhabit pueblos. Those about Santa Fe are of a single stock, but the separate villages have only friendly relations with each other and no inclusive tribal organization.

Three miles down the valley from the ranch where I have been staying, is the Pueblo of Tesuque, which is a fairly good type of the Indian pueblo. It is, in the main, a quadrangle of adobe construction, part one story high, part two stories. The court thus enclosed by an almost solid wall of buildings, is perhaps seventy-five yards square. It is the common front and back yard for the whole village. The first story is two rooms deep. The second story is generally only one room deep, and is set back so that, viewed from the court, there is a terrace reached by ladders forming a sort of porch for the second story, while externally the pueblo presents a blank and windowless wall two stories high. In turbulent days this would be an advantage for purposes of defense. There are many dome-shaped adobe ovens in the court, on the terrace and even on top of the second story, the latter adding a good feature to the sky-line. Some of the chimneys are built of the large red and brown earthen jars which the women manufacture both for their own domestic use and for sale. A pile of these jars (with the bottoms knocked out, of course, to permit ~~a~~ the passage of smoke), plastered together with adobe mud, makes as gay a chimney as one could desire.

The houses are usually clean inside, with adobe floors as hard as cement and the walls are often decorated with a dado or wainscot of bright kalsomine. Seldom does a room contain less than half a dozen cheap religious prints—saints, madonnas and the like.

The average Indian is in all things very religious. When properly aroused, he makes the best religious fanatic in the world. It may not be generally known that there is to this day a secret order of Flagellants among them who inflict tortures upon themselvas and each other during Lent, and that almost every year, in some hidden place in the mountains, there is a passion play so terribly real that it culminates in the actual crucifixion of a voluntary victim. Of course, only a few reach this murderous and suicidal climax of fanaticism, but most of them are so religious that they perform the rites both of the Catholic church and of their ancient pagan faith with no sense of conflict or incongruity.

The pueblo of Tesuque has a little adobe Catholic church on one side of its quadrangle, but it lacks, so far as I observed, one important feature of a complete and perfect pueblo. It has no estufa. To find one we must go a little further down the valley.

Early one morning I saddled my pony, Buckskin—and let me say at once that there was no sinister significance in the first half of his name. He had all the passive Christian virtues, but few of the active ones, and his vices were all of a negative order. Once under the stimulus of competition with a horse really better than himself, he delighted me by actually running away; but in general he was just a patient, sure-footed mountain pony, who could climb like a goat, but wouldn't do it unless he had to.

One morning Buckskin and I went twelve miles down the valley and through the foothills to the pueblo of Nambe. Part of the way was through what I would call the bad lands, if it were not for hurting the feelings of my New Mexican friends, who cannot believe that there are any bad lands in New Mexico. It was perfectly and absolutely arid. The red-yellow soil, a mixture of sand, gravel and clay, was tossed into low, steep ridges and peaks, cleft into sharp narrow valleys, or gulleys and scarred with ten thousand wrinkles as the ground, unprotected by vegetation, had been cut by fierce and infrequent autumn rains and baked hard by the almost constant sun. It was the very picture of desolation. A little water properly supplied, would make it all available for peach orchards or wheat fields or market garden, but the water isn't there.

At last, passing the crest of a high ridge, I looked down into the green valley of Nambe, and it was good to look upon. The pueblo was almost deserted. The men had all taken a holiday to attend a festa at a neighboring pueblo. The village is a quadrangle with a short row of houses down the center, but only one story high. On one side was the church, very curious and delapidated, and in one corner, the estufa. The estufa is a circular building of a single room, about half subterranean. The only entrance is by a ladder through a hole in the roof. Indeed this was the original mode of entrance to all pueblo dwellings. The estufa is properly the temple of the old pagan Indian rites. When the ceremonial dances are held, the dancers dress (or undress) in the estufa and the procession issues from it. It is the headquarters of the pagan priests—for there are priests in every pueblo who have received no unction from the church. In it are kept the sacred corn-meal, which is used for various ceremonial purposes, and other paraphernalia for the tribal rites. At ordinary times it is used as a sort of clubroom by the men of the pueblo—a place for lounging and smoking in leisure hours or for conference upon matters of common interest. In fact, the estufa is the center of the strong community feeling which distinguishes the Pueblo Indians. The intrusion of a stranger into it is keenly resented. You may go into a dwelling without offense, but not into an estufa. That is the surest and quickest way to start trouble in the most peaceable pueblo.

As Nambe was almost deserted that day, I took the risk of looking into the estufa without actually going in. It was bare and immaculately clean, with walls tinted pink half-way up, a curiously built fireplace in the center (the entrance hole on the roof serving also as a smoke-hole) and niches in the wall for the reception of sacred meal, etc.

A few pueblos, like Tesuque, have no estufa of the usual sort, but these have a room in some house which they use for that same purpose. The institution always exists. It is the most important thing in the pueblo and it is essentially pagan.

Ministerial Supply and Statistics

By H. D. WILLIAMS

The discussion now under way in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST assumes that there is a shortage, and, so far, has been searching for the cause. Below are two tables of statistics recently compiled, which may throw some light on the question. They are not the most accurate since they are drawn from only a limited number of instances, but they have been gathered with care and cannot be far out of the way. These figures have reference to the sons of ministers and the ministry. It must be conceded that every calling depends chiefly, for its future manning, upon the sons of its present manhood—that the chief factor in supplying any calling with men, is the families already dependent on that calling. This fact is recognized and emphasized in sociology. In view of this the following table is significant:

Farmers springing from farmers' families,	90	per cent.
Lawyers springing from lawyers' families,	41	"
Physicians springing from physicians' families,	30	"
Bankers springing from bankers' families,	42	"
Ministers springing from ministers' families,	8	"

From this table we are driven to one of two conclusions—either the ministry is increasing in numbers at a greater rate than any of the other four callings represented, or ministers' sons are failing to follow the calling of their fathers as often as in the other four callings. But it is a fact long admitted, widely discussed and loudly lamented that the ministry is not increasing at its proper rate. Therefore, we are driven to the second conclusion, that ministers' sons, for the most part, are refusing to shoulder the burdens of their fathers.

Some questions will arise as one ponders the above table.

Have ministers less influence than other men in shaping the course of their sons? Are ministers' sons especially wayward and selfish? Do ministers advise their sons to avoid the ministry? Is the outlook upon their ministerial life, gained from the ministerial home, enough to deter the son from entering upon it?

But here is another table quite as significant:

Farmers' sons becoming farmers....	68	per cent.
Lawyers' sons becoming lawyers.................	53	"
Physicians' sons becoming physicians.....	42	"
Bankers' sons becoming bankers......	35	"
Ministers' sons becoming ministers...	11	"

This table also indicates that ministers' sons are turning to some other line of service. There has been a good deal of talk about the large number of young men quitting the farm because of its drudgery. This has been pointed out as a danger to our agricultural interests and a detriment to the whole people. But, behold, only 32 per cent of farmers' sons are deserting the farm while 89 per cent of ministers' sons are deserting the ministry. If the farming interest is in danger, what of the ministry? Some have said that the preachers must preach young men into the ministry. Will their preachments on that point do any good when their own sons are turning from the ministry? When the pastor's son is ready for college, his failure to enter for ministerial preparation soon gets abroad in the church. Very soon the explanation of departure from the paternal calling gets out also, and other young men, thinking of the ministry, are turned aside to business by the example and explanation of the pastor's son.

These things are submitted simply by way of suggestion. I think there are three great causes for the shortage in ministerial supply, and about these I shall write another time.

Robbing Peter to Pay Paul.

By H. C. Patterson.

With the growing custom to allow pastors a vacation from their arduous labors grows the demand for men to fill the pulpit in their absence. Usually the churches are behind with the pastor's salary and they embrace this opportunity to catch up. In order to do this they must take their regular offerings and hold the same against the return of the refreshed pastor. In most instances some poor, unemployed preacher is called upon to supply the pulpit, which he does cheerfully and returns to his family without a dollar to buy their dinner. The church members shake hands and congratulate each other on their getting good sermons, and that without having to pay anything.

At the end of the year the official board is congratulated upon their splendid financiering ability, while the bills for coal, flour and groceries pour in upon the supply preacher, and the church, learning of his financial embarrassment, attribute this to extravagance and say, "If he could have our official board to look after his business he would prosper." I have little confidence in the Christian honor of a church or pastor who will persist in robbing Peter to pay Paul, or the church in robbing both Peter and Paul. If a man acts as supply he should share equally with the pastor who has money enough to admit of his taking a month's outing or going on a jaunt across the continent. These preachers are at home to act as supplies simply because they are unable to bear the expense of an outing. I sincerely hope to see a change in this practice of injustice. Preachers everywhere should enter their protest against this wrong and insist upon their brothers being paid, and if the church will not do it, do it themselves or stay at their posts of duty to which the Lord has called them.

Victory at Hillsboro, Illinois.

In September, 1904, the writer, as evangelist of the fifth Illinois missionary district, visited Hillsboro. About twenty Disciples were found who seemed anxious to work. Lawrence and Edward Wright, of Iowa, were secured as evangelists. A new congregation was organizee, and regular services will be held in the court house till property can be secured. The writer, under the direction of the district board, will preach half the time for this new church. EDWARD O. SHARPE.

Our Budget

—Our Convention Number will appear next week. Those wishing extra copies should order at once.

—What new plans of work are you going to carry out this fall?

—Now that the convention is over, there will be nothing to interfere for more than a few days with the church life and work for the winter. District and state conventions should be attended, but these do not take up so much time or energy as a national convention, to which many have to travel great distances. It required of the writer three weeks from his office and a lot of overtime work in order that he might be present at the gathering in San Francisco.

—Our readers have been enjoying the "Editor's Easy Chair" account of the convention and the incidents of the journey thereto. The editor is still in the west, but he is booked to start from the hills of Wyoming for Chicago, en route to Garrison Park, Pentwater, about the time these lines appear in print.

—The assistant editor returned to his desk last week by the short route, having seen, with envious eyes, his chief start after that salmon. It was a working journey home, but the fellowship of F. M. Rains, S. H. Bartlett and others was a delightful relief to some of the grind that falls to the lot of the newspaper man.

—Will you co-operate with us in extending the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist? We have added thousands of readers during the past year, but there are several hundred thousand members of our churches who never read a religious paper. We do not know that neighbor of yours who is so ill-informed about what the brotherhood is doing and who could be so much more useful if he were thus interested. But you do.

—This telegram reaches us as we make ready for press:

"Yates Center, Kan.—Three thousand at services yesterday at Leroy, Kan.; eighty added, principally by baptism; Martin family meetings."

—D. D. Burt, of Niles, O., is enjoying his vacation in Michigan.

—J. C. Mason has been touring among the West Texas churches.

—The Oklahoma convention will be held at Guthrie, September 11-14.

—Do not forget the Kentucky state meeting, September 25-28, at Maysville.

—J. A. Lytle, of Urbana, Ill., has some dates not taken for this fall and winter.

—W. A. Fite has just preached for the East Dallas church, where he was formerly pastor.

—Rudolph Kiecke has closed his pastorate at Yale, Mich., where he has done a fine work.

—C. L. Walker is to give up the work at Mt. Auburn, Ia., and enter the evangelistic field.

—The church at Arkansas City, Kan., will need a pastor December 1. Address, D. G. Lewis.

—O. W. Darnold, of Shelby county, Ky., has accepted a call for half-time at Burgin, the same state.

—Owing to a canceled engagement, Chas. E. McVay, of Benkelman, Neb., can assist in a November meeting.

—D. W. Martin, who has been a faithful friend to the National Benevolent Association, has just given it $2,000 on the annuity plan.

—R. H. Tanksley is still a cripple as the result of a broken leg and a badly sprained ankle, received in a fall on the Fourth of July.

—The Central Christian Church, of Cincinnati, has begun the publication of a little weekly devoted to the interests of the local church.

—A male singer is wanted for an evangelistic meeting, to begin October 1. Terms and references should be sent to J. E. Dinger, Chandler, O. T.

—Homer T. Wilson has resigned at San Antonio, and will give his time to evangelistic work. His address will be San Antonio, Texas, for a time.

—President and Mrs. B. A. Jenkins are expected home from Europe at an early date. The exact date was not announced, on account of the sickness of Brother Jenkins while at Berlin.

—Owing to the condition of Bethany Church, Evansville, Ind., Allen P. Shaw has decided to accept a call to Fairfield, Ill. H. F. Drash, of Bloomfield, Ind., will take the Bethany work.

—A. L. Zink, of Carroll, Ia., has been called to Tecumseh, Neb. This is the third time he has been called to take this church, and he has finally decided to take up the work there again.

—Benj. L. Mitchell, who arrived from Liverpool, England, on July 1, to take up the work of the First church, Joliet, Ill., reports three additions last Lord's day and the audience increasing at each service.

—R. Bruce Brown is at his home, Yale, Mich., for a short time. He will preach for the church there until a regular pastor is located, when he will return to northern Michigan to pursue his missionary work in that new field.

—The new church at Canton, O., is to be dedicated September 10 by Z. T. Sweeney, and a meeting will begin October 1, with the pastor, P. H. Welshimer, doing the preaching, and P. W. Kendall, of Columbus, Ind., in charge of the music.

—Ira W. Kimberling desires to quit the regular pastorate and hold meetings for weak churches. This is in accordance with the request of his recently deceased wife. Those wishing to make use of his services may address Lock box 141, Neodesha, Kan.

—R. B. Havener has closed a ten days' meeting at Post Oak, Mo., which will result in another building being erected. This will make four new houses on the Rock Island Railroad, and five new congregations that Brother Havener has inaugurated.

—J. Lord, of the "Christian Standard," worshipped with the South Broadway Church, Denver, Col., Lord's day morning, August 27, while G. W. Muckley addressed the congregation on the work of the Board of Church Extension on the evening of the same day.

—B. Q. Denham has resigned his pastorate in New York, and will have some time to devote his energies to lecture work and a business enterprise. Brother Denham has a very warm following, and the church will give him a reception in the course of a few days.

—Naotaro Otsuka, who is a graduate of Bethany College, has just received his bachelor of divinity degree from the University of Chicago, where he has been studying for some time. His thesis subject was, "A Sketch of Religious Progress in Japan."

—I. J. Spencer, in writing of his trip to the convention, says he remained nearly two hours in Salt Lake—"hours that passed as quickly as the play hours at school when I was a boy of ten." The assistant editor seconds this judgment, having spent just about the same time in that briny water.

—Elizabeth Flower Willis, reader and impersonator of national fame, has recently purchased all the rights and appurtenances of the Samuel R. Kelley School of Oratory, of Boston, and it will hereafter be consolidated with her own school at Worcester, Mass.

—Jas. W. Zachary, of Lexington, Ky., held a meeting at Sterling, O. T., recently, which resulted in twenty-five baptisms and the laying of plans to build a house of worship. Brother Zachary is now touring the coast, but would like to locate permanently, as he is tired of the roaming life of an evangelist.

—We regret to record the death of Rev. H. P. Hamilton, who has for twenty-six years been the agent of the American Bible Society in the republic of Mexico. During the quarter of a century there have been circulated through his agency among the people of Mexico more than 500,000 copies of the Bible, New Testament and portions of the Scriptures.

—We regret to record the death of Mrs. Arminda Hughes, wife of D. E. Hughes, pastor of the Christian church at Monmouth, Ill. Her last sickness was of short duration, though it had been brought on by a gradual failing during the past few years. She was a faithful pastor's wife, and was loved in the homes of all who came in contact with her.

—F. B. Sapp reports that there is some money and material in hand to build a church at Gladesville, W. Va., in which he feels a special interest by reason of early memories. Brother Sapp has just returned from his vacation to Greenfield, Ind. While at Gladesville, on his vacation, he preached three times—once at the Baptist Association—and baptized two young ladies.

—The college work at Jubbulpore, India, opened July 13 with eighteen students in attendance—the same as last year. The building is not yet up, but Brother Wharton believes it will come in due time. The printing press is doing well also, and the missionaries are greatly cheered with the reports that come from America and are delighted to think they are to have more helpers on the field soon.

—The number of additions in a revival meeting just held at the Christian church, California, Mo., by John L. Brandt, was thirty-three. At the close of the services resolutions were offered expressing confidence in the pastor, Herbert J. Corwine, and extending him a call for another year beginning March 1. Brother Brandt gave one of his popular lectures at the conclusion of the regular evangelistic services.

—We have received copies of the plans of the proposed new church building at Huntington, Ind., where Cephas Shelburne ministers. The old accommodation has long been insufficient, for it would hold at most about four hundred people, while the membership of the church is now six hundred, with a large number of regular attendants. The new auditorium is to seat seven hundred people, while the capacity can be enlarged to 1,300 by throwing the entire floor into one area.

—Dexter Christian College opened its fall session with an increased attendance over the same period last year. President Buxton was in attendance, for which he left the side of his dying wife in Colorado Springs, where he had been for a month. Although one thousand miles from the college, he did not allow it to suffer, and wrote over three hundred personal letters and sent twenty telegrams in its interest in this time. We are informed that every student who has thus far enrolled had been arranged for by President Buxton personally or by letter.

—According to the Columbia Herald, Dr. W. T. Moore occupied the pulpit of C. H. Winders on a recent Lord's day, which happened to be Dr. Moore's seventy-third anniversary. The subject of his remarks was, "How Christianity appears to one at the age of sixteen years, and to one at the age of seventy-three." Brother Winders has been in attendance at the San Francisco convention, having taken a party of friends from Columbia and neighborhood.

—According to the "Daily Times," New Philadelphia, O., Brother and Sister J. W. Harrison and their gospel wagon have returned to that city after an absence of a few days over one year. The newspaper says: "It is the same old wagon, battered but little more than the last time it was here; the same old gray horse, still as fat and well kept as ever, and the same little jovial man and woman, who, during their short stay in our city, made many friends who will extend to them a hearty welcome." Brother and Sister Harrison are now on their way to the western coast, and will preach and distribute literature at every opportunity on their long journey.

—A personal letter to the editor of this paper from Brother G. L. Wharton comes to hand in his absence, and the assistant editor takes it upon himself to make the following quotation: "When at Landour a short time ago, I was asked to speak upon the subject of 'Tithing.' I distributed my tract to a few. The superintendent of the North India Tract Society, Dr. L. Lucas, has asked me to put the tract into Hindi for circulation among the Christians in India; others wanted me to translate it into Urdoo. Dr. Lucas, in reporting the Christian Endeavor conference in his paper, 'The Hindoostan Journal,' said: 'The address of Rev. G. L. Wharton on "Tithing" was one which it would pay the C. E. Societies to repeat all over India.' Dr. Lucas is one of the best theologians and scholars among the Presbyterians in India. This is only by way of letting you know that your labor is not limited to the United States, great as it is. Some day you will know how world-wide is your influence for the extending and the building up of the kingdom."

Southwest Iowa District Convention.

The Southwest Iowa District Convention will be held at Corning, Ia., September 12-14. The church at Corning sends a hearty welcome and invitation to all the churches in the district to send delegates. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished in the homes, and the ladies will serve meals during the day near the church, at the usual price. We should like very much if word of your coming might be sent in advance.

W. E. PITCHER.

An Important Statement.

During the month of August the Foreign Society received $12,683, a gain over the corresponding month, 1904, of $1,906.

The total receipts for the year—that is, up to September 1—amount to $220,484, a gain over the corresponding eleven months of last year, of $39,723. This is the greatest gain ever made for the corresponding time.

We must receive $29,516 during September if we reach the $250,000. The tardy churches and Sunday schools and other friends of the work should make a careful note of this. And let it be remembered, the books close September 30. Any money received after that can not be credited on this year's receipts. Let the gifts be sent promptly to F. M. Rains, Corresponding Secretary, Cincinnati, O.

A New Named Fund for Church Extension.

At the close of the Church Extension session of the national convention at San Francisco, Tuesday night, August 22, C. C. Chapman, of Fullerton, Cal., gave a $5,000 named loan fund to Church Extension, and paid his first $500. The fund will be known as "The Lizzie Pearson Chapman Memorial Loan Fund," in memory of Brother Chapman's deceased wife. The announcement of this magnificent gift created great enthusiasm. Mr. Chapman is president of the Southern California Christian Missionary Society, and was elected first vice-president of our national convention, which is to meet in Buffalo in October, 1906.

This is the fourteenth named fund in our Church Extension work. This is a fine start for our annual offering.

There are scores of wealthy people and churches among our ranks able to give named funds. A named fund is $5,000 or more, of which a separate account is kept and a report made each year to the donor. The interest is kept in the fund, and practically compounds itself in semi-annual payments. The fund is named after the donor, or some one he may designate.

The Drake fund has built fifty-three churches, and done the work of $20,365.66 since its establishment in February, 1889, though our lamented Brother Drake gave but $1,000 to start the fund in 1889, and paid the remainder through a series of nine years.

The Bethany Beach Institution.

Our seaside resort, Bethany Beach, Sussex county, Delaware, has just closed its fourth and most successful season. It has never been so largely patronized, nor proven more conclusively the need of such a summer resting place for our people. Its benefits have been enjoyed by representatives of the Disciples of Christ from Cincinnati, Lexington, Detroit, Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, Johnstown, Wheeling, Bethany, Hiram, and many other places, who have found its invigorating breezes and its inspiring felowship all that could be desired.

The program of the assembly of 1905—July 16 to August 18—has never before been equaled by us. The founders of Bethany Beach had a great purpose which has been steadfastly adhered to, namely, to promote the plea of the Disciples of Christ in the east and to provide for its friends and patrons such physical, intellectual, social and spiritual advantages during the vacation season as will make it an attractive resort for all good people. It does not, for a moment, undertake to rival such resorts as Atlantic City. Its aims are educational and religious. It would be a haven of rest for quiet people. It claims to present a safe and rational way of spending the heated term. It offers wholesome recreation. No one is in this enterprise for the purpose of making money. It is not in any sense a real estate scheme, of which the company is the promoter.

President of Bethany Beach Assembly.

H. JAMES CROCKETT, Pres.

The Holy Spirit.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON: I have just been reading your work on the Holy Spirit. No other discussion of the subject within such compass pleases me so well. You have set a good example for this kind of writing, giving simple and sane expression to what is evidently well matured thought.

A good writer has somewhere said that the Holy Spirit may practically be regarded as God in contact with the human soul. He may reach us through his word, or through the lives of men in whom he has come to dwell. It would be hard to put limits as to ways in which he might make his Spirit to bear on ours. It is easy to feel that if we were spiritually sensitive and well attuned to heavenly things, we might feel distinctly the sweet influences of the divine life. Poets are constantly teaching us that there is a soul in things; that Nature speaks a varied language, a language which varies according to our moods and spirit conditions. And there is truth in all this.

Two men behold the same landscape, and yet it is not alike to them; one sees far more than the other. It answers nothing to say that the differences are subjective, i. e., differences in the two beholders, for as a fact, they really behold different things. I think it true that no one comes at all to know nature until he sees beneath the surface, that is, until he sees the unseen and the unseeable.

Yet it should never be forgotten that at first we are dependent on the external and visible; that it is through the seen that we are led to the unseen; and while he who sees most, finds the richer life, the man of lesser vision is not going wrong if he sees honest.

Pardon this. I started simply to thank you for this book, and to say that I am happy for a month to be a Missourian. We have a glorious country, and one can hardly tarry long in any state without becoming proud to call it his own.

Ever truly,

E. B. WAKEFIELD.

—The Columbus (O.) Dispatch contains a picture and notice of W. S. Priest, pastor of the Central church of Christ in that city, on the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of his work in the ministry. The report says that "in the twenty-five years he has preached 3,044 sermons, received 1,748 persons into the church, married 321 couples, and conducted 380 funeral sermons." In a personal letter to the Editor, Brother Priest says:

"Rejoice with me! Last week we sold our church property for $31,000—$500 per front foot—which I think a good price, and we will at once go ahead with the erection of a $50,000 plant, a representative building of our plea in this great capital of the great commonwealth of Ohio. A fitting close of last Lord's day services, my twenty-fifth anniversary, was the ratification by the congregation of the action of the trustees, recommending the sale of the property. So, we hope, within a year, to be housed in a modern building that will be adequate to our work. Thus, sooner than I could have reasonably expected, the purpose that very largely animated me and decided me to accept this work, is likely to be realized. 1880—1905! Between these dates is represented a quarter of a century of labor in the ministry of the Word! How gracious the Lord hath been to me! How kind and considerate the churches which I have served! I am sure I have not deserved all the blessings that have been mine. How slow of heart we are to understand that the dear Father wants to be good to us! We had a great day. I gave a little talk on 'Twenty-five Years in the Ministry,' in which I tried to show something of the joys of preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ—in seeing men and women turn to the Lord; in building up the saints in their holy faith; in being in the front rank of those who are pleading for civic righteousness and moral cleanness. Oh, what a glorious thing it is to preach Christ and him crucified! Had I a thousand periods of twenty-five years each to live, I would wish to give them all to this highest of all callings. My brethren surprised me by having the superintendent of our Bible-school walk towards the pulpit, just as I began to read my text, and, in a neat little speech, hand me twenty-five silver dollars! You see, it was my silver jubilee."

Let pessimistic croakers about the ministry, notice the joy and inspiration of this faithful minister of Christ. Young men thinking about the ministerial calling, might well make a note of this.

Liverpool, England.

The church in Liverpool was organized by W. T. Moore soon after he began his work in England, and it was for this church that M. D. Todd gave his life. Three of my happiest years were spent as minister there, and I know of no better and, according to its numbers, more efficient church. It has sent out as preachers such men as James and Matthew Small, R. W. Abberley and W. R. McCrea.

That church is now struggling to free itself of a burden of debt, that it may be unhindered in its work for the Lord. Bro. Philip Pratly, the treasurer, has made an appeal to our general brotherhood for help. I know Brother Pratly. He is one of God's noblemen, and every dollar sent to him will be sacredly used for the Lord, and there are few, if any, places where money will do more good. Brethren, do not turn a deaf ear to this appeal. If you could only know the situation as one knows it who has been over the ground, this sacrificing and deserving people would be at once relieved. Every dollar you send to Philip Pratly, 67 Garmoyle Road, Liverpool, England, will bear interest for you in the bank of heaven. A. MARTIN.

A Comparison That Tells.

We have recently received a number of inquiries about the progress we are making with the new church at Hot Springs. We are at work doing all we can, though our progress is unsatisfactory. We have not received the aid we have expected from the outside. We were so crippled by the fire that it has been hard for us to keep up the work. There is one point though, in this work, of public interest; it reveals the need of missionary education.

Here is an illustration which makes it clear that we are weak in this particular: When the great fire on Feb. 25 swept away more than one hundred business and six hundred residences, an appeal went out from three different churches, including the Christian church, Cumberland Presbyterian and the M. E. church, south. The results stand thus: Central Methodist church has received aid to the amount of $13,650, Cumberland Presbyterian to the amount of $7,000, $4,000 being sent in as a result of sending out one circular letter. We made about the same effort they made, and, as a result, we received $80. "He who runs may read." T. N. KINCAID.

Old-Fashioned Philosophy.

Scorn not the homely virtues. We are prone
To search through all the world for something new;
And yet sometimes old-fashioned things are best—
Old-fashioned work, old-fashioned rectitude,
Old-fashioned honor and old-fashioned prayer,
Old-fashioned patience that can bide its time,
Old-fashioned fireside, sacred from the world,
Old-fashioned satisfaction with enough,
Old-fashioned candor and simplicity,
Old-fashioned folks that practice what they preach. —J. A. Edgarton.

Reading at Mealtime.

The morning newspaper, delivered at the door, or coming in the early mail, offers strong temptation to the man of the household to spread it before him as he sits at the breakfast table and to become absorbed in its contents. It has become the American fashion at hotels to glance at the paper while waiting for orders to be filled by the waiter. It is also considered excusable at the home table for a man to look into his paper for important news which he speaks of or reads for the interest of others at the table. But newspaper reading at the table should have its limits or it may become a vice. A man may allow himself to neglect and delay his breakfast and to become so selfishly absorbed as to leave his wife to her own thoughts, and he may form the habit of hastily reading without proper attention or remembrance. A very brief glance a the headlines should be sufficient at the breakfast table, and then he should be a sociable member of the family group, and make the time pleasant for others. If he perches his paper on the table, now looking, now eating, he is making a hog of himself, and if his wife has a tongue with a point he deserves all he gets.—The Watchman.

College and Church.

The Christian temple is the most recently built church of the Disciples in this city, and only the chapel of it is completed. This, however, including the lot, has cost close on to $23,000. It was opened in January, and since then there have been eighty odd additions to the membership. This congregation has a history of about sixteen years. It started as a fully established church, and in their second year they built the Calhoun street church building, in which they worshiped until last January, and which is now being conducted as one of our branches. Bro. H. G. Spencer, son of Bro. I. J. Spencer, is pastor. Five years ago they built their first mission chapel, which is near the Twenty-fifth street church, and the next year they built another mission chapel, now known as the Randall street church. This church now is without a pastor. It pays $750 a year, and Bro. H. D. Mentzel, 117 Hopkins place, Baltimore, Md., may be written to regarding it.

But regarding the temple, among the very first features of its work is its seminary, which is a three years' course in the study of the scriptures. The freshman year includes a study in the Old Testament, the junior year is a study in the New Testament, and the senior year includes a brief study in a general review of the entire Bible, six weeks each in church history, Christian evidences and Christian missions. There are regular written examinations, and the students do much practica work outside. We have recently closed our first commencement exercises. Edward B. Bagby, of Washington, preached the baccalaureate sermon. The class day exercises consisted of two essays, "What is it to be a Christian?" by Miss Bernice Pratt; and "How do we know that the Bible is true?" by Miss Annette Saumernig. These papers would do credit to graduates from any theological institution. The day following was our graduating exercises. The young ladies already named, received diplomas, and the address was made by Dr. Duncan M. Buchanan, pastor of Lafayette square Presbyterian church. Our students wear mortar board caps, and have their colors—red, white and orange—and from September to June things are alive with Bible study. In the students' society, they have their recitations, essays, addresses and debates just as you see in any ordinary college, except everything bears on the Bible or Christian work. Members from other churches have attended our classes, and next September we are expecting a large number of students to matriculate. The course is not easy. Like all good things, it means work, but the work is so pleasant that it becomes a joy. We try to make it applied Christianity, and count that a student is not proficient except he practices what he has learned. After all, is it not as much the business of the church to teach as it is to preach? This work aims to be a small contribution to that end. Peter Ainslie.

Kentucky Convention Pointers.

Time—September 25 to September 28.

Place—Maysville is easy of access by both the L. & N. and C. & O. railroads.

Entertaiment—The Maysville people expect to entertain in their homes all who send their names prior to September 21. Dr. P. G. Smoot, Maysville, Ky., should be notified at once.

Railroad Rates—All roads have given us a fare of one and one-third plus twenty-five cents, on the certificate plan. You must get certificate on purchase of your ticket from starting point certifying that you have paid full fare, and this, properly signed at Maysville, will entitle you to return at one-third fare plus twenty-five cents. You can not get any reduction in return fare without this certificate. If the agent tells you that he has no instructions, insist that he give you the certificate. He has no right to refuse you at any time such a certificate. If you can not buy a through ticket, because you travel over one or more lines, get a certificate each time, and we can manage to get you back as per agreement. Absolutely, no certificate, no reduction. This rate applies only to points from which the fare going is seventy-five cents or more.

Our Finances—There are still strong churches on our list delinquent. I am sure that many of these will not be so when the annual report is read September 27. If your contribution is to be in the list of published receipts presented to the Maysville convention, it must reach me by September 20. Money reaching me later than that, and prior to September 26, will be read in a supplemental report on September 27.

One of Fifty—This good work is not completed as yet. We lack a considerable number of reaching the goal. Will you not be one of fifty to give $10?

Sulphur, Ky. H. W. Elliott, Sec.

Tidewater, Va., Convention.

The Tidewater meeting has just ended, and though the attendance was small, owing to the excited condition of the state in politics, there was a great deal of work accomplished and the plans for the future were extensive, and the year upon which we have just entered is expected to be one of the best in the history of the district.

The C. W. B. M. had the field on the first day. Some admirable reports and addresses were given. The meeting was held with the Olive Branch church at Toano, Va. Seventeen churches and schools were represented. From the report in the regular convention the district was shown to be in a better condition than a year ago, having added $1,066 to the educational fund. During the past year the board aided J. T. Hoskins in his school work at Lexington, Ky. The coming year the fund will be able to aid more young men to secure an education for the purpose of entering the ministry.

The convention listened to E. A. Cole, of Washington, Pa., in presenting the cause of foreign missions.

The report of the churches was read, showing a net increase of 189 members during the year.

W. C. Wade made application for the admittance of the Portsmouth Christian church, a newly organized body of eighty members; also two other churches from Princess Anne county, all of which were admitted. A. J. Renforth presented the needs for the educational fund, and took up a collection of $246.25, to be paid during this year. This fund has assets amounting to $4,612.54. The membership of the district at the close of this year is 5,437, showing a total collection for all purposes of $33,525.19.

The closing event of the day was the address of Milo Atkinson, of Newport News.

The next convention will be held with Smyrna church, on August 7-9, 1906.

Nominations for board for next year were made as follows: P. A. Cave, president; J. L. Hill, treasurer; G. S. Crenshaw, secretary; G. A. Watson, superintendent of schools; A. J. Renforth, superintendent of Christian Endeavor; J. T. T. Hundley, B. H. Melton.

The Christian Endeavor reports showed fifteen societies in active work and a membership of 465. During the coming year an extra effort will be made to establish a society in each church in the district.

H. C. Combs represented Virginia state work, and in a talk of thirty minutes impressed his hearers with the excellent work being done by this board.

Owing to the absence of S. G. Sutton, superintendent of Sunday-schools, G. A. Watson was appointed to conduct this work. E. W. Thornton was appointed to represent the work, but being unavoidably detained at home, E. A. Cole represented this work.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The convention of Scotland county was held at Azen, August 26 and 27, and was a most enjoyable one. The attendance was good, especially on Sunday, when the men, in some cases, had to take the outside of the building in order that the sisters might have seats. This, considering the membership of twenty-five, and a building surpassing many of the city houses, would indicate that the cause in Scotland county is in good condition.

M. J. Nicoson presided, in the absence of the president, J. M. Jayne, of Memphis. There are thirteen church organizations in the county, most of which have one-half time or one-fourth time preaching. Only one, Memphis, has full time. The county is well organized and in fine working order. No family is more than five miles from a church, and some buildings are but two miles apart. This splendid distribution of buildings is largely due to the efforts of Judge J. M. Jayne, of Memphis, who has had the county development on his mind for years. The one auxiliary at Memphis had a good report from its representative, Miss S. Johnson, and a few words of testimony as to the joy of the service from Sister Nicoson. We fully expect, before many months, to have organizations at Azen and Granger.

A great privilege was enjoyed by the secretary, that of a visit with the auxiliary at Canton, which was long looked forward to with hope, and was fully realized. The president, Mrs. J. F. Graves, was absent from the city, but other faithful officers and members managed meetings so that a most delightful time was experienced.

Also, another treat while there was much appreciated—that of visiting the grounds and buildings of Christian University, through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Graves.

How happy and gratified the friends of this university must feel, now, after the days of such earnest struggle, to see this monument to their faith and love before their eyes, and set upon a hill where it can not be hid.

Word comes from Mrs. Q. T. Hall, manager of the first district, of the organization of a new auxiliary at Old Union, Monroe County, of eleven members. This gives Missouri the two hundred auxiliaries asked for, including circles. Now, let us strive for two hundred auxiliaries, not including circles, before September 15. We can do it if each manager will be as faithful as this one, and we know they will. This means four new ones, still.

St. Louis. Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

The Oklahoma State Convention, September 11-14.

A full program of practical themes has been prepared by the C. W. B. M., the C. E., and the church forces of our Zion of Oklahoma, for the state convention, which is to meet at Guthrie, Sept. 11-14. Oklahoma will show the marvelous record of growth of our cause for the early days of the century. This has been a year of church building. Scarcely a Lord's day goes by but a new building is dedicated for the worship of God, according to the simple Bible plan. Some of the churches, like Guthrie and El Reno, although but a little beyond a decade in age, are now on the living link list for home missions. Other churches, like Oklahoma City and Enid, are soon to clear themselves of debts incurred in erecting modern buildings that would grace any city of the middle west or older east. Bro. J. M. Monroe is the efficient corresponding secretary. A number of consecrated men and a few ministers constitute the territorial board. The Christian Clarion is the official organ of the territorial work, which is just in its beginning, being ably edited by C. W. Gould, of El Reno. Great numbers are moving into the territory and buying homes. The time seems to be at hand to be earnestly about the Lord's business, and in a few more years Oklahoma will be one of the strongholds of the restoration movement. Every church should send up a large delegation. The minister and some member of the official board at least should attend. We are assured that the good sisters of the C. W. B. M. and the young people of the C. E. are to have a large attendance.

El Reno. O. C. Smith.

The Negro Missionary Convention at Hannibal, Missouri.

The convention of the Negro Christian Missionary Society of Missouri recently closed its thirty-first annual session at Hannibal.

The meeting was the greatest ever held among us. The crowds of delegates and visitors thronged the church on the first day of the convention.

The report of the president, J. B. Parson, covering a period of five years, shows a steady growth in all departments of our work. Churches, Sunday-schools and members have almost been doubled. Thirty-one churches are reported.

The district convention organized last year at Fulton proved to be a success. This year the convention recommended that a Sunday-school superintendent be appointed in each of the districts. The districts raised $75 during the year. Three Sunday-schools were organized and one church was built at Jefferson City. While this report is being written Bro. W. J. Berry and Bro. Moser Powell are laying the foundation for a church house in Lexington.

Mrs. J. L. Moore gave a stereopticon lecture concerning the work of the C. W. B. M., and at its close an offering of $6.02 was made to the mission in Mexico. I am anxious to know if this is not the first offering from a colored C. W. B. M. to any foreign mission station.

Many excellent papers, which space will not permit to be mentioned in this brief account, were read before the convention.

Next year the convention will be held at Madison, on Tuesday preceding the fourth Sunday in August. S. W. Scott.

Indian Territory.

Our midsummer campaign has been a great success. Following is a brief report of some of our August meetings: L. B. Grogan, Purdy, 34 additions; A. C. Parker, Davis, 45 added at last report; Couch-Allhands meeting at Roff, closed with 61 additions; Frank Brain, Thurston, 20 added; A. J. Williams, Kiowa, six added first week and meeting continued; S. R. Hawkins, Eylor, one week, church dedicated, eight added—making a total of 125 baptisms, 49 otherwise, one church dedicated and one organized. I am beginning a meeting at Duncan.

The Martin Meeting.

A successful series of evangelistic meetings by Bro. S. M. Martin, of Seattle, has just closed. Bro. Charles E. McVay, of Nebraska, had charge of the music. Thirty-eight were added to the church and a great deal of interest aroused. This town has been a free thought center for many years. A liberal university flourished for a time but was abandoned a few years ago. This meeting has sowed a great deal of good seed that will surely grow. Brother Albyn Esson who has been the minister of the Rodney avenue church in Portland the past four years, has been called to the work here. E. E. Washburn.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

[Telegram.]

Oakland, Cal., Sept. 3.—Sixty-seven added in Scoville-Smith meeting in seven days; 24 to-day; crowds turned away.—T. A. Boyer, pastor.

ARKANSAS.

Fayetteville, Aug. 29.—There were three additions to the First church last Sunday—one by letter and two conversions.—N. M. Ragland.

De Queen, Aug. 28.—I baptized two the third Lord's day four miles from here, and last Lord's day received five here—one by statement and four by confession and baptism.—W. O. Breeden.

Jonesburg, Aug. 31.—Elder E. C. Browning, state evangelist of Arkansas, and the writer conducted a meeting at Mangrum, commencing on Saturday night before the second Lord's day in August, and lasting ten days, with 32 additions—22 baptized, four restored and four from other churches.—Wm. G. M. Wilkerson.

Evadale.—Just closed a ten days' meeting. There were a few brethren scattered about this place without any church organization. We had unfavorable circumstances surrounding us. A Methodist meeting about three and one-half miles had been running one week; a Baptist meeting on the other side and any amount of prejudice scattered about the neighborhood. One man positively refused to allow his wife to be baptized after she had confessed her Lord. The meeting resulted in six confessions, three from the Baptists, one from the Methodists and four reclaimed. We found quite a number of the faithful and organized a church of Christ with 32 charter members.—Elder J. A. Allen.

CALIFORNIA.

Oakland, Aug. 27.—Scoville and Smith are here. Twenty-two added to-day, third day of meeting. They have reached over fourteen hundred in first seven months this year.—T. A. Boyer.

COLORADO.

Trinidad, Aug. 25.—One baptism at Raton, New Mexico, Thursday, August 24. The church is doing nicely, but has not yet secured a minister.—David C. Peters, minister, Trinidad, Col.

ILLINOIS.

Waukegan, Aug. 24.—To date there have been sixteen confessions and one restored. One young lady about thirty years of age, both deaf and dumb, made the good confession and was buried with her Lord in baptism last night. Her confession was taken in writing. It was a very impressive scene. From here we go to Missouri.—Lawrence and Edward Wright, evangelists.

Detroit, Aug. 28.—The Asbell meeting closed August 27. O. P. Shrout, of Palmyra, Mo., did the preaching. Thirty-five confessed Christ. The meeting was dismissed and thirteen young men came forward and asked an opportunity to confess Christ. Brother Shrout held us the best meeting in the history of the church. The building has been remodeled and departments are progressing nicely.—John Meyer Asbell, pastor.

Moweaqua.—Evangelist H. A. Davis has begun a meeting. Seven added so far. Interest and audience good.

Normal, Aug. 31.—We have recently organized a local chapter of the Business Men's Association, and a Young Ladies' Missionary Circle, which promise added power to the church. We are preparing for a meeting in November, with John W. Marshall as evangelist. Ten added to the church during July and August. The Normal school opens September 11. Ministers knowing of young people coming from their community will do well to write to us. Robt. H. Newton.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Sept. 1.—One confession at Hillside church last Lord's day. Seven since last report. Work grows.—O. E. Tomes.

Center, Aug. 28.—Six added by baptism the first week.—E. L. Frazier.

New Albany, Aug. 30.—A thirteen days' meeting with the Chapel Hill congregation resulted in twelve accessions—eight by conversion, four by statement. Eighteen months ago I held my first meeting with this church, which resulted in twenty-four additions in ten days. Arthur G. Day, of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., is their hard working minister.—B. F. Cato.

Rochester.—I recently helped Brother Givler, pastor at the Second church, Terre Haute, for a few days in a tent meeting. I go to Grand Rapids, Wis., August 31, to preach for the newly organized church at that place and help them make ready for the state convention, to be held there September 19 to 22. I will be joined there by my singer and helper, Brother H. K. Shields, who is now assisting E. B. Barnes in a meeting at Fredericktown, Ohio.—C. H. DeVoe.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Broken Arrow, Aug. 28.—Three added to the membership here the last two Sundays, and one at Okemah the previous Sunday. I have never seen new work start off better than the Broken Arrow church. As another step forward we hope to have the Christian-Evangelist list soon enlarged here.—A. M. Harral.

IOWA.

Des Moines, Aug. 30.—Triumphant summer services. Great congregations. Twelve confessions and 26 letters received during July and August.

KANSAS.

Topeka, Aug. 28.—Aug. 20 Evangelists D. Y. Donaldson and Bert. I. Bentley closed a short meeting at Center Park church with three additions and the church much edified. Two confessions at regular services last night.—C. A. Polson, pastor.

Humboldt, Aug 29.—R. H. Tanksley is conducting a tabernacle meeting, assisted by J. J. Setliff, of Ottawa, and V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka. Two confessions and one by letter.

KENTUCKY.

Poplar Plains, Aug. 29.—Our meeting at Hilltop Christian church closed Sunday night, after ten days, with three confessions and baptisms. The field had been thoroughly worked of late. This community, much to its credit, is largely church holding and church going. The meeting was mutually helpful and enjoyable. Jos. R. Jones is their able minister.—Thos. B. Howe.

Owingsville.—I spent the week of Aug. 8-13 in Washington, D. C., whither I went to perform a marriage ceremony for my brother, J. Murray Taylor, and filled his pulpit Aug. 13. I began here Aug. 20 and have had 19 accessions the first week; will continue another week. Robt. M. Campbell is the beloved minister here.—J. J. Taylor, evangelist.

A CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the Spring of 1893 I was attacked by muscular and inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered as those who have it know, for over three years, and tried almost everything. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely and it has not returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and it effected a cure in every case. Anyone desiring to give this precious remedy a trial. I will send it free Write right now. Address

LOUISIANA.

Cheneyville, Aug. 28.—The church gave us a unanimous call to remain with them another year. Sixteen additions during our two weeks' meeting.—L. C. Wilson.

MISSOURI.

Canton, Sept. 1.—A two weeks' revival service, closing Aug. 24, resulted in nine additions to the congregation—eight by confession and baptism and one from the Baptists.

Warrensburg, Aug. 31.—I just closed a meeting at Kingsville, where my brother Phil is pastor, with five additions—three by obedience, two by statement. Since last report there have been nine additions at Rich Hill, four by obedience and one from the Baptists; at Lone Jack four, two by obedience.—King Stark.

Memphis, Aug. 30.—Two added to the church here last prayer-meeting night—one by obedience and one by letter. J. J. Taylor, a singer, is to assist us in a meeting in October. The Scotland county meeting was held at the Azen church Aug. 25 to 27. It was a splendid meeting; several hundred in attendance the last day. The speakers were M. J. Nicoson, R. G. Sears, C. A. Hicks, Paul Wright and Mrs. S. G. Bantz. Next meeting to be held at Arbela.—M. J. Nicoson.

Prairie Hill.—Have just closed a meeting of two weeks here. J. C. Creel, of Plattsburg, did most of the preaching. There were 17 additions to the congregation—eleven were baptized, four by commendation and two restored.—W. G. SURBER.

Lathrop, Aug. 28.—I closed a meeting at Bethel, six miles east of this place, on Sunday night. Enos Oatman, the beloved and efficient pastor, had the meeting well under way when the writer was called to assist him. Visible results were—12 baptisms, six by letter and one reclaimed.—J. G. CREASON.

Higginsville, Mo., Aug. 28.—I just closed a 12 days' meeting with the Macedonia church in Audrain county with 20 additions—17 by confession, two restored and one by letter. This is a strong country church. M. M. Shaw has been preaching for them one Sunday in the month for four years. They will have preaching half time next year.—J. H. COIL.

Cairo, Aug. 29.—I closed a few days' meeting at Salem, near Moberly, with two confessions and church strengthened. In a good meeting here. There have been five baptisms to date. This is my fifth meeting here and my sixth year as pastor. Bro. Willoughby Brundege, of Sturgeon, is the singing evangelist.—S. J. COPHER.

Kansas City, Aug. 28.—Six more additions at Louisburg Sunday—three by letter and three from the Baptists. The church tendered me a reception there Friday night. We have a successful work and a bright outlook.—C. L. FIFE.

Willmathsville, Aug. 28.—Meeting closed here last night resulting in 36 added and a church organized. One came to us from the M. E. church at the close. The day after the meeting closed one came from the M. E.'s, who will be received into church next Lord's day. The church has asked me to take up the work regularly; I have it under consideration.—W. T. CLARKSON, evangelist.

Freeman, Aug. 28.—Twelve to date in this meeting. A. O. Ishmael is pastor, and these good results are due to his devoted service. The meeting is in the second week. Our Yukon meeting closed with 27 added. The church is greatly strengthened and will succeed.—D. D. BOYLE, evangelist.

Ethel, Aug. 28.—I just closed a meeting with 33 additions—28 by confession and baptism, three reclaimed and two by letter. —J. M. RAMSEY.

Monett, Aug. 31.—Our meeting with Brother Harlow in command closed Lord's day evening with 50 additions—32 by confession and baptism, five by letter, 11 by statement and two from the denominations. There was much opposition.—ROBERT SIMONS, pastor.

Bethany, Aug. 22.—One baptism last Lord's day.—C. ORAHOOD.

Boydsville, Aug. 22.—Two by letter recently.—J. D. GREER.

Canton, Aug. 31.—A two weeks' meeting at Greensburg, with home forces, gave 28 added, 18 baptisms, nine by statement and one from the M. E.'s.—CLAUDE F. PEARCE, pastor.

Plattsburg, Sept. 1.—A meeting of 18 days at Highland, Livingston county, resulted in 15 additions—13 confessions and two reclaimed.—R. A. THOMPSON.

NEW YORK.

Buffalo, Aug. 21.—A young man responded to the gospel invitation last evening, and a man and his wife were baptized two weeks before. Four others also baptized not previously reported.—B. H. HAYDEN.

Buffalo, Aug. 28.—One added to our numbers yesterday. August audiences as good as during the winter season. Planning for a special effort in Sunday-school work. Mrs. Nettie McCorkle, our assistant pastor, is proving to be valuable help in this great field.—B. S. FERRALL.

NEW MEXICO.

Roswell, Aug. 28.—Two additions here yesterday, and one baptized who had previously made the good confession. During our vacation in the mountains 100 miles west of here, I preached twice; and as a result baptized three Presbyterians who were members of our camping party.—C. C. HILL.

OHIO.

Bellefontaine, Aug. 28.—One confession at the Bellefontaine, Ohio, church yesterday morning.—W. H. HEDGES.

Dayton, Aug. 28.—Three added yesterday at Central Church—one by confession, two by letter; twenty-three since last report.—I. J. CAHILL.

Sharon Center, Aug. 28.—I. H. Durfee is with us at East Granger in a splendid meeting, a week old, with three confessions. One added at Ghent by statement. —MEDARY GORSUCH.

Miami; Aug. Z8—The meeting at Macedonia church, which began August 6, closed on August 25—twenty days—with forty-three accessions to the church—thirty-two by confession and baptism, one restored and ten by letter or statement. W. F. Shearer, of Angola, Ind., did the preaching. The whole community was greatly stirred, and the church greatly revived and strengthened. An Endeavor Society will be organized at once.—J. A. ROBERTS.

Millwood, Aug. 28.—Evangelist E. B. Barnes, Noblesville, Ind., closed a four weeks' tent meeeting at Palmyra, August 27, with thirty accessions—mostly baptisms. He leaves church and pastor thinking more of one another than when he found them. The music was under the direction of H. H. Saunders and H. K. Shields, whose work was good.—A. E. MEEK, pastor.

OKLAHOMA.

Payson, Aug. 30.—A. B. Carpenter, of Apache, has held a two weeks' meeting and had 25 additions—17 by confession and baptism and eight by statement. The meeting will close to-night. Brother Carpenter will go to Frederick.—J. G. CANSLER, pastor.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Uniontown, Aug. 31.—Three baptisms last week. Our Bible-school completes its grading next Sunday. The prospect for better results is good. We shall have the primary, junior, intermediate, senior, young men's and young women's and assembly departments, besides the cradle roll and home class.—J. WALTER CARPENTER.

A MOTHER'S FAITH.—Matt. 15:21-28.

A Mother's Vision. Mark, in narrating this same incident, tells us that Jesus sought to keep his presence in the borders of Tyre and Sidon a secret, but that "He could not be hidden." It has ever been so. Jesus cannot be hidden when he enters any community, or home, or heart. The "Rose of Sharon" cannot bloom and not shed its fragrance abroad. But it was a mother's eye that first discovered him, or at least first sought a blessing at his hands. No vision is so keen as a mother's, and none can reach so far. She sees in the child possibilities that exceed the wildest dreams of others for him. She too, sees in the affliction or sin of her child the presence and influence of evil agencies, and would excuse his wrongdoing or minimize his fault.

A Mother's Prayer. "Have mercy on me, thou son of David." "Lord, help me." Thus does the mother ever identify her child with herself. The boon she asks is for her own heart, though the deed of healing must be performed upon her child. And why not? Has she not borne the child in her own body, nurtured it with her own blood? Is it not in truth a part of her very self? None but a mother can understand fully what this means. What is so sacred as a mother's prayer? How it follows after the wanderer, encouraging in time of trouble, rebuking in time of sin, cheering in the hour of repentance. Many a soul that otherwise would have been wrecked upon the rocks of temptation has found an anchor at the critical hour in the knowledge that mother was praying in his behalf.

A Mother's Faith. This incident stands alone in the life of Jesus as a seeming repulse to the cry for mercy. His language is almost cruel, as he reminds this Gentile mother that she and her people are but dogs in the estimation of the Jew, and that his mission is rather to the chosen people of Jehovah. But the tender pity of his face must have robbed his words of their keenest sting, or the poor creature could not have made the bold appeal that she might, like the dogs under the table, be given at least the crumbs, when the children have been fed. A mother cannot be easily discouraged in a matter that involves the life of her child. Pharaoh may command the slaying of every baby boy in Israel, and threaten direst penalty for disobedience, but the sweet face of Moses bids his mother and father to risk their lives to save his life (Heb. 11:23). The godly mother looks upon the life of her child as a gift from God, and she refuses no return that may be asked for this gracious gift. Like the mother of Samuel, she is ready to dedicate her child to the Lord.

A Mother's Reward. "Be it unto thee, even as thou wilt" Such is the answer to believing prayer. The daughter of the Canaanitish woman is healed. Hannah's son becomes the Lord's prophet and the righteous judge in Israel, because he early learns from the example of his mother's faith to reply to the call of Jehovah, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth" (1 Sam. 1:11, 27, 28; 3:1-14, 19-21). Oh, for more mothers whose prayers for their children shall ascend to the Lord like sweet incense, while they linger in the memory as the echo of God's voice, calling the footsteps back from the winding paths of sin into the narrow path of righteousness. Great is the reward of such a mother, in the lives of her children.

THE GREAT SURRENDER.— Acts 9:1-22; Rom. 6:16-23.

For the Leader.

We are now in the period of revivals in the churches. The vacation period is past. Home from the mountains; the seaside left for another year's work; the summer school, or whatever work we took through the summer months, left behind; we now come to settle down to an even stretch of life for a number of months. Shall these months be the best ones we have ever put in? If you are a Christian, how can this be so unless you do more than ever in the past for the cause of the Master? If you are not a Christian, how can the best thing, the best deed, of your life be postponed beyond this season? More work must characterize the Christian. A fuller obedience must characterize those who have not yet committed themselves to the Way. May this meeting be one in which we will dispense with readings as nearly as possible, or if we use them, follow the reading with a few words of comment. Let us speak out to one another from the heart.

For the Members.

1. What do we mean by the great surrender? There are many surrenders one might make in this life. One might submit to some ruling of his friend that would call upon him for considerable sacrifice; one might surrender some bad habit; one might give up some pleasure in order that he might be in a better position to help someone; one might make a surrender in almost an infinite number of ways, but what do we call the greatest surrender one can make? The surrender of oneself to Jesus Why do we call this the great surrender? I think we thus style it because it embraces all one's powers. The true surrender of the soul to Jesus is unconditional. There can be none greater in this respect.

2. It is the great surrender because of what it means to the one who surrenders. The future is full of promise to the humblest of God's children who has made this surrender. In a physical way, he has much to gain Those habits that have weakened his body can now be broken, yes, have been broken in the step to Jesus. Those vices that have weakened both body and mind are past. The new life will heal the wounds. In a financial way, how much will he now have that was once spent upon that which was not bread, and for that which satisfieth not. Sin is the most expensive thing in the world. A young man became a Christian and married. What he saved in the way of money once spent for tobacco, treats, and the little things that the fast crowd look upon as all right, was more than enough to keep house for two:

3. In our lesson to-night we have the case of Paul. Someone say, "It is no trouble for the boys and girls to become Christians, but for me it would mean so much." Well, consider how much it meant to Saul to make the surrender you are called upon to make. He was a grown man. He held official position as a Jew. All his education and training had been for the line he was following when he was halted and asked to surrender. When you think of surrendering, do you think of what those who have been your associates in sin would say? What do you think Saul thought the Jews would say? We know what they must have said, but Saul did not care for this more than he did for the things his Lord would say and think. He counted all the past loss, if it must be so, in order that he might obtain the future riches. In doing this Saul made a choice that did not lose him any good thing in the run of his whole life. He got in another kind far more than he gave up. But this did not appear so to him at the time of the surrender. He only knew then that he was injuring and grieving the Lord. He surrendered as one who had been doing wrong, as one who had been in a rebellion against the highest power. As we to-day look upon Paul's life we can see that he is known, and that his influence is felt to a far greater extent than it would ever have been had he continued in the old way. It would have been a losing battle as the years went on.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Am I giving all my powers to him to whom I surrendered?

DANIEL IN BABYLON.—Dan 1:8-20.

(Temperance Lesson.)

Memory verses, 16,17.

Golden Text.—Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself.—Dan. 1:8.

Daniel was one of the favorite heroes of the Jews of post-exilic times. As a young man of their own stock who had won renown and acquitted himself creditably in the most important circles in the court of the conqueror, his personality became the point about which there was a natural accretion of stories and hero tales. So, just as later times embellished the biography of Solomon with many fantastic and legendary incidents illustrating his wisdom and his magical control over men and nature, so there was an accumulation of episodes of which Daniel was the hero, illustrating his virtue and sagacity. Two apocryphal narratives are found in close connection with our book of Daniel. One of them, "Bel and the Dragon," tells how Daniel killed a terrible monster and delivered the people from the fear of it (rather a Greek motive, it seems,) while the other, "The Story of Susanna," relates how Daniel as a just and shrewd judge saved an innocent woman from undeserved punishment.

Daniel was carried into Babylon about 20 years before the fall of Jerusalem and perhaps ten years before the transportation of the first large body of exiles with the captive king Jehoiakim. Those who were taken at this time were youths of high rank and pleasing person, and the purpose was partly to hold them as hostages for the good behavior of Judah in relation to Babylon and partly to teach them the customs and language of Babylon so that they might return and spread these among their own people, to the end that the subject peoples might be amalgamated into one thoroughly Babylonian empire. The young men were to be made the instruments for winning their own people away from their peculiar practices. Such a task, in the case of the chosen people of God, would have a distinctly anti-religious significance. The conduct of these youths and the degree to which they allowed themselves to be conformed to the pattern of the heathen gentleman, as conceived at the court of Babylon, had a bearing far wider than their own individual fortunes and characters.

The temptation which was presented to Daniel came in a peculiarly subtle form. It was not a violent attack upon his faith. It was no threat of persecution, such as might rouse the latent heroism even of a dullard. It was temptation presented under the guise of hospitality and solicitude for his own welfare. Eating the king's meat does not seem a great offense. The worst that we can make of it is that it involved a possible eating of meats forbidden as unclean by the Jewish law, or of meats that had been strangled, or of meats that had been killed in sacrifice to some idol. But what the act stood for was a matter of greater significance. It was a part of a regime which was intended to win Daniel and his associates away from their own people and make good Babylonians out of them.

In considering this incident as the text for a temperance lesson, it will be well to point out the fact that some things whcih are not wrong "in themselves," as we say, may have relations and entanglements which make them dangerous and worth keeping away from.

There is no evidence that, as a matter of history, the scheme of instilling Babylonian ideas and customs into the Jews through the agency of young men trained in Babylon, produced the desired effect. Of course, the transportation of the mass of the people a few years later rendered the continuance of the first plan unnecessary, but even when the whole nation was in captivity in the very midst of its heathen conquerors, it resisted contamination surprisingly well. The example of such men as Daniel doubtless had much to do with it.

It is not necessary, in considering this lesson, to take up at any length the question as to the date of the book of Daniel. On its face, it purports to have been written during the early part of the captivity. A large part of the book is made up of prophecies of events which transpired between that time and the middle of the second century B. C. The prophecies of the events later than this are vague and general. For this and other reasons it is held by many that the book is a product of the Maccabean age, written probably between 167 and 165 B. C., when the Syrian rulers of Palestine were subjecting the Jews to every indignity, defiling the temple and attempting to paganize the rising generation. In this case the example of Daniel, who resisted the temptations of the court of Babylon, would be particularly pertinent and timely. Assigning the late date to the book also involved considering the prophetic passages of the book as history in the guise of prophecy rather than as genuine prophecy.

THE TRUE ESTIMATE OF LIFE AND HOW TO LIVE. By G. Campbell Morgan. (Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago. Price $.80 net, 240 pages.)

Mr. Morgan is one of the sanest of preachers of the evangelistic type. He has the advantage of having had a good college education and of the discipline of a city pastorate. Hence there is more than usual of the literary finish to his sermons even when they have as their object and particular aim the winning of souls. This book is made up of nine chapters that are really sermons. They are practical and contain some admirable advice, while they do not lack in interest. Mr. Morgan has the happy faculty of saying things pointedly.

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST. By a Layman. (Funk & Wagnalls Co. New York and London. 1905. 12 mo. Cloth. 336 pages. $1.00 net.)

The first impression one feels in reading this volume is the wish that more laymen would write religious books! This unknown author gets right at what he wants to say, and says it. He is evidently an independent thinker and his views of the church of Christ run directly across theological and ecclesiastical lots without so much as saying, "By your leave." He seems to have the old-fashioned idea that what Christ and the apostles say, on the subjects he treats, is an end of controversy. Whoever the author may be, it is manifest that he is a student of the Bible and especially of the New Testament, and that his ideas are derived from that book rather than from any theological treatises he may have read. The revolutionary character of his teaching may be inferred from the fact that he marks with clearness the dispensational lines, locates the beginning of the church on Pentecost, ascertains what he calls "the Law of Pardon" from an inductive examination of all the cases of pardon recorded in the New Testament, advocates the restoration of the ordinances to their original place, and would displace our present multiform ecclesiastical systems with the simple congregationalism of the New Testament. There is not a line or a sentence that indicates the author's ecclesiastical connection, except as it may be inferred from his fidelity to the New Testament. The closing chapters deal with Christian unity, which he believes is imperative in order to the conversion of the world, condemns denominationalism as contrary to the spirit and teaching of the New Testament, and the volume ends with a splendid eulogy on Christ, entitled "The Uniqueness of Jesus," in which the Author of Christianity is contrasted with other religious teachers. The author not only quotes scriptures freely but he states his positions mainly in scriptural language, and thus makes it very awkward for any religious gladiator to antagonize his positions. We note a few sentences here and there concerning the place of prayer and the work of the Holy Spirit which we would question or modify, but on the whole the work is a most valuable one and ought to have a wide circulation.

OUR LIFE AFTER DEATH, OR THE TEACHING OF THE BIBLE CONCERNING THE UNSEEN WORLD. By Rev. Arthur Chambers, Associate of Kings College, London, Vicar of Brockenhurst, Hampshire, England. (Philadelphia, Geo. W. Jacobs and Co., Publishers. Price $1.25.)

The very title of this book is one that appeals strongly to a large class of readers. To know something definite concerning the life unseen whither we are going is certainly a natural as it is a most laudable desire. The theme offers a wide field for the speculative mind, but after all, we are shut up, as to actual knowledge, to what is revealed in the New Testament.

In the emphasis which this work gives to the intermediate state or the time intervening between death and the future resurrection, our author goes back rather to a phase of thought that has been passed by by most thinkers on this subject. This he does, however, in order to make room for certain views which he afterwards elaborates, ultimating in universal salvation. There is much in the book, however, to strengthen faith and quicken our hope apart from its ultimute conclusion concerning the salvation of the entire race. Such conclusions as that "there will be no break in the continuity of our existence in passing from the earth life to the Hades life," and that in Hades or the unseen world "we shall recognize and be remembered in the relationship with those whom we have previously known in the earth life," and that "there are different spheres of experience in the Hades life," and that "the work of perfecting and developing will go on in the Hades life," seem to be entirely warranted by scripture and by reason. His fifth deduction—"that there is a preaching of Christ's gospel in the intermediate life which warrants us in believing that the work of saving mankind is extended beyond the grave," is one that antagonizes the generally accepted or orthodox view on this subject. However, that Christ preached to the spirits in prison after his death is a clear affirmation of the apostle Peter, however much the passage may have been tortured to yield another conclusion. Our author, however, seems to base a larger conclusion on this fact than would seem to be warranted. If it be a fact that those having had no opportunity to learn of Christ or of his redemption in this life have such opportunity offered them after death, it does not follow, if there is any sort of analogy between human nature before and after death, that all will accept Christ who hear of him, and any dogmatic conclusion to that effect seems to us unauthorized by the scriptures and contrary to what we know of human nature. No doubt theologians have built arguments upon certain Greek words to show the everlastingness of punishment which cannot endure the test of sound criticism, and our author shows this in his dealing with the word aionios and its cognates; but the supremacy of the human will in the matter of determining one's destiny is a fact which cannot be ignored.

Labor Is Prayer.

What should I ask of God?
To come? He is here.
He is here and now in me. It is him that I feel.
I, feeling, am that much God.
To give? He has given, is giving, gives.
The flow and the pulse of things,
Each step and quiver of life is full of God.
Should an egg pray to be given? Nay to be hatched.
And will hatch, pray or not, if alive.
If it were ready, willing, only the shell not broken
It had better peck than be praying.
What should I ask of God?
God, who pushes and pushes
With the tides of the whole creation.
He might ask me for something—
Namely, to get a move on—
To let him through and not hinder!
God is not slow or deficient.
He does not need a reminder.
He is strictly attending to business.
Still, things don't work as they ought to—
Something does ail the procession—
It wavers, sticks and drops backward.
Well, what ails the procession?
Some men stopping and waiting,
Some men wriggling backwards,
And praying—or urging to praying—
That God will move the procession!
Would you be wound up like a puppet?
Marionettes of high heaven?
Or like a recalcitrant baby,
Dragged by the arms—heels rebellious!
Pray to yourself—that you travel!
Or—without praying—just travel!

A Helpful Experience.

By Rev. Frank E. Sleeper.

James Gordon felt called of God to preach. He had a fine physique, was social, brilliant and popular. He was just completing his college course and must soon choose his life work.

His pastor, with whom he was very intimate, and to whom he had told his feelings, said to him, "I want you to deliver the sermon for me next Sunday evening. And in all probability the church will vote you a license to preach."

James entered the pulpit that Sunday evening with fear and trembling. It was announced in the weekly paper and in the church bulletin that he would preach. The news had gone like wildfire all through the large village where he was born, had grown up to manhood and had prepared for college at the academy, and the church was thronged.

It was a curiosity crowd. Not for many years had any young man from that community gone forth as a preacher of the gospel. It was a novel and exciting experience to hear one whom they had known from infancy deliver a message from God. Yet a great host of true friends was eager to encourage James in the success they felt sure would be his.

How the good old pastor, before the sermon, prayed for him that all embarrassment might be removed, that he might be filled with heaven's inspiration and that he should know that he was chosen as an ambassador for Jesus Christ.

"Well," thought James during the impressive prayer, "I am now face to face with my opportunity. I shall succeed or fail. I have my fully written manuscript with me, I ought to do well." He did not know that the Lord had an all important life lesson to teach him that evening.

The text was announced and James began his sermon. There was breathless stillness through all the large audience. He had prepared his discourse with the greatest care that there should be no weakness in it. Its every truth was made clear and burned to the deepest in his spiritual nature.

But what was the trouble with the written page before him? The lights were all right, shining brightly; but the lines he wanted did not meet his eye. Page after page it was the same. The discourse was delivered purely from memory.

It was a time of awful suffering for the young and inexperienced beginner. James thought "If this is preaching I surely am not called to preach. Am I talking sense or nonsense?" Yet the impressive stillness continued. The congregation was listening spellbound. They were delightfully surprised with such precious, thrilling truth phrased in glowing sentences with chaste rhetoric.

James did not know himself that evening. It was inward despair but outward victory. He felt humiliated in the dust, but his friends were rejoicing in his great success. The last hymn was sung. The pastor had pronounced the benediction. The audience was slowly going out of the church. But expressions were heard on every hand, "Wasn't that fine?' "How magnetic he is in the pulpit!" "What an eloquent and convincing preacher he will become!"

James hurried to the vestry sad and sore at heart. He felt unwilling to face anyone. He was tasting the dregs of bitterness. The good pastor who knew him so well followed him.

"What ails you, James?" he inquired. "One would think by your countenance that you were just at a funeral instead of preaching a most inspiring sermon."

"Oh, pastor, I made a perfect botch of that discourse!"

"You did not."

"I lost my place in mv manuscript more than forty times."

"Then I advise you to lose your place forty times every sermon."

"What do you mean, pastor? I do not understand you. This evening has been a time of the most awful suffering to me. I feel like hiding my head where no one will ever see me."

"James," the pastor said with great emphasis, "you are entirely wrong feeling that way. You had read that discourse to me, I knew what was coming; but what surprised and delighted me was your great freedom from the manuscript. Your eyes seemed on the people all of the time. This added very much to the effectiveness of your sermon. James, you are to thank God that in his great love he has bestowed on you the large gift of a wonderful memory."

As James bade the pastor "Good-night," thanking him for his kind words, and was passing out of the vestry door, he found at the outer door some young friends waiting to see him. "We could not go," they said, "without telling you how we enjoyed your sermon and how deeply it moved us. It was a feast to our souls. And, oh, James, what a splendid memory you have to give that fine discourse without reading your manuscript! We thought for quite a while that you had no notes until we saw you move some of the leaves. May God bless you in all your future life work." "And with a hearty handshake they left him.

The young preacher was in a strait betwixt two. He had been overwhelmed with sadness and discouragement. But the kind words of pastor and true friends were like sunshine. He could not disbelieve them. They were too honest to deceive him and too capable to be mistaken.

As he walked to his home he found a great question in his mind, "Do I know myself as well as others know me? Have I any right to be so cast down when true

Classen, 124 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905. I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. friends utter such words of encouragement? Shall I not trust both my friends and God?"

After he had retired to bed that eventful Sunday night thought was busy. He could not sleep and did not want to sleep. He began in the darkness going over his discourse. All of the sentences of that sermon in their exact order came to him like so many glad angels.

As he was conscious of this fact he said in his heart, "Oh, God, I thank thee; I will make memory a part of my pulpit power consecrating it unto Jesus Christ."

The next few days as he met his friends honest compliments were showered upon him. He had every reason to be grateful. He said. "Out of the bitter has come the sweet: out of the darkness has come the snushine. I was utterly cast down but God lifted me up."

During James Gordon's course in the theological seminary he made a specialty of training his memory. He became a living incarnation of the books he studied and could give at any moment expression to the great thoughts he mastered. The other students envied him. He said, "Love memory as I do. Discipline and trust memory as I do and you will find it the best servant you ever had."

Since his ordination James has been pastor of two large churches. He carefully writes at least one discourse every week. He never carries his manuscript to the pulpit. As he stands before his audience every great truth comes to his mind with infallible assurance.

The people have said over and over, "What beautiful, spiritual, living sermons you give us! How can you think so finely on your feet when talking?" In reply he has told many times his experience that strange evening, how it led him out into one of the best acquirements of his life.

He soon learned to repudiate the strictly memoriter method finding that it was far better to hold clearly in his mind the thoughts rather than the words of his sermon. This afforded him wonderful spontaneity of manner with precision of language. He was not a slave to the written sentences but was entirely the master of his theme as he stood before his audience.

If more pastors would make memory their fully obedient servant it were far better. The theological seminaries at the present are sending out preachers who do not speak from the manuscript in the pulpit. They write with greatest care. They absorb and master the clear thought, and as the minister in the sacred desk is face to face with his congregation his soul is all on fire with heavenly inspiration. Such preaching is ideal. He is not a slave to the written page.—The Watchman.

Most Effective Workers Do Not Hurry.

The task to which we devote ourselves may overwhelm us by its very growth, and the man may be swallowed up in his own success. The real failures in the industrial world are seldom recorded in Bradstreet; they are the cases of men whose revenues are advancing while their souls are shriveling; the men who are making money, but losing peace of mind, health of body, and love of home; the men who are driven through anxious days and sleepless nights by the interests and anxieties of their own creation. The restless Viking blood is in our veins, our climate acts like whip and spur, and "keep moving" is the direction posted at every corner of the modern city. Is the college man to be simply one more hurrying figure in the whirling crowd, or is he to take his place in the procession with the quietness and self-control of one who marches to a far-off goal, keping time to a celestial music? The most efficient workers of the modern world are those who will not be hurried. The most enduring results come not from nervous, frantic effort, but from calmness of spirit, from the play of great motives, and the vision of the "pattern in the mount." Precisely here is the great need of American life.

What Happens in a Solar Eclipse.

In these days of popular astronomy for the million it seems scarcely necessary to describe at length what a solar eclipse means. Suffice it to say that it is a temporary blanketing of the sun by the moon, coming between it and the earth. Both the sun and the moon are of the same apparent size, but at times the moon, in her orbit, seems to be decidedly the larger and if then the moon passes exactly between the earth and the sun a total solar eclipse ensues and is visible as such at those portions of the earth within the shadow-track, and as a partial eclipse along a broad strip on either side of this.

The shadow thrown on a blank wall by any globular body held between a lighted lamp and the wall is a simple and homely illustration of an eclipse. The shadow will be seen to be much darker in the middle than at the edges, and the former is known scientifically as the umbra, while the lesser haze is termed the penumbra. If the observer now so stations himself that his eye views the globular body from the center of the umbra, the lamp is seen to be entirely hidden, but when viewed from the penumbra, part of the lamp is visible. Such is precisely what happens in a solar eclipse. For two or three minutes the moon completely hides the sun, and the light of the latter is shut off from the observers on this earth; but because of the distance the three planets are from one another, the shadow of the moon is cast on only a small portion of the earth's surface. Where the eclipse is total, or almost so, the light enjoyed at the greatest phase, or middle of eclipse, will be similiar to that of a bright moonlight night.—American Monthly Review of Reviews.

"Unsung Heriosm."

To smile when the heart is breaking,
  Concealing inward pain,
To plow in the thorny pathways,
  Through sun and mist and rain.

To lighten a comrade's burden
  By whispering words of cheer,
Dispersing the clouds of sorrow
  That heaven may appear.

To learn to be self-denying,
  Unwilling to repine,
The soul ever upward striving
  To win the peace divine.

These noble earthly struggles
  With glory shall adorn
Their heroes—bequeathing memories

He Can Save His Buttons.

A Pittsburg paper says: Nearly 500 persons, besides the regular congregation, heard yesterday morning's sermon preached by Rev. Dr. S. Edward Young in the Second Presbyterian Church, Pittsburg, by means of the junophone just placed therein and connected with the telephone service of Greater Pittsburg and the surrounding territory.

"Gee! That's great!" said a small boy whose mother has had much trouble in getting him to church, after listening to an anthem by the choir. "I wouldn't mind going to church if I could go over the telephone. And, say, ma, they can't pass the plate over the wire, can they?"

Johnny's Composition on Tobacco.

Tobacco grows something like a cabbage, but I never saw none cooked. I have heard men say that cigars that was given them on election day for nothing was mostly cabbage leaves. Tobacco stores are mostly kept by wooden Injuns, who stand at the door and offer them a bunch of cigars, which is glued into the Injun's hand and is made of wood also. I tried to smoke a cigar once, and I felt like Epsom salts. Tobacco was invented by a man named Walter Raleigh. When the people first saw him smoking they thought he was a steamboat and was frightened. My sister Nancy is a girl. I don't know whether she likes tobacco or not. There is a young man named Leroy who comes to see her. He was standing on the steps one night and he did not know as she would like it, and she said, "I think the perfume is agreeable." But when my big brother Tom lighted his pipe Nancy said, "Go out of this house, you horrid creature, the smell of the tobacco makes me sick."

About Taxing Bachelors.

The mere statement that there are 1,638,321 more men in the United States than women seems to be excuse enough for the bachelor; and yet some of the states have already introduced legislative bills taxing or fining bachelors for their "obstinacy," and others are threatening similar action. Very well, then, the bachelors may say, if you will have us married provide the brides. Where, may we ask, are 1,638,321 brides to be found? Must you go across seas for them and pick them from the blue-eyed and golden-haired German girls or the dark-orbed, raven-tressed girls of Italy? And perhaps they won't come. They prefer their own countrymen for husbands; and they don't want to come to America, anyway. The taxation of bachelorhood into matrimony may disorder our whole social system. If all the men and women in the country are paired off by law, there will still be 1,638,321 odd men who can't be paired. Some of them may get angry about it. If the state governments are going to run a marriage bureau all voters will demand their rights. Why should one man be married and not another? Why should the state foster happy wedded bliss for one citizen and pay no attention to another? There would be a revolution. Let the states go pretty slow aboout taxing bachelors. The bachelors can't help it. The statistics prove it.—Globe-Democrat.

A man who was much annoyed at his mutterings one day said:

"Say, does it ever occur to you that your constant talk and muttering to yourself are a great annoyance to people who happen to be about? Why do you talk so much to yourself?"

"Shure, sir, I have two raysons for that."

"What are they?"

Quid Pro Quo.

Rear-Admiral Charles S. Cotton sat one evening at a dinner-party beside the Bishop of Durham, a clergyman noted for his wit. Near the bishop there was a millionaire manufacturer, a stout man, with a loud, coarse laugh, who cracked, every little while, a stupid joke. One of these was leveled at the brilliant Bishop of Durham, whom he did not know from Adam. It was enough for him that the bishop's garb was clerical. Here was a parson; here, therefore, a chance to poke a little fun at the parson's trade.

"I have three sons," he began in a loud tone, nudging his neighbor and winking toward the bishop, "three fine lads. They are in trade. I have always said that if I ever had a stupid son I'd make a parson of him."

The millionaire roared out his discordant laugh, and the Bishop of Durham said to him, with a quiet smile, "Your father thought differently from you, eh?"

The Fifth Avenue Parade.

It is refreshing to find something in these days that does not bear a price tag. It is the fashion of our materialistic times to put it upon everything. "It costs so much to live," is the universal complaint of men and women who are spending all the money they can by any means make—and spending, too, powers far more precious than money—for the mere outward accessories of modern existence while misssing, too often, the realities of life.

For that is the sad part of the situation. It is forever "Pay! Pay! Pay!" and yet get nothing that is worth while. Contrast the prophet's terms of entrance into the best society—the society of the true, the pure and the noble—with the cost of indulgence in the fads and fancies of the "smart" set. These are very modern words which the prophet spoke: "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not?" Any one who has seen with discerning eyes the Easter parade on Fifth avenue, or that larger and more cosmopolitan one on the board walk at Atlantic City, is ready to quote the wise man's words, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity," or those other words, "The whole world walketh in a vain show." It's an outward seeming which gives no inward joy. To-day everybody who can do so goes away on a vacation, and cynical observers often remark that the main object sought is not the pleasure or profit of the outing, but merely the empty vanity of being able to conform to fashion and of having the experience to brag about to less fortunate neighbors. The sheer foolishness and emptiness of much of the life of the times that is consuming much of the spirit's blood of people for whom their Maker planned better things, is enough to make the angels weep.

The Weather Man Saves Money.

In spite of the standing jokes about the weather man, it is probable that for every dollar spent on the weather bureau ten dollars are saved. At the time of the Mississippi flood of 1897 $15,000,000 worth of live stock and other property were saved as a result of warnings issued a week ahead. Signals displayed for a single hurricane have detained in port vessels valued, with their cargoes, at $20,000,000. The West Indian stations, established in 1898, inform us of hurricanes as soon as they begin. The Galveston flood was charted for a week before it struck our shores—for hurricanes move slowly. Eighty-five per cent of the forecasts now come true, and by the aid of rural free delivery 25,000,000 forecast cards were distributed last year to farmers, many of whom could not have had them five years ago.—Country Life in America.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Bedtime.

Last year my bedtime was at eight,
  And every single night
I used to wish the clock would wait,
  Or else stay out of sight.
It always seemed to me
The next half hour'd be
  The nicest time of all the day
If mother would agree.
But she always shook her head,
And she sort of jumped, and said:
  "Why, it's late—after eight—
And it's time you were in bed!"

That clock would always do its best
  To sit all quiet there,
Until I was my comfyest
  In some big easy chair.
Then its striking would begin,
And I'd tell my motherkin
  How I'd just begun a chapter, and
It was so int'restin'—
And the end was just ahead—
But she usually said:
  "No, it's late—after eight—
And it's time to go to bed!"

And now my bedtime is ha'-past,
  But yet that old clock does
The same mean tricks—it's just as fast,
  Or faster than it was.
Last night it seemed to me
The next half-hour'd be
  The nicest time of all the day
If mother would agree.
But she smiled and shook her head,
And kissed me while she said:
  "Why, it's late—ha'-past eight—
And it's time you went to bed!"

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE FIFTH DAY (CONTINUED)

At dinner Mace sat between Ed and Jennie. The young man did his utmost to make her enjoy the meal and only half his efforts would have insured success. In the warmth of his friendliness, Mace expanded like a bud exposed to the balmy airs of June. Not since she had come to the village had she been so bright, so happy, so attractive. Her mother seemed to increase an inch or so in stature when regarding her. Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney was just as proud, though in a different way, of Jennie. It is true Jennie scarcely spoke a word, and those she uttered might just as well have been left unsaid; it is true, she could not play, or paint, or draw, or embroider, or to speak largely, do anything but spell her name with a "y." But she was pretty and dainty, and her clothes were expensive and in the very best taste and in the latest style which had come from Kansas City. The meal was in full progress when Mr. G. C. D. Woodney entered hastily. He shook hands all around and took his place at the foot of the table. He was a large, heavy set man with a red face, a double chin, a flat head and shrewd eyes. He said how glad he was to meet his relations once more, regretted that he had been too busy to drop around to see them, and asked to be excused for not coming to the house sooner. "I never have a minute I can call my own, and that is a fact," he said. "The farm is so large and I am running so many interests on it at once, especially at this season, that I go without my breakfast nearly every day. We are up here at the dawn, and as soon as I dress I go out on the place. The family sees nothing of me till dinner time, and then my lunch is generally brought to me. Cattle and sheep and hogs and horses and the crops, and a very extensive orchard, and bees and fencing and draining—busy life, cousin Benjamin, busy life!" As soon as he ceased speaking Mr. G. C. D. Woodney dropped his head close to his plate and began to eat with marvelous expedition.

"Cousin George, you will break yourself down," remonstrated Mr. Woodney earnestly. "A man can't stand such a strain as that, year after year. It is fifteen years since I last saw you, but I remember you were even then going half the time without your breakfast and coming in at night after the birds had gone to their nests."

During this speech Mr. G. C. D. Woodney had disposed of a good part of the contents of his plate. He now disposed of a cup of coffee, apparently in one gulp, passed it up to be refilled, and said: "I know it, cousin Benjamin, and I'm going to rest in a few years. Everything is getting in shape now for a rest. But you see the result of my digging and toiling—a thousand acres of my own, well stocked. While other men were taking their ease, I have been building up a fortune for my family. There may be a way to make money on the flat of your back, but I haven't found out how to do it." Having thus spoken, he bent to his plate again, helped himself to more cymlings without loooking at the dish, and swallowed the rest of his ham. Mr. Woodney, fearing he would be done and gone before he could broach a subject dear to his heart, began rather hastily.

"But, cousin George, some things are not to be obtained by digging and toiling. Are you sure you are enjoying the best of life? I am greatly grieved to find no church in the village. I have set myself the joyous task of rebuilding the one that was burned."

G. C. D. Woodney raised his head, while his fork was poised for immediate use. "If you call that a joyous task, cousin Benjamin, how would you like to come out here and grub some of my weeds for relaxation?" He chuckled in a smothered fashion and fell hastily to work again.

"The church will never be rebuilt," spoke up Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney. "There is too much dissension. I would not bother about it. We are doing very nicely without it. People were always wrangling when they had it."

"I shall work to rebuild it," cried Mr. Woodney stoutly, "and I have already begun taking subscriptions."

"If you put up the kind of church I belong to," said G. C. D. Woodney, "I'm your man. But a union affair I won't stand. I'll not help support a church where other denominations are teaching their false doctrines. I'd consider it wicked."

"This is my plan," said Mr. Woodney; "a church where the scripture will be read, and prayers be offered, and sermons preached without attacks on any denomination. The word of God will be our standard, and each preacher will expound his text to the best of his ability and love. He will explain the Bible as he understands it, but just as if he did not know there were any denominations in the world. He will not have the idea of fighting other Christians, or hammering down false doctrines, or upholding a peculiar tenet of some creed. He'll just preach religion."

"That won't suit me," said Mr. G. C. D. Woodney. "I want my doctrines preached and wrong doctrines riddled with bullets. I like for a preacher to be somewhat of an Indian. I want fight in him; fight and craft. I don't believe you'll get your church built; I like pure, straight, strong religion; I've no use for a kind of religious Kentucky burgoo."

"But would you rather have no church at all?"

"That's just what I'd rather. Yes, sir! They were always worrying me like a dog does a rat about expenses, when the church was on its legs. Looked like it had to be nursed continually to keep it out of debt. Now you all will please excuse me, for I must run back to the hayfield."

"There is ice cream, George," suggested his wife.

"Ice cream!" retorted G. C. D. Woodney, contemptuously. "It would be dear ice cream to me to sit here eating it, and those harvest hands slacking in their work and telling anecdotes in a thousand words before coming to the point—so small it gets lost in the rubbish. Good-by, all of you, and come again whenever you can. Glad to have you here at any time." Mr.

G. C. D. Woodney hurried from the house.

"Cousin Benjamin," said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, "has anybody promised you any money on the rebuilding of the church?"

"I have just started into the enterprise," said Mr. Woodney, "but I am greatly encouraged. Yes, we have a hundred dollars promised by Mrs. Enderthorpe."

"Now, hear that!" exclaimed Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, reddening with displeasure. "Those people have no right to give away a hundred dollars. They have no right to be keeping that orphan on her one crutch. They are as poor as church mice! Positively, it is a crime in them. They owe it to society to save something to keep them off of the county in their old age."

"David says he never saw the children of the righteous begging bread," remarked old Mrs. Woodney.

"Those Enderthorpes have only twenty acres in the world, and it's rented!" cried the other. "You oughtn't to let them give that hundred dollars."

"It is their privilege," said Mr. Woodney.

"Then we'll give a hundred dollars, too!" cried Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, her eyes snapping. "If the Enderthorpes can give a hundred dollars we'd be ashamed not to give something."

"Then I have three hundred dollars, for Mr. Winterfield promised to give as much as cousin George."

"Oh, did he! I understand Mr. Winterfield—he knew George wouldn't give a cent," said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, "unless I made him. But I'll make him. The Enderthorpes, indeed! Put us down for one hundred dollars. And considering George's religious views and the expense we are at every day with this farm, I think that generous, don't you?"

"No," said Mr. Woodney mildly, "I do not."

"At any rate, it is not foolish—not reckless—not criminal like Mrs. Enderthorpe's giving!"

"Certainly it is not, cousin Lucy," responded the other, pleased to be able to agree with her. When supper was over, Mace was asked to play on the new piano. Ed got his mandolin to play with her, but in the middle of the first piece one of his strings broke.

"I'll run over to the store and buy another," he said. "It will take but a minute. Come on, Mace, don't you want the walk? Jennie, get your hat."

"Oh, no," said Jennie, looking down the road from her window. "It's too much trouble."

"They won't sell anything after six o'clock," Mace suggested.

"Nonsense!" returned Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney. "Just double your offer and you can buy out that store. Money'll do it! Are you going, Mace? Jennie, you'd better go, too."

"Oh, no, ma," returned Jennie, nestling back in her chair, "I'd get my white shoes dusty crossing the road, and besides, I don't like to go to the store. I don't like those Wrens. Mace can go."

"We'll just get a mandolin string," said Ed, "and be right back."

"It is so pleasant," said Mace following him to the porch, "I won't want my hat."

"Of course not. Come on. Mace, you're jolly!" He gave her a nod of approval and her heart danced. They started down the granitoid walk between the drives. The family came out on the porch to see them off, with the exception of Jennie, who watched from her window. "Let's run!" said Ed suddenly.

"Let's!" retorted Mace, her cheeks rosy, her eyes laughing. He caught her hand and they sped down the walk with increasing swiftness. They reached the gate panting and laughing. Mace caught the gate and hung upon it limply, Ed danced before her with a strenuous but futile attempt to maintain a solemn countenance. His efforts at solemnity increased her merriment. "Are you rested?" he asked, suddenly pausing. "Come on, then. Down past the Winterfields—no, don't let's go by there, Marcia and her sisters will expect me to stop and talk. Let's sneak across the road to the old church lot."

"Marcia Winterfield's sisters are in the yard watching us," whispered Mace.

"Don't look their way. They are awfully tiresome. When they begin to talk, they just bubble along without ever running dry, and you can't cork 'em up, it wouldn't be polite, you know. Here's the school house. By the way, pa is the president of the school board. He got a telegram to-day saying the new teacher won't be here for three weeks. Some kind of contagious disease. Isn't that splendid? You won't have to go to school till I start off to college. We'll see worlds of each other!"

"But I expected to start to school in a week!" cried Mace.

"Oh, come, now! Wouldn't you rather be with me?" He looked at her with laughing eyes, but Mace grew suddenly grave. "Cousin Ed," she replied, "you seem so nice and good and kind—"

"I'm just that nice," he declared.

"Are you? I can't help wondering if you really are. Let me tell you what I am always thinking about. Will you be offended?"

"I'll not be offended at you, Mace, whatever you say."

"Won't you? Thank you. I am always thinking about the evening I saw you go to the saloon."

"Oh—bother!" cried Ed ruefully. "Did you see me, sure enough? Now, that's my luck!"

Mace smiled in spite of herself, but she was very much in earnest. "It isn't because I saw you that I am troubled," she returned.

"Well, that's what troubles me," retorted Ed. This time she didn't smile, and the young man, observing it, continued, "Look here, Mace, you don't look at saloons as we folks do, so I hardly like to tell you why I went there that day. You won't like it. But after all, there was not the least harm in the world. If you could only understand it, you'd see it was all right."

"I am glad to hear you say so," said Mace, very much relieved. "I was afraid you went there to—"

"Just to get a drink," Ed assured her. "That was all."

"Oh, cousin Ed. That was what I thought!"

"But it was beer, Mace, nothing but beer. You see we fellows at the university sort of fall into the habit of a glass of beer to be sociable, and when I come down to this hole of a village—well, I keep it up—because I'm lonesome. Beer is just as good when you're lonesome as when you're with friends."

"I have something to say to you," said Mace, looking up into his face with her direct gaze, and her full, sweet mouth set with firm purpose, "before we go back to your mother's."

"Well, don't say it now," urged Ed. "I see it's unpleasant to you, so don't let's spoil our walk till we are nearly at the end of it." Mace did not reply and they walked on in silence.

The Riots in Tokio. It is a pity that the Japanese at home can not conduct themselves as admirably as their fellow-countrymen in the field and the council chamber have done. The riots which broke out in Tokio on the announcement of the terms of peace, have continued for more than a week, with serious loss of life. The Japanese proletariat is convinced that their government was entitled to indemnity (and so it was) and to territorial concessions. It is drunk with pride over Japan's sudden entrance into the ranks of the first-class military powers, and it exhibits its pride and patriotism now by demonstrations which suggest that Japan is not so civilized as we thought she was. But let us be charitable. There have been riots even in this country. So there have been in Great Britain. It is a matter of credit that the people take a deep interest in the affairs of the government and would rather shed more blood and pay more taxes than make what they consider an unfavorable and unfair peace. We think they are mistaken in their estimate of the terms agreed upon, but their position is far more defensible than that of the Czar during the negotiations. He was determined to sacrifice thousands of other lives (not his own) and millions of money (to be paid by others) rather than make too dear a peace, while they are willing to pay the price of continued war rather than accept humiliating terms.

The Bishop's Saloon. The Subway Tavern, in New York, has gone out of business. The effort to establish a moral, and even religious, drinking-place, where pure and sanctified liquor could be obtained at all legal hours, succeeded only in arousing comment and drawing sight-seers. Bishop Potter, who had large faith in the scheme of uplifting the workingman by furnishing him stimulants and good company, opened the place with prayer. Curiosity-seekers came to see the strange sight of a saloon with texts and moral injunctions on the walls. But the bibulous, whose dimes should have paid the expenses and also a reasonable profit to the stockholders, failed to invest. In general, we surmise, a man who wants a drink doesn't care to become a participant in a sociological experiment or the object of too much interested observation. There was too much self-consciousness, as well as too much formal respectability, about the place. The bishop spoiled it. So the Subway Tavern goes into bankruptcy after losing $17,000 in one year and in its place there will be a real saloon—without family worship or texts. The Tavern probably did not hurt the bishop much, for his immediate constituency is not extremely punctilious about such matters. But the bishop's backing was death on the Tavern. The boozing public prefers to take its liquor without benefit of clergy.

Alvarado. One of the richest men in Mexico, probably by far the richest, is Pedro Alvarado. Not long ago he was earning fifty cents a day as a mine laborer. Then he made a rich strike on his own account and recently he has made another. He has millions of money, and he does not know what to do with it. He has twice offered to pay off the national debt of Mexico, but the government does not consider it in keeping with its dignity to allow this, though it seems to us it would be an excellent thing both for the government and for Alvarado. He seems to have some conscience about the matter, for he argues that since his wealth came out of the earth by no commensurate effort on his part, the country is really entitled to a share of it. Aside from this, he seems to have no idea of what can be done with money. Think of it, ye who would wish for a million if you could have one wish come true! Money means power, as office or position means power. But suppose a man with the training and capacity of a private soldier is given the authority of a general. How pitiable is the spectacle!

Federal Divorce Law. That the divorce problem is one of the most vexing questions of modern civilization, and especially of American civilization, is one of the truisms of the reformer. It is not merely that divorces are numerous, or that in some states the grounds upon which divorce may be obtained are too liberally defined—though both of these are true. It is the lack of uniformity among the several states that makes trouble. There is not only diversity in the causes for which divorce may be granted but, even more confusing, differences of legal process. For example, while most states require personal service upon the defendant, some states do not require this. The possibility of covering the field of marriage and divorce by federal legislation has often engaged the attention of jurists. It would undoubtedly be the ideal method of establishing uniformity and it is the only method unless the several states will, by agreement, enact identical laws on the subject—as they never will. The jurists say generally that federal legislation is impossible. The constitution leaves the matter with the individual states. One hates to question the wisdom of the fathers, but there are some matters in which we believe they would have given the federal government more power if they had framed the constitution with a full conception of the complexity of twentieth century problems.

Some Things Emphasized at San Francisco

Our annual convention on the coast has passed into history, and its plans and policies will affect, in some measure, the future of the cause it represents. Each national convention not only registers the progress that has been made, but indicates also the lines of future development. This is true, not only, nor chiefly, as relates to plans of work, but as to lines of thought and of spiritual growth, which are vastly more fundamental than the particular methods of religious activity which may be adopted. This is all the more effectually done because it is unprecedented and unconscious. No one thinks of setting any standard of thought or of life for others, but discusses the theme assigned to him in the light of his own best thought and experience in coming to a knowledge of God's will; but the sum total of the truths emphasized in the addresses and sermons of any given convention, together with reports of past and future work, is the best possible index of what we really are and of what we are to be in the future. Of the truths emphasized at San Francisco we mention only a few.

1. The Lordship of Jesus. This is, of course, an old truth, and one that has received emphasis among us from the beginning, but it is susceptible of new applications continually. The tendency at San Francisco was to bring this truth to bear on the things of daily life, in affairs called secular, in the political, social and industrial life of the nation, in the work of missions, in the use of wealth, and on the whole spirit and temper of the church as relates to its life and work. This creed of the church, it was shown, calls for daily and hourly corroboration in our conduct, in our choices and in our attitude to all the moral and religious questions of the times.

2. Christian Liberty. Many of the addresses sounded this note of liberty clear and distinct. It was the atmosphere in which our religious movement had its origin, and it is the only atmosphere in which it can live and accomplish its mission. While there must be no swerving from steadfast loyalty to Christ's teaching and authority, we must, on the other hand, permit no man to bind us where Christ has left us free. This gives free scope for that progress in thought, in methods of work and in adjustment to new issues as they arise, which is essential to the progressive development of any religious movement. Not only must we remain free from the man-made creeds of the past, but free from the bondage of our own traditions, and from the opinions and dogmatic utterances of those who would impose their authority upon us by an implied, if not expressed, claim of infallibility.

3. Christian Unity. This is no new note, but never in any of our conventions did it receive any more splendid emphasis than at San Francisco. The special phases of the question that received new emphasis were: 1. That Christian union is the child of liberty and loyalty, joined in holiest wedlock; 2. That Christian union is a means, not an end, and that the end to which it looks is the conversion of the world, it is primarily, therefore, a missionary problem; 3. That the best thought in Christendom today, and particularly as represented in the foreign field, is with us as to the advisability and necessity of Christian unity in order to the Christianization of the world; 4. That we cannot be loyal to our great mission, as advocates of Christian unity, without co-operating, as far as possible, with all religious people in all movements which look to the conversion of men or to the moral betterment of mankind.

4. Enlargement. No one note was oftener struck than that we are only in the beginning of things as respects our missionary, educational and benevolent work. The sense of our responsibility to God in view of the truth with which he has entrusted us is only beginning to dawn upon the minds of the great majority of the churches. We must enlarge our gifts, our conception of our duty and of our obligations to the world, our sacrifices, and our personal labors. The idea of doubling our membership and our offerings before the coming centennial of our movement in 1909, was kept before the convention.

5. Deepening the Spiritual Life. In a former article we referred to the fact of the unusual interest in the devotional Bible studies at the beginning of the sessions of the convention. This indication of a hunger and thirst after spiritual things found abundant corroboration in the spiritual tone of the addresses. No utterance of the convention, perhaps, met with more general or hearty approval than the statement, in one of the Sunday morning sermons, that no greater calamity could befall our cause than that we should so present the gospel of Christ as to be regarded as the champions of the external in religion, at the expense of its spiritual character. To make the external the vehicle and expression of the internal or spiritual, and not a substitute for it, was commended as the true method of presenting Christ's gospel, and the only way, it was urged, to maintain and perpetuate the ordinances of Christianity was to fill them with the spiritual content which they originally possessed, and which alone can give them value and significance.

6. A Wise Distribution of Emphasis. Such a false conception of our position as above mentioned is possible only when there has been unwise and disproportionate emphasis. What seems to us a striking feature of the addresses and sermons at San Francisco was proportionate emphasis. No one phase of Christianity was so accentuated as to eclipse another. One extreme often begets another, and an over-emphasis of the external in Christianity has not seldom resulted in an under-estimate and neglect of the internal. It seems to us we have had this action and reaction, and that the pendulum has at last swung to the center on this subject. Both the inward and the outward have their legitimate place in Christianity, but we should never forget that the inward is the antecedent and the outward the consequent. This truth, it seems to us, had recognition in the San Francisco convention.

7. Unity of Our Work. More than in former conventions as it seemed to us, there was a disposition to give proper emphasis to every department of our work. No speaker's zeal for the particular interest he represented was allowed to blind him to the fact that there were other interests deserving the consideration and support of the brotherhood. Every worthy interest among us had a hearing, and a sympathetic hearing. Lopsidedness is no longer a characteristic of our missionary conventions. We are learning that our work is one, and that the different organizations represent different phases of this one common work. The more this truth is realized, the more impossible will it be to produce any friction between these different organizations.

On the whole, therefore, the recent convention was, in our judgment, one of the best balanced conventions we have ever held, being marked by a wise and proportionate emphasis and a breadth of vision that sees all sides of the questions at issue. On this account it is a prophecy of a steady and healthful growth in the future.

Some of the Acts of the San Francisco Convention

We have reported what seemed to us some of the leading ideas emphasized at San Francisco. Now we call attention to some of the actions of the convention, and other measures will receive attention later.

Some of the most important measures relating to our mission work are now discussed in the annual board meetings held just preceding the convention. In the meeting of the Foreign Board, this year, the two most important measures adopted were: The appointment of a committee to consider the question of the salaries of our missionaries during their furloughs in this country, and to report on the same one year hence; this committee has an important task assigned to it and will, no doubt, give the subject careful attention. The other action was the adoption of a resolution instructing the executive committee to take steps at once looking to the establishment of a home for the children of our foreign missionaries, probably in connection with one of our colleges, where they could be cared for and receive their education while their parents are prosecuting their work in foreign lands. In a verbal report to the board President McLean mentioned this enterprise as one deserving attention, and subsequently included it in his annual report to the convention. This action had been urged in The Christian-Evangelist as demanded imperatively in the present stage of our mission work. It will be a source of gratification to our missionaries to learn that such action has been taken, and that their brethren at home have at heart their welfare and the welfare of their children.

The appointment of Stephen J. Corey as an additional secretary, by the executive committee, was not only approved, but the committee was instructed to add other men to the force as the work demanded, assigning them special districts. This means that neither the executive committee nor the brethren have any idea that we have reached the limit of our ability in world-wide evangelization. The presence of so many missionaries in the convention, some returning on furlough and still more going out, added interest to the proceedings. Their introduction to the convention and their short addresses created great enthusiasm. A more modest, capable, and consecrated band of missionaries it would be impossible to find among any people. We were all proud of them, and felt that they were worthy representatives of a great cause and of a great brotherhood in the foreign field. Our foreign work was never in so healthy and vigorous a condition and never had so deep a hold on the hearts of the brotherhood. Its officials have the confidence and love of the brethren.

The General Board of the American Christian Missionary Society heard with no little pleasure the gratifying reports from all departments of its work, and discussed, at some length, a motion to appoint a committee to consider the advisability of consolidating the work of ministerial relief with that of the National Benevolent Association, but the motion was voted down. The objection that seemed to have most weight was that there is a fundamental distinction between the work of the two boards, one being a work of charity, the other a matter of justice, the discharge of a debt due to the old preachers. The Christian-Evangelist does not believe this distinction will hold good. Paul felt himself debtor to Greeks and barbarians, simply because he had intrusted to him that which they needed. When we come to a worthier conception of charity we shall see that it, too, is but discharging a debt of obligation to those in need of what has been committed to us, and that we can not justly withhold help from the fatherless and the widow who are in need. However, the combining of the Board of Ministerial Relief with the Benevolent Association need not interfere with such distinction. But the time has not arrived, in the judgment of the officers and Board of Ministerial Relief, for such unification, and several able and good brethren sympathized with that view. If it be the proper thing to do, it will be done later. No one seemed to doubt that the funds for the old preachers would be greatly increased by the union, and that seemed to some of us the very end in view.

The matter of consolidating the offering for the American Christian Missionary Society with that for state missions, thereby eliminating one "day," was discussed by the secretaries in a meeting of their own, and was decided by them to be inadvisable at present. The question was not brought before the general board, nor before the convention, although this action had been advised by two of our state conventions at least. A little discussion of this question in our religious papers might serve to clarify the atmosphere. The matter of unification and simplification of our missionary machinery has not yet been carried to its limits, in the interest of economony of administration and greater efficiency.

The centennial committee recommended, and the convention approved, the employment of a first-class man to devote himself wholly to stimulating liberality toward all our general interests—missionary, educational and benevolent—and to solicit special bequests and contributions as centennial offerings, between now and our centennial in 1909. It was also recommended that the National Business Men's Association make it its special task to provide for the salary of such man. The Editor was not present at the closing session of the convention when the business men had their session and can not report their action in relation to this recommendation, but we are sure they will at least heartily co-operate in this matter. In this way only, it was felt, can we realize our aim to double our offerings by the time of our centennial.

The love for "things as they were at the start," and the fear of any change, especially by some officials, was illustrated in the discussion of a motion to change the time of holding our national conventions from October to a season of the year that would accommodate a much larger number of the brethren. This matter had been discussed in The Christian-Evangelist during the past year, and informally in groups of brethren here and there, and especially on the way to San Francisco, and the almost unanimous sentiment was in favor of changing the time to the vacation season, either at its close, the first week in September, or at its beginning, the last week in June. But the motion to change the date to the first Tuesday in September for the Buffalo convention was voted down, on the appeal of the officials that it was too sudden, that it would disturb the missionary year, that it would kill the September offering for Church Extension, etc. But on motion a committee was appointed to consider and report upon a constitutional change of time at Buffalo next year. And so we meet at Buffalo next year, and our college men and business men and many pastors will have to do the best they can until we have time to "consider" the question.

We may move slowly, but we generally move in the right direction when we do make up our minds to change. We will, sooner or later, move right on all these questions, for there is a momentum to our movement that will carry it forward to larger and better things.

Editor's Easy Chair.

When the "Easy Chair" closed its last installment we were flying through the great state of Montana, threading its valleys, with mountains on either side. When we reached Livingston, where the road branches off to Yellowstone Park, it was a great temptation to go with the party who were bound thither, as we had never seen that most attractive piece of natural scenery which the national government has taken under its care. But duties ahead deprived us of that pleasure. The Yellowstone Valley, through which courses the Yellowstone river, we followed from Livingston to Billings, a distance of 115 miles. It is a beautiful valley, irrigated from the Yellowstone, and seems very productive. We were surprised to see the people harvesting in September, while several fields of ripening grain were still standing. Nothing is raised here without irrigation. That part of the country without water is barren and desolate: but under the magic influence of the irrigating ditch it becomes like a beautiful garden. What water is to this country, the water of life is to the parched and thirsty world—the river of God, the streams whereof make glad the waste places of humanity.

MOUTH OF BIG GOOSE CANON.

We reached Billings at 12:30, Saturday, about four hours behind schedule time, where we had agreed to dedicate their new building on the Lord's day following. Bro. W. W. Clarke met us and took us to a good hotel, where we were entertained. This church was organized in April, 1904, by Brother Rozelle, state evangelist, Brother Clarke, who had just arrived a few months before from Seattle, taking the initiative in gathering a few members together. They organized with 32 members. In September following they secured Bro. J. T. Webb, the present pastor, who, in the year of his pastorate, has doubled their membership and built them a new and comfortable house of worship. The building and lot have cost them $4,500. Of this amount the Church Extension Board has granted a loan of $2,500, and by doing so has made possible this undertaking. As the property is on one of the principal streets of this growing city, near its business center, it is bound to become very valuable. The other $2,000 was provided for by pledges made before and at the dedication. Brother Webb, having been a carpenter before he was a preacher, has not only been overseer of the building, but has worked with his own hands. He has rendered the church substantial service, but feels that the altitude there is too high for his health, and that he will have to change his field on that account.

There was, in addition to the forenoon and evening service, at which we preached, raising the money in the forenoon and dedicating the church in the evening, an afternoon service, at which the Lord's supper was observed and brief addresses were made by local pastors of other churches, conveying their congratulations and good wishes. The spirit of brotherhood in these speeches was very admirable, and it was evident that Brother Webb and the young church had won the respect of the community. To these speeches Brother Webb appropriately responded in behalf of the church. It was a good piece of missionary work to plant this church in a thriving city like Billings. It has good material in it already, which assures its permanence. Billings has a population of over 8,000, and is growing steadily. It is the largest primary wool center in the world, it is claimed, and its bank deposits excel those of any other town in the United States of 10,000 population and under. It is located at the junction of the Burlington and North Pacific, is watered by the Yellowstone river, and is the center of a fine stock and farming country. A great irrigating ditch, with which Brother Clarke is connected, is bringing about 30,000 acres of land in the valley into cultivation. P. B. Moss, a Missourian from Paris, and a liberal contributor to our church fund, is president of the First National Bank, the chief bank of the city, and a strong believer in the future of Billings. The church there, we believe, has a fine field and a promising future. We shall not forget its kindness to us.

At this writing the "Easy Chair" is located for two days in one of the green valleys of Wyoming, known as the "Big Goose Valley," about five miles from Sheriden, which is a thriving little city of 5,000 on the Burlington Route, 143 miles east of Billings. We are at the home of Geo. W. Garrett, brother of the Editor's wife, who located in this valley three years ago. Big Goose creek, a mountain stream, runs through his place, and waters all the fertile valley. The mountains lift their snow-clad sides and summits close by on the west, but summer dwells in the valley below—at this season. Peace seems to rest on the valley and foothills, and it does seem that one could live here, nearer to the heart of Nature, and to the heart of Nature's Author, than in the turmoil of the city. Here the "Easy Chair" and his wife are resting for two or three days, when our journey will be resumed. We find Missourians here, as everywhere in the West. One would think the grand old state would be depopulated by the number of people it has supplied to build up these great commonwealths of the West. But it, too, is growing in population, and has a warm place in the hearts of its children who have come west to seek their fortunes.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Simon Peter, on a visit to Joppa, sojourned at the seashore. He was taking a brief breathing spell before resuming his missionary travels. "For he lodgeth with one Simon a tanner, whose house is by the seaside." What did he find to do at the seashore? Nothing is said about bathing, or boating, or fishing; but Peter was human, exceptionally human, and no doubt enjoyed recreation; and Peter was a fisherman, and would delight in trying his hand at a line or a net, or in launching a boat in the sea as he had so often done in the lake from his boyhood. Relaxation, recreation was necessary to Peter. It was not unholy. It did him good. It prepared him for more effective service. The sea, the symbol of restlessness, is to most people a source of complete rest. It affords serene and quiet repose, opportunities for calmest and closest communion with self and with God. And Peter has a vision here, the greatest of his visions, a vision which changes the whole aspect of primitive Christianity when, as he looks toward the sea, a voice comes saying: "Rise, Peter, slay and eat!" The whole Christian world today needs this seaside vision, which comes with rest by the sea and the thought of the regions beyond the hazy horizon and the breaking billows and the wide, trackless waste of waters.

Weneeda Rest is a very simple lodging place, somewhat after the order of Plain Dealing, the President's cottage at Piedmont, Va., a story and a half, with six rooms, unplastered and unceiled, and just a hundred feet from the surf. The sea rolls in and breaks near the door, and breathes through every opening and sings its lullabies in our ears all through the day and night, and brings health and contentment and food and comfort and cleansing and well-nigh every good thing. The President ate his first meal in the old Virginia cottage, cooked by his wife on an oil stove, and so did we. There was more real satisfaction in that outing, I am sure, than in Sagamore Hill, wrestling with the Mikado and the Czar; or in the three-million-dollar White House, which costs fifty thousand a year to keep it up, where it takes twenty-five thousand to buy a new set of china, and required five hundred and fifty thousand to construct those wing-like terraces which remind us of car-sheds.

I took a week off from the Beach to run out to Zionville, Indiana, and address a little Chautauqua. It is in the midst of a prosperous rural community near Indianapolis. For twelve years it has been running, and is a great resort for the country people. Wonderful is it what the summer assembly and rural free delivery and interurban lines are doing to make life more interesting and varied for the farmer and his family. Here I met with Uncle Si, and Steve, and Aunt Maria, and Bill Hayrick and his best girl, and a host of little Ben Harrisons, Lew Wallaces and Whitcomb Rileys. How much less veneer on these country folks than on city people! One typical Hoosier, of the lank, lean, long-drawn-out kind that remind one of an extension fire ladder, said, after the three long services, with the thermometer at 95 degrees: "You stood it purty well for a man of your years." "How old do you think he is?" asked some one. "Wall, I reckon he is a leetle over seventy," said the Hoosier. I stopped with that sterling good man, J. A. Hussey. A severe thunder-storm came up and burst with all its fury on the town while at supper. There was a terrific crash, and we rushed to the front windows and looked out to see a splendid sugar tree, across the street from the door, split all to pieces by the electric fluid, torn and humiliated and utterly laid low. We resumed our places at the evening meal, and in an instant another sharper and more startling detonation, as if Oyama or Togo had let loose all his guns in one tremendous explosion, and the lightning bolt struck the corner of the roof and then the wall of the room where we were sitting, sent shingles and boards flying in the air, filled the room with light and a crash of timbers and glass and odors of brimstone, and we were on our feet in a moment. It seemed almost a miracle that we escaped. Who, after all, knows anything of this mighty agency which drives our street-cars and sends our messages and illumines our streets? One thing the ancients knew four hundred years before Christ—how to protect their houses from its bolts, and in 1753, in his "Poor Richard's Almanac," Ben Franklin tells how to do it, and in his honor the French struck the medal with the words. "Eripuit Coelo fulmen," but we think we have learned better, and the lightning rod man is a thing of the past. Put up your lightning rod and trust in Providence.

The assembly at the beach is over, and we have a chance to study the natives and watch the sea and enjoy the birds and fish, the beach blossoms and the tides, the gorgeous sunsets and the magnificent storms, and the society of the beach family. It is wonderful to see the interest of visitors who never before viewed the ocean. Tom Reed used to tell of a young countryman who was advised to take sea baths, and went to the beach of a little fishing village. Spying a grizzled old fisherman mending his nets beneath a sign informing the public that he had boats and tackle to let and bait for sale, he accosted the veteran and asked if the water were for sale, also. On receiving an affirmative answer the countryman bought a couple of buckets, and, having paid the price asked, filled them and returned to his room to carry out the doctor's instructions. On the following morning, going to the beach when the tide was out, and contemplating the broad, receding beaches for some minutes, he approached the fisherman and remarked: "My! but you must have done some business last night!" So, the old lady, who had never in all her life had quite enough of anything, when she first caught sight of the ocean, pathetically exclaimed: "Thank the Lord! Here is something there is plenty of!" We have it—enough to supply all the unwashed in the ranks of the brotherhood—"much water," "a certain water," no uncertain water, but a great pond stretching all the way over to Lisbon in Portugal, which is just opposite to our resort. We see the ships and the great liners going in at the capes, or sailing away on their long voyages. We watch the sails drop out of sight over the rounding sea, a gleam of white, a far-flashed farewell. Yet the helmsman at the wheel, the passengers on the decks, see only the broad, level waters stretching before their gliding keel, and mark not the horizon line. So men vanish, as the distant ship, as the summer passes, peacefully on level seas, and mark not the unknown bound. "We call it death —to them it is life beyond." We turn our faces homeward and think of the song the children used to sing:

Out on an ocean all boundless we ride,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound;
Toss'd on the waves of a rough, restless tide,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound.

Far from the safe, quiet harbor we rode,
Seeking our Father's celestial abode,
Promise of which on us each he bestowed;
We're homeward bound, homeward bound.

Wildly the storm sweeps us on as it roars, roars,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound;
Look! yonder lie the bright, heavenly shores,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound.

Steady, Oh, pilot! stand firm at the wheel,
Steady! we soon shall out-weather the gale,
Oh, how we fly 'neath the loud-creaking sail;
We're homeward bound, homeward bound.

Into the harbor of heav'n now we glide,
We're home at last, home at last;
Softly we drift on its bright silver tide,
We're home at last, home at last.
Glory to God! all our dangers are o'er,
We stand secure on the glorified shore,
Glory to God! we will shout evermore,
We're home at last, home at last.

The Second Chapter of Church History[*]

By R. H. Crossfield

The book of Acts is a record of three distinct epochs at the beginning of the Christian religion. The first of these has to do with the inauguration of a new institution known as the church on the day of Pentecost, and its operation in the city of Jerusalem; the second, the evangelization of the home field, covering the territory in which Jesus preached; and the third, the extension of the kingdom into the remoter Gentile world.

As a people, we have very properly emphasized the first of these eras, and have found the former chapters of Acts a fine arsenal from which to procure the equipment necessary to defeat the enemies of a pure Gospel. This accent placed on the beginning of the church has saved the disciples of Christ from many unscriptural teachings and practices, and has given us the strong calcium light of truth while others see as yet through a glass darkly. The study of this beginning era has yielded many valuable results, among which are the following: A scriptural, and therefore infallible, answer to the question, What must I do to be saved? The elimination of infant baptism and church membership; the fact that the Holy Spirit does not operate directly on the heart of the sinner in conversion, but that the Gospel is God's power unto salvation; that "Chrstian experience" has no place among the prerequisites of church membership; the catholicity of the creed of the church, and the organic union of the children of God. The success of this movement for the restoration of the primitive Gospel has been largely due to our insistence on a return to the faith and practice of Jerusalem, the mother of us all.

The third epoch in church history has to do with its foreign activities. Saul of Tarsus, a bright and shining light, now fills the religious heavens. He enters the field of conquest for Christ and demonstrates what a single man can accomplish when led by God's spirit and wholly consecrated to his service.

But in making the transition from the Jewish church at Jerusalem to the world work of the disciples, we are prone to neglect a most important epoch—the establishing of a working basis in the home land.

The Dispersion. In those days of great prosperity in the Holy City "there arose a great persecution against the church at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the region of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles."

On the death of Stephen, there was a still greater outbreak of fanaticism against the church. As Jesus had said on one occasion, "When they persecute you in one city, flee to the next," the disciples summarily leave Jerusalem. This was indeed the "passion period of the church," the "Holy Inquisition" of Judaism.

They Preach the Gospel in the Home Field. Now comes a statement that we will be slow to believe without due reflection. However, it must be remembered that these refugees were men, large hearted and manly; men who would join "the chorus and prolong the psalm of labor and of love." They would have immediately put the cynicism of Diogenes to blush, and ended his search for a man.

R. H. Crossfield, Owensboro, Ky.

What did they do? Nothing more than duty required, and yet that which has echoed their praises down the corridors of time. I would that I might write this sentence in letters of glorious light across the sky of every American Christian: "And they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." While Jesus had said formerly to the twelve, "Go not into any way of the Gentiles, and enter not into any city of the Samaritans," these disciples went throughout the whole land preaching the Word because the Master had left as his dying message, "Ye shall be witnesses of me both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in all Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Philip hastens down to Samaria. Only a little while ago the inhabitants of one of the Samaritan villages would not receive the Savior, and in retaliation James and John inquired, "Lord, wilt thou that we bid fire come down from heaven and consume them?" Philip, who was the companion of Stephen in the work of the Gospel, even went to the capital city of the country and "proclaimed unto them the Christ," with the result that "multitudes gave heed with one accord to the things that were spoken by Philip . . . . and there was much joy in that city." The kingdom of God was indeed to them "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit." And as at Jerusalem a great company of priests became obedient to the faith, Simon the sorcerer, a noted sinner, was brought to the Lord.

This preacher now starts toward the south in the direction of Egypt. "Ethiopia stretches out her hands to God," and the secretary of the treasury of Queen Candace is gloriously saved, insomuch that he goes on his way rejoicing and doubtless becomes a missionary among his own African people.

At Azotus, Philip resumes the work and "preaches the Gospel to all the cities, till he came to Cæsarea."

But the Gospel must be preached from Dan to Beersheba; the entire home field must be evangelized. Laymen from Jerusalem essay to proclaim it—men who did not so much as hold an office in the church, "except that they belonged to the universal priesthood of believers." An unknown disciple converts Ananias of Damascus, and the latter forthwith begins the evangelization of the oldest city of the world. Whatever may have been his victories for Christ in Damascus, these pale before the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, the blasphemer, the persecutor, the injurious. These lay preachers went "as far as Phenicia and Syria," covering the entire territory the Lord had prepared. The storms of persecution only served to fan the flames of their zeal and activity. They were compelled to desert their home, but not their duty.

Peter preaches at Lydda, Joppa, and Cæsarea. In Joppa, "many believed," and "all that dwelt in Lydda and Sharon turned to the Lord." Barnabas of Cyprus, John Mark, Silas, and Cornelius were converted. "The word of God grew and multiplied." To every disciple the Gospel was good news—too good to keep—and they "could not but speak the things which they saw and heard." As Andrew and Philip when they found the Lord ran to a brother and a friend, saying, "We have found the Messiah . . . Jesus of Nazareth," so these disciples, even when retreating from Jerusalem under the fire of persecution, were constrained to preach Christ to all.

[*] An address, slightly abbreviated, before the American Christian Missionary Society at San Francisco.

1. Their Motive. Do you ask for a motive great enough to lead to such wonderful activity? I give you their answer in the words of Paul, "The love of Christ constraineth us." Of all the motives that have dominated the actions of men, "the greatest of these is love." Every great effort for Christ in all ages has been a triumph of love. So great was this affection for him that they wanted to "win for the lamb that was slain the reward of his suffering." Like Zinzendorf, they had but one passion, that was Christ.

Much has been said in these sordid days about lack of men for the ministry. The falling off in the number of young men who enter theological schools has been acounted for largely by the fact that more money can be made in business or at some other profession. Is it the love of money and what money means that has wrought this change? God forbid! It has been my observation that the man that enters the ministry of the Gospel primarily for the loaves and fishes is an egregious failure as a soul winner. On the other hand, have we forgotten to pray, "Give us this day our daily bread"? Is the righteous to be forsaken and his seed to be found begging bread? Let the preacher first of all be righteous, and that means provident of material things as well as possessed of the other virtues, and God's word for his support. The love of Christ should be the determining factor in the choice of a profession rather than the love of money.

Of course, the love of Christ involves obedience to Christ. If we love him, we will keep his commandments. Like the Crusaders, to know that "God wills it" is enough. When Peter was challenged to justify his preaching to Cornelius, a Gentile, he answered, "He charged us to preach unto the people.'" Others said, "We are witnesses of these things," and can not be disobedient to the heavenly vision. Like Judson, the "last command" came to them direct from heaven. Like Grace Darling, they belonged to the rare sect of the good Samaritan, and wanted to do good unto all men.

2. The Significance of Their Home Missionary Efforts. These men were wise above their generation. Every movement was sanctioned or directed of heaven.

(a) They built on the foundation that Jesus had laid by teaching and miracle. It was the ambition of Paul to preach where Christ had not been named, but to have undertaken this before the home field was evangelized would have been to invite comparative failure. Nowhere in the world could the same results and prestige have been achieved as in Palestine. The soil was already prepared and awaited their sowing and reaping.

(b) Their efforts were among their own people, men and women of like passions. No foreign language, customs, and peculiarities to master. Each sower knew well the soil.

(c) Their efforts in the home field furnished a base of operation and supply for world-wide evangelism. As the Japanese victories in the present war have been largely due to the state of preparedness at home, so the great work among the Gentiles was made possible by and depended on the church in Palestine.

(d) These missionaries furnished the men for the foreign field. Paul, Silas, Barnabas, Mark, and others, were converts of these faithful missionaries.

Our Duty to the Home Field. What shall I say of our Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, the home field, America? As in the evolution of the early church Palestine lay between Jerusalem and the Gentile world, so today between the local congregation and the "nations of the night" is America. I desire to emphasize the need of the Gospel here at home, the doors wide open for its reception, and the part that we as a nation must play in the ultimate salvation of the world.

Only to lift your eyes is to witness need. No country is so rapidly becoming a nation of cities as America, and the city has ever stood in direst need of Christ. As the early church sought out first the centers of population for their labors, why should not we follow their wisdom and achieve their success? After their flight from Jerusalem, they went first to Samaria, Damascus, Joppa, and Cæsarea. Why should we not first of all evangelize New York, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco?

How important to the cause of Christ are these cities It is true that in the past the rural districts have furnished our preachers and presidents, but this will not be the case in the future. The Arcadian simplicity of our country life is rapidly giving way before the complexity of our modern civilization, and the cities are growing as never before. An observant Japanese has recently said that nothing remained of his country as it was thirty years ago "except the natural scenery." In many particulars, but especially in reference to our population, this statement will apply equally well to America. The very best blood of our rural communities has been pouring into the cities at a fearful rate. In a single decade Chicago doubled her population, while during the same period forty per cent of the country districts lost in population.

Again, emigration is coming our way at the rate of over one million a year, and it is most significant that ninety per cent of these immigrants settle in our cities. While thousands are begging bread in these cities, our harvests are going to waste in the middle west for want of labor.

It has been said that "God made the country, but Cain made the city," and the statement contains a norm of truth. While our cities contain only one-third of the population, they furnish two-thirds of the crime. The saloon, the gambling hell, the haunt of the scarlet woman are nearly all in the city; and closely related to these is the venal politician and the party boss. Is it not time for men in Israel to arise? If we would save America our cities must be saved. If the gospel is the cure for impending perils, as we believe it is, why not give to these cosmopolitan cities the good news?

The coolie at our doors should engage our prayers and means and efforts as well as the "heathen Chinee" in the "Celestial Empire." The Black Belt of our own fair southland should weigh as heavily on our hearts and conscience as the Bushman of Africa and the Igorrote of Samar. The time for sentiment in missionary work has passed. The question is not, Where will I get the most good out of my going or giving? but, Where will my means and service do the most good? Let us not neglect the foreign field; rather, enlarge our efforts for the millions beyond the sea. But let us greatly multiply our endeavors to save America. What we are now doing is but a bagatelle of the requisitions that duty makes upon us. Send one hundred men at once to New York, half as many to San Francisco and to the scores of other great cities of the land, and then shall the Master begin to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied.

Finally, would you girdle the globe with the message of God's salvation? Convert the Sauls, the Silases, the Barnabases, the Marks here at home. Who of all the religious bodies can accomplish this as can the Disciples of Christ? We have the same gospel that the dispersion preached, and its power has greatly increased with the roll of the centuries. The hour of opportunity has already struck in the belfry of time. Men of Israel, help!

A United Church and a Believing World*

By F. M. Dowling

"Neither for these only do I pray, but for them also that believe on me through their word; that they may all be one, even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may also be in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me."

It is now generally known among the well informed that the special plea of the people who desire to be known simply as Christians or Disciples of Christ is for the union of all believers on the basis and in the spirit of the New Testament church. Our fathers sounded out this plea and to it devoted their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred all. We, their children, have seen the dawning of the day whose full noon will bring the answer to our Lord's prayer, that all who believe on him might be one. We have lived to hear the apologies for divisions in the family of God grow fainter and fainter and in multitudes of instances die away, and to hear sectarianism and even denominationalism arraigned in unexpected quarters in language as bold and uncompromising and withering and trenchant as was employed by any of the "fathers." We have heard multitudes of God's children expressing themselves as weary of the weakness and isolation and sinfulness of sectarian divisions and hungry for fellowship and union in Christ; and we have seen springing up here, there, and yonder, movements looking toward the reunion of Christendom.

Brethren, if today the believers in Christ everywhere should put aside their human names, and creeds, and practices, and come and stand together not only in an outward, visible union, but in a deep, spiritual, scriptural union, would you be ready to sing your hallelujahs and doxologies and declare that the desire of your hearts had been accomplished? Take time to answer. Is Christian union the consummation devoutly to be wished? Is Christian union the one far off, or near, divine event toward which the whole creation moves? Is Christian union the end in view, or a means to the end? Is Christian union the goal toward which we have been pressing, or incident, necessary and glorious, on the way?

I fear we forget a part, and the main part, of our Saviour's prayer, "that the world may believe." That was the great, crushing burden on the heart of our Lord; the union of all who should believe on him a means to that end. How it lifts the subject of Christian union into dignity and importance to realize that there is a vital connection between the unity of Christians and the faith of the world!

Divisions in the church of God are being recognized today by men at the front of the missionary movement as mighty hindrances to the Christian conquest of the world.

Before the Fifth Conference of the Foreign Missionary Boards of the United States and Canada S. L. Baldwin, D.D., uttered these strong words:

F M. Dowling, Pasadena, Cal.

"It is very apparent that the time has come when it ought to be possible for the missionary authorities of different denominations of the Christian church to come together with reference to the speedy occupancy of the whole field, and so to plan in regard to it as not to waste the Lord's money or distribute the workers in the Lord's vineyard in such a way as to hinder rather than promote the great object we have in view.

"Now, of course, this implies that we are more anxious that the people of China shall become Christians than we are that they shall become Presbyterians, or Baptists, or Episcopalians, or Methodists. This may be shocking to some of our brethren who are great sticklers for denominational peculiarities; but, really, when we find ourselves a mere handful confronting four hundred millions of people, it does seem that we ought to be able to sink denominational ambitions sufficiently to seek only for that which will most speedily give the Gospel of Christ to the millions who are in need of it."

At the Ecumenical Missionary Conference Ex-President Harrison, as temporary chairman, said: "Not the least beneficent aspect and influence of this great gathering will be found in the Christian union that it evidences. The value of this is great at home, but tenfold greater in the mission field, where ecclesiastical divisions suggest diverse prophets."

One of the speakers at the conference, J. T. Gracey, D. D., spoke these mighty words: "What tasks there are for united Christendom! It is not a Methodist problem, and not an Episcopalian problem; not a Baptist problem; not a British problem; not an American problem. It is a problem for solid Christendom."

The strongest words uttered on the subject were spoken by A. J. F. Berends, of the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn. This speech has been called his swan song. "The time has come when Christian comity fails to meet the urgent demand. We must come to terms among ourselves. History is rapidly laughing our comities and compromises out of court. Hardly had Porto Rico come under the American flag when there was a rush of the denominations for the occupancy of the little island, and we began to parcel out the territory. That was comity. Shame on us, I say! What an object lesson it would have been, if we had had co-operation as our watchword, and had left our denominational banners behind us. I like not the word comity. It is veneered selfishness. You can not enforce it. It will collapse under pressure, and it can not collapse too soon, for it is wrong in principle and unworkable in practice. Fusion is what we need. Co-operation is what we must have. I believe that our present day methods are utterly inadequate, and I can not evade the conviction that foreign missions carry in them the swift doom of our petty sectarian divisions. I do not know how this co-operation is coming, but it must and will. Let it come, whoever is crowded to the wall! Our rituals and our creeds must not stand in the way of the massing of Christian forces for the world's redemption."

D. D. Gregory, D. D., LL.D., has been writing some vigorous articles for the "Homiletic Review" on "The Forward Movement." In a trenchant article on "Why Are We Accomplishing So Little?" he gave this as a part of his answer: "The work waits for the spirit of union to rouse all of the churches and bring them into line, under the leadership of the Spirit of God, in one common plan that shall take in all the Christians and all the world, and men who feel that there is death in the waiting, cry out, 'How long, oh Lord!' "

*An address delivered at the International Convention at San Francisco.

Such testimony becomes more clear and strong and abundant when the mission fields have been visited and the situation studied at first hand.

Mr. John R. Mott, in his "The Evangelization of the World in this Generation," says: "The want of unity among the different branches of the church at home, as a result of denominational pride, jealousy and misunderstanding, is a serious hindrance to the work on the mission field." In his later book, "The Pastor and Missions," he puts in italics as a division of a chapter these words: "The marked movement in the direction of unity and co-operation among the Christian forces on the mission fields has prepared the way for a triumphant advance." He adds this comment: "It is of large importance that the native Christians on each field be united, as far as possible, those of the same denominational family joining their forces, and even those of different denominations, so far as is practicable, uniting in one great church, adapted to the conditions obtaining on that field, thus avoiding on the mission field all accidental and unnecessary or unessential differences which bulk so largely in the sectarianism of western lands."

Francis E. Clark, after his tour in the interest of world-wide Endeavor, wrote this: "The most pitiable sight which I saw in foreign lands was that of churches which had been gathered out of heathenism or Mohammedism rent in twain by the sectarian jealousies which had been introduced from a so-called Christian land. To see, as is occasionally seen, a Christian missionary, or teacher, trying to build up a church, not from the foundation, not out of the ruins of heathenism, but by building on another man's foundation, and tearing away the converts from the truth around which their minds have freely begun to twine, in order that some sect or ism may be built up—this, indeed, is disheartening."

Dr. John Henry Barrows lectured on the foundations of Christianity in many of the intellectual centers of the non-Christian world. At the Ecumenical Conference he spoke on "The Iniquities of Christendom as Hindrances to the Christian Conquest of the World." He classed the divisions of Christendom as among these iniquities and as explaining in part why Christianity was compelled to apologize for Christendom.

A few years ago we sent President A. McLean, our apostle of Foreign Missions, on a circuit of the globe to study the conditions and needs of the heathen world and to report the triumphs of the Gospel in the regions beyond. From Japan he sent us this message: "The Disciples of Christ stand for precisely the same thing in Japan as they do at home, namely, the union of all believers to the end that the world may be evangelized. It is true that most Protestant missionaries co-operate. Still there are differences in faith and practice that cannot be hid. If all who call upon the name of the Lord could unite, the chief hindrance to the spread of the Gospel would be taken away."

Soon after our war with Spain the Government sent a Commission to the Philippine Islands' Presidency of Mr. Schureman. Mr. Schureman took a deep interest in the religious condition of the inhabitants of the islands, and as a statesman having at heart the highest interests of the people so lately gathered beneath the folds of our flag, recommended the sending of missionaries in large numbers to the islands, and suggested that the various denominations contemplating the conversion of the Filipinos first agree among themselves.

Naturally and significantly the strongest arraignment of our divisions as a block before the car of Christian conquest has been made by the missionaries themselves.

Dr. George E. Post, Presbyterian missionary in Syria, addressed this language to the churches of America: "There comes an emissary from the Christian church in America and tells him (the heathen convert), 'Sir, you have joined the Church of Christ, as you think, but that is not the Church of Christ. Come to me and I will introduce you into the Church of Christ.' This is something inflicted on us by your divisions here. We stand on the picket line. We stand at the front. We stand at the post of danger. We are lifting up the banner of the cross in the face of the uncivilized and unbelieving world, and when we have succeeded in convincing them that Christ is the Savior, then there come emissaries from you who tell them that it is all wrong and that they must begin all over again."

Before the Fifth Conference of the Foreign Missionary Boards of the United States and Canada Dr. Farnsworth said: "With us in Turkey that there should be different sorts of Protestant Christians is a shock to our people. They say, 'What does this mean? You come together and then we will talk about it. You come to us to preach to us evangelical Christianity, and here are two or three three kinds of you. What does this mean?' And they can not understand it, certainly in Turkey, and we have had trouble. We go to preach Christ crucified. Is Christ divided? I would say, hold out a danger signal. We want to do it for the sake of the conversion of the world to Christ."

At the World's Parliament of Religions George T. Caudlin, of China, an English Methodist, exclaimed: "These two things must go together—the union of Christians and the conversion of the world."

The obstacles to Christian work in China caused by the presence of so many denominations have so impressed themselves upon the missionaries that forty-eight representatives of nearly all the boards working there have lately issued a notable document aiming to counteract the deadly effect of their divisions.

STRONGER THAN MEAT

A Judge's Opinion of Grape-Nuts.

A gentleman who has acquired a judicial turn of mind from experience on the bench out in the Sunflower State, writes a carefully considered opinion as to the value of Grape-Nuts as food. He says:

"For the past 5 years Grape-Nuts has been a prominent feature in our bill of fare.

"The crisp food with the delicious, nutty flavor has become an indispensable necessity in my family's everyday life.

"It has proved to be most healthful and beneficial, and has enabled us to practically abolish pastry and pies from our table, for the children prefer Grape-Nuts and do not crave rich and unwholesome food.

"Grape-Nuts keeps us all in perfect physical condition—as a preventive of disease it is beyond value. I have been particularly impressed by the beneficial effects of Grape-Nuts when used by ladies who are troubled with face blemishes, skin eruptions, etc. It clears the complexion wonderfully.

"As to its nutritive qualities, my experience is that one small dish of Grape-Nuts is superior to a pound of meat for breakfast, which is an important consideration for anyone. It satisfies the appetite and strengthens the power of resisting fatigue, while its use involves none of the disagreeable consequences that sometimes follow a meat breakfast." The Americanism of the Disciples of Christ[*]

By E. L. Powell

I deem it a very high honor to represent, at this time, the American Christian Missionary Society. Born in the early days of this great religious movement—the oldest organization among us—it can properly claim a peculiar dignity and position. It is modestly proud of its history, but its gaze is toward the future. It does not dwell in the land of memories—thrilling and splendid though they be—but, occupying its position in the front of our "far-flung battle line," it sounds the clarion call of every progressive enterprise: "Let us go up and possess the land." I shall not speak of its achievements or its present prosperity, but would rather call your attention to its name, as indicating its aims and the character of its work. It is American. It is Christian. It is missionary. My subject, therefore, may be appropriately styled, "The Americanism of the Plan and Position of the Disciples of Christ."

1. Let us think for a moment of what is essential Americanism. What do we stand for among the nations of the earth? Growing out of and involved in the inherent rights of man concerning which the Declaration speaks are the principles which are elemental in Americanism, viz.: Liberty, authority, democracy and union. These constitute the gospel of Americanism, and these are the principles for which the people known as the Disciples of Christ, or Christians, stand in the religious world. Our movement, in its comprehensiveness, harmonizes with the sweep and majesty of this great continent. We stand for liberty—that liberty which is the very life of Protestantism, and without which Protestantism has no excuse for being. The movement represented here tonight had its birth in the reaffirmation of Protestantism—the right of the soul to seek truth for itself; the invitation of the open Bible to whomsoever might read its pages; the sacred duty and privilege of the individual to study the great revelation for himself, and to act under a solemn sense of individual responsibility. When Thomas Campbell promulgated his now famous Declaration and Address, a new Declaration of Independence was affirmed. It was high time, for the religious world at that moment was under an ecclesiastical and theological tyranny which was as marked as that which in our political world called forth the war of the Revolution. The war of the Revolution represents Protestantism in political life; the reformation of the sixteenth century represents the resistance of the soul to arbitrary ecclesiastical authority; the movement of the Disciples of Christ represents that Protestantism which means resistance in religious affairs to all authority which does not find its source and utterance in the character and will of Jesus Christ. We stand for the liberty of the New Testament—that liberty which consists in the removal of all arbitrary restraints upon the soul's privileges and rights and the recognition of that authority alone whose commands mean the setting of the soul free to realize its life—in a word, liberty through casting off entangling alliances and liberty through obedience to the divine will as expressed in Jesus Christ.

E. L. POWELL.

2. But the movement is no derelict, out on the open sea with no directing will to guide and govern. We stand for liberty within the limitations imposed by the authority of Jesus Christ:

No other Lord but thee we'll know,
No other name but thine confess.

We require no other faith than faith in Christ. We ask subscription to no other creed than that creed which was incarnate in the divine life. No ordinances have any meaning apart from his authority—no terms of fellowship not of his appointment. The church ceases to speak with authority when the voice of Christ does not issue the commands. We plead, therefore, for liberty through law. We are free, and yet subject; we find our liberty in obedience to him who knows the soul. It is not within the province of this address to discuss the grounds of this authority—the authority of knowledge, the authority of character, the authority of suffering love, the authority of proven primacy, the authority which the soul of man can not do other than approve, however much the obedience may be refused. We stand for liberty safeguarded by law, and that law the living will of the living, present Christ.

3. We stand for democracy as opposed to special privileges and honors in the kingdom of Christ. We hold that all are kings and priests unto God. Alexander Campbell antagonized clerical arrogance and presumption on the ground of Paul the Apostle: "Who is Paul, or who is Apollos, but ministers by whom you have believed?" The only pre-eminence is that of character and service and the intellectual ability which combines them. "All things are yours." There is no room among us for popes

LUCKY MISTAKE

Grocer Sent Pkg. of Postum and Opened the Eyes of the Family.

A lady writes from Brookline, Mass.:

"A package of Postum Coffee was sent me, one day by mistake.

"I notified the grocer, but finding that there was no coffee (the old kind) for breakfast next morning, I prepared some Postum, following the directions very carefully.

"It was an immediate success in my family, and from that day we have used it constantly, parents and children too—for my three rosy youngsters are allowed to drink it freely at breakfast and luncheon. They think it delicious, and I would have a mutiny on my hands should I omit the beloved beverage. My husband used to have a very delicate stomach while we were using coffee but to our surprise his stomach has grown strong and entirely well since we quit coffee and have been on Postum.

"Noting the good effects in my family, I wrote to my sister, who was a coffee toper, and after much persuasion got her to try Postum. She was prejudiced, against it at first, but when she presently found that all the ailments that coffee gave her, left and she got well quickly she became and remains a thorough and enthusiastic Postum convert. Her nerves, which had become shattered by the use of coffee, have grown healthy again, and today she is a new woman, thanks to Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich., and the "cause why" will be found in the great little book, "The Road to Wellville," which comes in each pkg.

or prelates or priests—for superior or inferior clerical judicatories—for lordships, little or great. We are a republic, subject to an invisible Monarch.

4. We stand for Christian union. When this movement came into existence there was silence on this great question. The church was satisfied with denominationalism. We are pioneers in this cause. It was the vision of a united church that smote upon the hearts of our fathers—union based upon the authority of Christ and his apostles, union demanding for its realization that which is essential Christianity in doctrine and structure by simple faith in Jesus Christ and obedience to the simple ordinances of his appointment—the union, in a word, of the New Testament church, with its simplicity and dignity. And this is what we are pleading for today. Now a thousand voices are proclaiming its desirability. The signs of the times are propitious. This is the age when emphasis is placed on love, rather than dogma or organization, and love is the precursor of union.

Our ideals grow out of our principles. The ideal church exemplifies these principles. We find such a church on the pages of the New Testament. Our ideal in doctrine, organization and aim is found in the first Christian century, for this ideal, as we believe, was heaven-born. The life of the church is the development under present conditions and inspirations of the old program. If Christ is the goal of humanity, then the past for us holds all that the future shall yield in moral and spiritual advancement. What, then, is the ideal church, as based on the principles enunciated?

1. It is a church in which Christian character is the end and aim of all requirements, observances, ordinances and service. All these cease. Character alone abides. No magic in the Bible or the church or the ordinances. Their value is but as the scaffolding for the building. A church, therefore, with the right emphasis.

2. A church in which conscious loyalty to Jesus Christ and obedience to his authority shall be the only test of fellowship. Orthodoxy a thing of the heart and life, rather than the acceptance of propositional statements.

3. A church in which simplicity shall forever divorce essential Christianity from a complicated theology, thereby making accessible to all men the gospel which was given for all men.

4. A church that shall be Protestant in its defense of Christian liberty, but equally insistent that the liberty shall be Christian. Christian liberty—its certificate is loyalty to Christ. Be loyal to Christ—then think as you please.

5. A church that shall be missionary from center to circumference—having as its motto: "Not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

6. A united church—its captain, Jesus Christ; its lawgiver, Jesus Christ; its exemplar, Jesus Christ; united on him and in him. Once again, we plead for a Christ-enamored church.

Some Convention Snap Shots.

In this number will be found grouped together a great many snap shots made by the assistant editor at the San Francisco convention and during the travels of The Christian-Evangelist Special. The front page group represents people at the convention; they are as follows: 1. The widow and granddaughter of Dr. Hobson and H. A. Denton. 2. Two Joplin pastors—J. W. Baker and W. F. Turner. 3. R. S. Robertson, Dean Hiram Van Kirk, R. H. Shepherd and C. E. Moore. 4. J. A. Lord. 5. A prominent evangelist, J. V. Updike, and a rear view of the editor of "The Christian Standard." 6. John Shackleford, J. J. Morgan and A. C. McKeever. 7. Secretary Benjamin L. Smith greeting a friend. 8. Three from Missouri—Secretary George L. Snively, Paul Moore and T. A. Abbott. 9. Pres. A. McLean hurrying to make a speech. 10. C. W. B. M. session in Pilgrim Church. 11. Foreign Society, President McLean standing behind Miss Mary Rioch and the white vested secretary an interested listener. 12. "What are we stopping here for?"—Secretary F. M. Rains. 13. A newly wedded pair—Dr. and Mrs. Gordon, of India. 14. T. J. Legg talking to J. H. O. Smith, and J. H. Allen talking to Paul Moore. 15. W. W. White, James Small and R. H. Waggener in foreground. E. R. Ford, of San Francisco, and Grant Lewis, state secretary of southern California, behind R. H. Waggener. 16. H. S. Earl, the man of the silk hat. 17. Mrs. H. Atwater and other C. W. B. M. workers. 18. The only man from Canada—J. A. L. Romig. 19. State Secretary F. E. Billington and wife, of Oregon, and J. H. Hazell, of California.

The two groups of photos illustrating the trip of The Christian-Evangelist Special consist of "life" pictures and nature views. Those in the first group are: 1. Joining the "Special" at Kansas City. 2. "All aboard." 3. The Editor taking a picture. 4. The totem poles at the Portland Exposition. 5. "Auld Lang Syne" on the dried-up sea in the Nevada desert. 6. Bathing at Catalina. 7. Viewing Cripple Creek. 8. A group of preachers "discoosin'." 9. Wharf at Catalina. 10. Big fish—one weighing 300 pounds was longer than a member of our party standing beside it. 11. A Mormon's house at Salt Lake with six apartments adjoining for his wives. 12. In the lock on the Columbia river. 13. Our first Indian and papoose. 14. Trolleying in Salt Lake City. 15. Hanging out the standard—T. A. Abbott, the Editor (in shirt sleeves) and G. A. Hoffmann. 16. Returning from a trolley ride at San Bernardino. 17. Our fishermen—J. H. Garrison and E. F. Daugherty, Wabash, Ind. 18. A tallyho at Denver. 19. A glass bottomed boat at Catalina. 20. Leaving San Pedro. 21. Approaching Avalon. 22. Mrs. G. A. Hoffmann has a good laugh. 23. Divers at Avalon. 24. A drive through Salt Lake City. 25. The Editor and his wife see Riverside. 26 and 27. In Chinatown, San Francisco. 28. A merry party in the Salt Lake. 29. "Who are they?" 30. The big woman on the Trail. 31 and 32. Fruit venders. 33. At Saltaire.

The second group pictures: 1. Over the Shasta route. 2. Plain and mountain in Nevada. 3. The heart of the Rockies. 4. Up Mt. Lowe. 5. A Los Angeles home. 6. A salmon wheel on the Columbia. 7. The Divide—the Pacific end, showing snow-sheds, of the two-mile tunnel. 8. The Palisades of the Columbia. 9. The Temple and statue of Brigham Young, Salt Lake City. 10. In northern California. 11. Mt. Shasta. 12. St. Peter's Dome and the "Short Line" Road. 13. A salmon cannery. 14. Avalon Bay. 15. At Santa Monica. 16. Market street, San Francisco. 17 and 18. On the Columbia. 19. Magnolia avenue, Riverside. 20. At the Portland Fair. 21. The rapids of the Columbia. 22. Seals at Catalina. 23. The Antler's Hotel and Pike's Peak. 24. In Red Rock Canon. 25 and 26. At the Portland Fair. 27. Shasta waterfall.

Convention Notes and Sayings

The convention was admirably located in the central part of the city, convenient to hotels, restaurants, street cars, etc., and the First Congregational Church made an ideal audience room for all the sessions of the convention. The Native Sons' Hall served admirably the purpose of a headquarters of the convention. It would have been better, perhaps, to have used these two audience rooms for the communion service, instead of Woodward's Pavilion, but that could not have been known so well beforehand.

Referring to the communion service, it is due to say that Chairman W. M. White, of the West Side Church, presided with quiet dignity, and managed everything in an orderly manner. The address of T. W. Pinkerton was admirable, both in matter and manner, and the music, led by Brother Nesbit, was tender and appropriate. Only the ill-adaptation of the place itself to this sort of service marred the effect of this occasion, and this was overcome as far as possible by good management.

The San Francisco papers were very liberal in the space given to the convention, both in pictures and reports of the proceedings. If the people of that city and of the state do not know more about the Disciples of Christ than ever before, the newspapers are not to blame for it. The Sunday edition contained articles by different brethren, setting forth some of the things for which we stand, and the history of our cause in California, etc. Western papers can usually be relied upon to recognize the presence of a religious convention and pay it proper respect. What the Associated Press dispatches have done for the convention we have not yet fully learned, but so far as we have, the news service seems to have failed.

The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST arrived in San Francisco in time to attend the closing session of the Northern California State Convention, in session at the West Side Church, and he was almost embarrassed by the hearty reception accorded him by the California brethren, when called upon to make a brief speech. The Golden State is not one whit behind any of our states in the number of able leaders in proportion to its membership. The report of the Berkeley Bible Seminary, by President McAneney and Dean Van Kirk, was most cheering, and the brethren were unanimous and enthusiastic in its support. That institution is doing much for our cause in California.

The convention had many climaxes of enthusiasm. In an "Echo" meeting at Portland, C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, Mo., said the climax of the convention came on Monday night at the close of F. M. Dowling's great address on "A United Church and an Evangelized World." We think many would agree with this judgment. The able, scholarly address by Professor Calhoun, of the Bible College, Lexington, Ky., on "Missions the Supreme Apologetic," had laid the foundation for a new and higher appreciation of missions. Then came Dowling with his soul aflame with Christian union as the condition of successful, world-wide missions. He lifted the great audience to heights of holy enthusiasm, as he massed the facts and arguments, and the testimonies of missionaries on the field and leading thinkers, showing our denominational divisions to be a supreme hindrance to the work of missions. When he closed his address with the tragic recitation of "Men of thought and men of action, clear the way!" the audience broke forth into spontaneous and long-continued applause, showing that the speaker had touched the center of a great plea, in the judgment of his auditors, and tapped the deepest reservoir of their enthusiasm. The speaker has not been well for a year, but he summoned all his energy and vital force for the occasion and threw himself with abandon into his great theme. Those who heard him and all who know him will pray for his complete restoration to health and strength.

No set of men appeared to better advantage and spoke more to the point than the devoted band of home missionaries introduced to the convention by Secretary B. L. Smith. If the whole brotherhood could have seen them and heard their earnest pleas for the fields they represented it would certainly greatly increase their liberality toward home missions. We are sure that those of us who were privileged to see and hear them, could but have prayed, "God bless our faithful home missionaries who are holding up the banner of New Testament Christianity in destitute fields, and who often endure an opprobrium that many of us do not understand!"

E. L. Powell made a good presiding officer, and his address on Tuesday evening was another climax, following a strong address by R. P. Shepherd on Church Extension. Covering a part of the same ground that Brother Dowling had covered, Brother Powell eulogized, in glowing terms, his brother's address, and in his own masterly way emphasized the three words, American, Christian, and Missionary, in the title of the society he represented, as equally characteristic of the religious movement with which the society is identified. The address elicited frequent and hearty applause and stood out prominently in a convention of great addresses.

W. J. Wright's report on the Bureau of Evangelism showed him to be a man of wise discrimination and well fitted for the position he occupies, as superintendent of evangelism, and J. M. Rudy's address, following, on "Ideals in Evangelism," was unique, able, marvelous in its insight, its power of characterization, and in the speaker's gift of rapid utterance of things worth saying. The evangelists would not all agree with some things he said about methods, but in the main his address was heartily received. We are ahead in evangelism, but we are not beyond improvement.

The splendid report of the acting board of managers of the A. M. C. S. presented through its untiring secretary, B. L. Smith, with the forceful presentation of the report of Church Extension by its indefatigable secretary, G. W. Muckley, with the clear, able address of R. H. Crossfield on "The Second Chapter of Church History," which was the evangelization of Palestine, made a splendid session for Home Missions, and helped to bring that interest still further to the front.

Dean Van Kirk, of Berkeley Bible Seminary, was not much in evidence at the front, but behind the scenes, in his quiet way, he was oiling the machinery and helping in every way to make things run smoothly. He presided at the First Congregational Church Lord's day morning and evening in the absence of its pastor, Dr. Adams, introducing the speakers and in behalf of the church welcoming them, while in behalf of the convention he thanked the church for its Christian hospitality. The Editor of this paper spoke at the morning service and C. McPherson, of Texas, in the evening. The great auditorium of this historic church was filled at both services, as it was indeed at every session of the convention.

It would be interesting if the enrollment committee at San Francisco could furnish us the number enrolled from the different states, to show which was the banner state in its attendance east of the mountains. We hope they will do this yet. It would serve to show how general is the attendance at our national convention, and measure, to some extent, the degree of missionary interest in the several states. Of course the location of the convention this year was a severe test of our missionary zeal, but on that account, perhaps, all the truer test. No one now doubts the wisdom of carrying our convention to the coast.

Two of the youngest men on the program were E. W. Allen, of Fort Wayne, Ind., and W. S. Goode, of Youngstown, O., and their addresses were marked by a maturity of thought and literary finish which made us thank God for the trained young men that are taking up the work that some of us must soon be laying down.

The committee on union with the Free Baptists made report of progress and asked for reconstruction of the committee with a view of locating its members nearer together so that they could hold meetings without too great expense. This report was adopted and the committee so located. The report held out no prospect of immediate union. This is not to be expected. The educational process must have some time to do its work. While some of the leaders are ready for action now, the Free Baptists of New England are more conservative and less inclined to any practical unification. Time and the divine leading will do the work.

Much praise is due to the California brethren in general, and to the San Francisco churches and those about the bay in particular, for the labor they bestowed on the convention and for the admirable arrangements made for the convenience and comfort of delegates. The Editor regrets that he was deprived of the pleasure of attending the reception on Thursday evening on account of arrival of train too late, and of attending the closing session on Wednesday night following on account of departure of the Special too early. A severe cold prevented attendance at the Christian Endeavor session Saturday evening. With these exceptions we "took in" the convention pretty thoroughly.

The "affiliated interests" had a good hearing Thursday, though some of the

Our Budget

—This is our Convention Number.

—We believe it will be found to contain more about our Inter-national Convention than any number that has ever been issued by any of our publishing houses.

—Of course, in giving so much space to the convention we have had to curtail or hold over many articles and news items, but we hope next week to get back to our usual variety, and as we thus start in for another year's campaign we invite the co-operation of every reader to make The Christian-Evangelist more helpful and more interesting than ever.

—We have spared no expense to endeavor to give our readers who were not able to travel on our "Christian-Evangelist Special" an idea of some of the things which we saw and did. In the "Easy Chair" the Editor has described some of the incidents of the journey, and in this issue will be found a large number of pictures made from photographs taken by the assistant editor.

—In another column is some descriptive matter pertaining to these photographs. A great many of those who enjoyed the convention trip have asked whether they could get copies of the photographs taken by Mr. Moore. We may say that he has arranged with a professional photographer to make copies of these for any who may desire them, on the following terms: The large pictures of the "Christian-Evangelist Special" group and the communion service will cost 30 cents each. The small pictures which are of the 4 inches by 5 inches size in the photograph, will cost 10 cents each. In order to save Mr. Moore undue trouble, those, ordering should please send the money with their order and enough stamps to cover postage, and clearly indicate what pictures they desire, if they have any individual preferences, or state what portion of the trip they would rather their pictures should represent. Further, they should indicate whether they want their pictures mounted on cardboard or whether they intend them to be placed in albums. If no preferences are expressed Mr. Moore will make a selection. Those wishing the pictures should send in their orders just as soon as possible, as it will take a little time to have the pictures made.

—Simpson Ely is beginning a meeting at Minden Mines, Mo.

—Baxter Waters has taken up the pastorate at Duluth, Minn.

—John Munro is now permanently located at Grand Valley, Ont.

—Marshall G. Long has resigned after three successful years' work at Markle, Ind.

—Thomas Martin has resigned at Sandy Lake, Pa., and will take the evangelistic field after Nov. 12.

—Levi Marshall and daughter, of Hannibal, Mo., have just returned from a two months' visit in Europe.

—D. W. Connor, of Savannah, Mo., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Christian church at Edinburg, Ill.

Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and the Civil War Veteran are old friends." The Eagle Brand is still the standard. It is sold by all first-class grocers. Avoid unknown brands.

—L. C. Wilson, Cheneyville, La., has so far recovered from a two months' sickness that he is able to be in the pulpit again.

—The church at Carthage. Mo., has called Brother Sims, of Indiana, to succeed J. T. McGarvey, who went to Warrensburg, Mo.

—The brethren at Webb City, Mo., have called W. E. Reavis, late of the Broadway Church, Pueblo, Col. He began work September 1.

—J. W. Famuliner, who recently resigned at Bentonville, Ark., where an $8,000 building is being finished, preached at Neosho, Mo., September 3, where a similar house will soon be erected.

—W. F. Turner, of the First Church, Joplin, Mo., who was called home from the national convention by the illness of his little son with typhoid fever, reports the son as convalescent.

—The brethren at Gallatin, Mo., have had a bonfire and burned a note of $725 which has been with them for six years. C. W. Comstock, their pastor, reports one addition by reinstatement.

—Brother McLean announced at the San Francisco convention that the Foreign Society will issue Mrs. Rijnhart's book for 50 cents—the cost of production—in order that it may have a wide reading.

—The offering for the Ministerial Relief Fund at the communion service in California amounted to $378.45. This was small compared with last year, but satisfactory, all things being considered.

—We have received a communication from the officers of our church at Rolla, Mo., reflecting upon the character of Troy O. Barrett, who represents himself to be a Christian minister, and who, it is stated, still holds ordination papers.

—T. J. O'Conner has finally accepted a call to Eldora, Ia., which he first refused to consider, owing to his contract with the New Sharon church. The brethren at the latter point finally agreed to let him go and his call to Eldora is for two years.

—Edward O. Tilburn closed his work at Warsaw, Ind., September 10, having accepted a call to Mishawaka, which offers a larger field. A successor has not been chosen. Letters should be addressed to Geo. W. Dresser, Warsaw, Ind.

—The work on the new church building and parsonage at Woodbine, Ia., is progressing. The old church has been sold and the members are now meeting in a tent. There have recently been six additions. B. F. Hall is pastor.

—H. S. Saxton and wife have charge of the music in the meeting just begun at Neodesha, Kan., where E. E. Lowe is doing the preaching. Those desiring their services during October and November can write them there until October 1.

—F. L. Van Voorhis, who was appointed general superintendent of Christian Endeavor at the last Indian Territorial Convention, urges every church to follow the recommendation of the committee on future work to organize a young people's society at once.

—James M. Miller, of the Bible College, Lexington, Ky., who will graduate next June, supplied the pulpit of the First Church, Joplin, Mo., during August to the entire satisfaction of the church. There were a number of additions to the church during the month.

—The church at Tacoma, Wash., through its pastor, W. A. Moore, extends a most cordial invitation to all Disciples to attend the Western Washington Christian convention, which is to meet in Tacoma, Oct. 25, 26. "Our homes will be open," writes Brother Moore.

—On Oct. 1 a beautiful new church building will be dedicated at Scottsburg, Ind., with F. M. Rains in charge of the services. The public is and all ministers who formerly served the church are especially invited to be present. M. H. Jacks is the minister, and Dr. G. F. Cline, president of the official board.

—While J. W. Baker, minister at South Joplin, Mo., was on a vacation in the west, M. R. Ely, of New Orleans, very acceptably filled the pulpit. At the same time he conducted meetings through the week at Jackson schoolhouse, five miles south, with about twenty added up to September 5, and the meeting continuing.

—A telegram from Oakland, Cal., announces that $13,600 have been raised for a new church, and that 24 were added that day to the membership, the total additions for fourteen days of the Scoville meeting being 117. T. A. Boyer is the pastor. Brother Scoville was to preach one more evening and then go to Kansas City.

—The First Church, Mansfield, Ohio, has been newly decorated, carpeted and lighted. A men's club-room has been built and the magnificent plant will be reopened on September 24. The cost has been provided for. Bruce Brown writes that it is the best church he has ever served.

—W. A. Fite is now supplying for the church at Windsor, Mo., until they can call a preacher. This is the home of Brother Fite's boyhood and where he was ordained to the ministry. It will be remembered that Brother Fite resigned at Amarillo, Tex., just before his wife's death. He expects to locate in Missouri again.

—The laying of the corner stone of the new Christian church at Liberty, Mo., where R. G. Frank is minister, took place on Sept. 7. W. F. Richardson, J. H. Hardin, A. B. Jones, Rev. R. E. Dickerson, pastor of the Liberty Pastors' Alliance, and E. F. Allen, a prominent Mason of Kansas City, were on the program.

—The new building at Murray, Ky., is nearly completed, and Z. T. Sweeney has been engaged to dedicate it October 8. The auditorium will seat about 275 people and the Sunday-school room 175. The building is of pressed brick and stone, with two towers, and the cost will be about $30,000. The basement, when finished, will contain kitchen, lecture room, etc. A handsome organ has been purchased. Naturally the brethren are rejoicing in this success and looking forward hopefully to the future. G. H. Cashel Stoney is the minister.

THE GREAT COMMUNION SERVICE in Woodward

—Sumner T. Martin writes that the church at Pasadena, Cal., had the privilege of hearing George B. Ranshaw, Miss Mattie Pounds, Miss Mary Kingsbury and T. W. Pinkerton just after the convention, and were both delighted and inspired by their speeches.

—The outlook for the work at Norwood, O., where Joseph Armistead is now minister, is very bright. This congregation will join the big campaign planned for Cincinnati next month. H. D. Smith will conduct their meeting. This church contributed over $100 this summer to assist a weak church. Their Extension offering was $20.

—Next Lord's day the building which our brethren erected to represent the Disciples of Christ at the World's Fair will again be dedicated, this time as a permanent church building at Old Orchard, St. Louis. Some changes have been made, but the former design has been kept in view. R. L. Wilson, late of Chicago, has taken up the work as pastor.

—A telegram from H. G. Angle, Unionport, O., announces that the anniversary week of this congregation has developed into a revival in which there have been 34 additions to date and the community stirred as never before. Clarence Mitchell is the evangelist. He just closed the seventy-fifth anniversary week at Hopedale, where there were several baptisms.

—G. H. Cashel Stoney, has returned to his work at Murray, Ky., after an absence of three months, during which he studied in Boston and attended the lectures of the Summer School of Theology at Harvard University. He had the pleasure of meeting several old friends and many new ones, and enjoyed the delightful fellowship of a number of the churches in Massachusetts.

—C. H. DeVoe is at Grand Rapids, Wis., for a few days preaching for the newly organized church and helping them to make ready for the state convention, which meets there September 19-22. Although this church is only four months old, it has undertaken to entertain the convention. It has extended a unanimous call to Brother Dean, of Colfax, Ill., to become its first pastor.

—O. L. Hull, who will finish his studies at Hiram this next year, has been laboring faithfully for the church at Chesterland and Fowler's Mills, O., for the last few months until they could secure a resident pastor. Brother Hull is highly commended by the official board of the first church mentioned, which has called A. M. Jenkins, of Holmesville, O., to take up the regular pastorate October 1.

—A promising meeting has begun at Little Rock, Ark., where J. N. Jessup is pastor. Twelve additions are reported and there is growing interest. R. H. Fife, of Kansas City, is doing the preaching, and Edward McKinney, of Illinois, conducting the music. A newspaper report indicates that Evangelist Fife is preaching the right kind of sermons, and that there is hardly standing room in the church building.

—Miss Mary Rioch, one of the missionaries of the Foreign Society, to Tokio, Japan, is now enjoying a much-needed vacation with her friends in Canada. Her enthusiasm over her work in the Sunrise Kingdom is boundless.

—Mark Peckham, of Hiram, Ohio, has just gone to Havana, Cuba, in the service of the Foreign Society. His special work is that of teaching, but he will do general missionary work as opportunity presents itself. He is supported by the students of Hiram College.

—The Foreign Society has received $5,000 from R. A. Long for the Female Christian College, Tokio, Japan. The receipts of the Foreign Society for the first six days of September amounted to $6,205. The amount now needed to reach $250,000 by September 30 is $23,309. It would be a real misfortune to fail now when victory is so near.

—B. B. Tyler has just completed forty-four years of uninterrupted service in the ministry, he having been ordained at Eureka, Ill., Sept. 4, 1861. He asserts that he was never happier than he is in the South Broadway Church, Denver, which, according to reports in the little church paper, seems to have been well educated in the matter of giving, for we note that the total amount deposited on the plates during July and August averaged $111.13 per Sunday.

—The dedication of the new church at Kansas City, of which Brother George H. Combs is pastor, is announced for September 17. The offering on this occasion will be for missions, as the church "owes the world nothing save service," says its pastor. Z. T. Sweeney is engaged to preach the dedicatory sermon, and in the evening a series of evangelistic services under the leadership of Scoville and Smith will be begun.

—H. R. Ford writes that the work of the East Dallas church is rapidly growing. "The inspiration from the Scoville-Smith meeting remains and within a few months we expect to begin the erection of a very handsome church edifice. Since the close of the meeting, Aug. 6, 13 have been added. During my vacation the church called me for another year, beginning Jan. 1, at a handsome increase in salary. We constantly keep before the church 'the tithing system,' and that accounts much for the large giving of this people."

appointed speakers were absent. We hope to be able elsewhere, or later, to make fuller reports of the action of some of these important interests. The Benevolent Association had a fine hearing and awakened a deep interest. Its allied interest, the Ministerial Relief, had its innings at a previous session in which the report of Brother Orcutt was followed by a very able address by I. J. Spencer. The address by Brother Mohorter on the work of the Benevolent Association on the last night of the convention is said to have been a strong plea. The Business Men's Association was represented by its president, J. H. Allen, of St. Louis, whose sentiments concerning the responsibility of men of affairs toward the interests of the kingdom of God were heartily applauded. The meeting at night is reported elsewhere.

"If all Christians were Christians," according to the suggestive address of Brother G. L. Bush, of Texas, what could we not accomplish along all the lines of our activity? But we are becoming more Christian, and that is our hope. We go to Buffalo next October, and S. M. Cooper is the president-elect, an honor worthily bestowed.

"The Christian who makes his life conform to the purpose of God is antedating heaven and reaches the heights at once the broadest, freest, happiest."—E. W. Allen.

"Bacchus is a great god in our age."—C. M. Chilton.

"I have grown up in the church, was reared by a Christian mother, and it is my conviction to-day that the church is not equal to meeting the issues of the hour. There was in Jesus and the apostles a power that is not in the modern church. We are willing to give ourselves to Christ up to a certain limit, but few men are willing to abandon themselves to Jesus Christ."—C. M. Chilton.

"Shall America go out on missions of mercy or only on mercenary missions?"—J. H. O. Smith.

"We look in the mirror and brush our hair and hug ouselves when we give a little to missions."—F. M. Rains.

"You know, brethren, where anything in very small, we say it looks like 'thirty cents.' Our missionary offerings average twenty-nine cents."—A. McLean.

THE CONVENTION

The Home Society

The sessions of the American Christian Missionary Society were preceded by three Bible studies on "the Holy Spirit," led by J. H. Garrison.

After the opening study S. M. Martin, on behalf of the ladies of the Pasadena Christian church, presented the president of the Society with a gavel, after which G. W. Muckley presented the report of the Church Extension Society. This, as he pointed out, is not a complete report, but it was full of hope. While the receipts for the ten months were short by $4,555 compared with the same period last year, yet there was assured a further amount of $10,000 which will more than make up this deficiency. The secretary further announced that he had received a telegram from the Church Extension office announcing that nearly 1,400 contributing churches were then on the list. He pointed out that a large number of the best preachers had not seemed to think it necessary to announce that their churches would take the offering, so that Brother Muckley felt certain that the number of churches that would take the offering would very closely approach the aimed at two thousand. The total receipts of the society had been this year $96,061, including returned loans and in all work they had lost only $563. The secretary asked whether the time had not come for a "square deal" and pleaded that churches that took the other church offerings should give the Church Extension work a place. In conclusion he jubilantly hinted that there were some "big things" to be made known later. "We've got things coming you don't know of now," he said.

Benjamin L. Smith following presented very briefly a resume of the American Christian Missionary Society's report. This has already appeared in the columns of The Christian-Evangelist, and shows that this past year has been the best in the history of the society. The secretary pleaded that the offering for home missions should not be smothered by the other offerings because it was sandwiched in between them. In conclusion he announced that he had completed ten years of service and in that period $715,000 had been raised, 799 churches organized, 47,611 converts baptized, while to-day there are in its permanent funds $137,000. He intimated in conclusion that there were good prospects of some reasonably large gifts in the near future for the cause of home missions.

After the reports had been referred to the proper committees, and a song, R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., made a fine address on the theme, "The Second Chapter of Church History." Brother Crossfield has a good presence and pulpit style. His speech was listened to with greatest interest, for its theme was close to the hearts and consciences of his auditors, independent of the effective way in which it was presented. He accented the need of the gospel in the home land. His query why this convention should not send one hundred missionaries to evangelize New York was received with applause. The question now is, Where will service and means accomplish the greatest results for Christ?

The introduction of home missionaries was the next item on the program, and it was a very attractive one to the large audience. Speeches were limited, and Brother Handsaker, working in East Oregon, was the first man called on. He said he felt like a converted heathen when he found himself a missionary to his native state, and then he told us how vast that state was and how few churches making our plea there are in it. In the southern part of the state there is a vast tract of territory where we have no church at all, while in the northeastern section there are but a few small congregations.

Charles E. Smith, of Charleston, S. C., said that the nearest church building for primitive Christianity to his location was fifty miles distant. L. E. Scott, formerly of St. Paul, but now on the sunny slope of San Francisco, and H. J. Loken, of Richmond, across the bay, followed. At the latter location, which is rapidly becoming an oil and railway center, we have the only church, which was started two years ago with twelve people, and which has been enlarged twice. The only way now for growth, said its pastor, is by removing the paper from the walls.

Grant K. Lewis made a rousing speech in the interests of Southern California, where there has been a twenty per cent increase in the churches and twenty-five per cent increase in the membership during the past year. J. A. L. Romig, the only man from Canada in attendance at the convention, emphasized the vastness of the territory to which he was sent three years ago. Four other congregations have been established from his congregation. P. C. MacFarlane, from the Patmos of the new Mediterranean, told the origin of the church at Alameda. It was started by women and had "no elders or deacons." During the past year he had been down into the baptistry forty-seven times, and believed that at no distant date he will be able to report that he has been down 470 times. T. W. Pinkerton spoke of the loneliness of being 500 miles from any other preacher, and pictured a Jerusalem we may have in Utah. He started in to tell us about two things that, as a brotherhood, we ought to do to make any headway in the Mormon state; but he only had time to dwell on the importance of schools when he was cut short by the chairman's bell. Incidentally, he mentioned that the Presbyterians are putting $40,000 a year into schools in Utah. Brother Kirchstein, of Nebraska, showed what wonderful opportunities we have in that state, where is the smallest percentage of illiteracy and waste land, and whose representation at the convention was very large. R. N. Davis, of Santa Cruz, spoke beautifully of the work there. O. P. McGaughey, of Washington, pictured the wonderful growth and opportunities in that northwest state. E. W. Darst, of Berkeley, spoke of the plans that were being formulated for increasing the work in that beautiful suburb.

B. L. Smith appealed for double the amount of means, and the report of the statistical secretary followed. This report will be found in another column. Then came the report of the union with the Free Baptists, which was read by S. H. Bartlett and referred to a special committee with the suggestion that it should be made a standing committee.

The report of Clinton Lockhart, H. L. Calhoun, J. H. Allen, W. G. Conley and S. H. Bartlett, the committee to which was referred the report of the Committee on Conference with the Free Baptists, recommended that the Committee of Twelve be known as the Committee on Union with the Free Baptists and that it be a standing committee empowered also to confer concerning union with like committees of other religious bodies, and further, that this committee be empowered to raise funds for its expenses by private solicitation and to adopt its own by-laws and rules of order, to fill vacancies that may occur, and invite to its assistance such other persons as it may deem wise. The committee is to report annually to the national convention and be always subject to its direction. The committee is to be named annually by the regular nominating committee of the American Christian Missionary Society and that appointed at this convention was constituted of the following: E. B. Wakefield and B. S. Dean, of Hiram, O.; Robert Moffett, W. B. Ryan and S. H. Bartlett, of Cleveland, O.; C. A. Freer, of Painesville, O.; George Darsie, of Akron, O.; J. G. Slayter, of Pittsburg, Pa.; T. W. Phillips, of Newcastle, Pa.; C. J. Tannar, of Detroit, Mich.; J. M. Van Horn, of Worcester, Mass., and M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, N. Y. The committee making these recommendations expressed their confident belief that there is no insurmountable obstacle to our union with Free Baptists and that such union ought to be consummated as speedily as circumstances will permit, and they therefore recommended that the committee should use every means to its accomplishment.

The afternoon session was opened with a continuation of the Bible study by J. H. Garrison, after which came an "Hour of Evangelism," with the report of W. J. Wright, the superintendent. Following this was a fine address by J. M. Rudy, of Sedalia, Mo., on "Ideals in Evangelism." The length of Brother Rudy's paper necessitated his reading it with great rapidity, but the matter was so excellent and thought-provoking that he was followed with the greatest interest, and from time to time interrupted by both laughter and applause. We hope to present the address in fuller form in a later issue of The Christian-Evangelist.

Reports of committees then followed, all of them being adopted. F. M. Dowling, of the Nominating Committee, presented the following names as officers:

President, S. M. Cooper, Cincinnati; vice-presidents, C. C. Chapman, California, E. C. Sanderson, Oregon, A. B. Kellogg, Kentucky; recording secretaries, W. W. Sniff, Indiana; C. J. Armstrong, Kentucky; S. M. Bernard, Colorado; corresponding secretary, B. L. Smith, Ohio; treasurer, C. J. Neare, Ohio; auditor, L. C. Fillmore, Ohio; acting board, S. M. Cooper, C. J. Neare, B. L. Smith, A. M. Harvout, W. F. Smith, J. H. Filmore, H. C. Dalton, H. T. Loomis, P. Y. Pendleton, B. Sebastian, L. C. Fillmore and B. W. Wasson.

R. H. Waggener was re-elected superintendent of Christian Endeavor, and the officers of other boards were re-elected.

The Committee on Recommendations called on the preachers and ministers to increase their efforts to impress the brotherhood with Home Missions as the only basis on which the work can be effectively carried forward. They called on the National Benevolent Association not to include the churches in its appeal for funds on Easter Sunday, emphasized rally day being more observed, and called upon all the churches to take an offering for Church Extension in September. Of course, it expressed appreciation of the work of the secretaries and field men. E. W. Elliott, of Kentucky, presented the report on the place of meeting, which was Buffalo, N. Y., October, 1906.

The Joint Committee on Resolutions, through R. H. Crossfield, made the usual expression of thanks to all who had made the convention so successful, and sent greetings to some of the leaders who were absent, and asked that the watchword should be, "A Forward Movement."

The standing committee on the centennial made its fourth annual report through J. H. Garrison. It spoke of the encouraging progress and increased liberality, and the spiritual growth among our people. It recommended the appointment of a capable man who will devote himself to secure a centennial fund, and further recommended that the National Business Men's Association should assume, for the present, the special responsibility of providing the support of such a man. It also recommended that a special committee of seven, to be located in or near Pittsburg, should be appointed to co-operate with the standing committee, which shall have the right to add any one.

The only difference of opinion manifested in the public sessions of the convention was when J. H. Garrison brought up the matter of changing the time of the convention. He suggested that it might be wise to go to Buffalo next year during the first week of September. Some of the secretaries seemed to be alarmed at such a suggestion. Brother Muckley took the position that it would kill the Church Extension offering. Miss Mattie Pounds thought such a movement would work injury to the C. W. B. M. President McLean doubted the advisability of discussing such a change out on the Pacific coast. F. M. Rains brought up the practical objection that, according to his understanding, the buildings had already been engaged for the Buffalo convention for the month of October, and it might not be possible, even if it were desirable, to make any change. T. J. Legg, as a state worker, believed in the change and accepted the suggestion of A. C. Smither, who was in the chair, that the change should be made if it were possible to get the halls in September. J. A. Hopkins believed in an earlier date. J. H. Garrison said he had made the motion to test the matter, and that he would now move that a committee of five be appointed to take the subject under advisement and report at the next convention. This motion prevailed.

The Christian Endeavor Committee's report commended the work of the officers, and expressed satisfaction with the remarkable growth, recommended that $300 and expenses be allowed the national superintendent, and desired the various boards to designate the several boards to which the Christian Endeavorers should contribute, and asked that special attention should be given to the development of proper material for the pulpit and mission field. They also asked that our young people should take no second place in the increase and betterment campaign.

The rest of the session was taken up in five-minute talks on missions by Chas. R. Scoville, S. M. Hunt, J. B. Boen, J. V. Updike and J. H. Garrison. These were enthusiastic, and were received very favorably by the audience. Brother Hunt called attention to the fact that we had no church in New Hampshire, and this was the only state in which such a condition exists. J. H. Garrison proposed to guarantee the support of an evangelist who should go to plant a Christian church in New Hampshire. It was announced that W. L. Gaines, of Long Beach, Cal., will support a preacher. At the suggestion of J. B. Boen, a resolution calling upon the Senate and House of Representatives to suppress the sale of intoxicating liquors in Oklahoma for twenty years, upon its entrance to statehood, was passed.

The two addresses of the evening were fine deliverances. That of E. L. Powell, the president of the year, is given in outline on another page. It was delivered with all the fire and abandon of a southern orator and made a great impression, not only upon the delegates, but upon those who are not familiar with our plea. Brother Shepherd's address on Church Extension was also a strong speech, put forth in language that pleased.

The continuation of the Home Society's session was held on Wednesday, J. H. Garrison again leading the Bible study on "The Holy Spirit."

The first address was by George L. Bush, of McKinney, Tex., on the subject, "If all Christians were Christians." We hope to give a fuller report of this in a subsequent issue of The Christian-Evangelist.

The report of the Board of Ministerial Relief showed that a little over $2,000 in excess of the amount of the ten corresponding months of last year had been received up to date. But as only 263 churches had contributed this year, it would seem that, as a brotherhood, we have failed to realize the importance of helping those who have become worn out in their labors for the gospel.

I. J. Spencer, of Lexington, Ky., was the speaker on behalf of the subject, and made a strong plea for ministerial support, as well as ministerial relief. "What God hath ordained," was the title of his speech. We hope to give it in fuller detail as we have space.

Dr. B. G. Long, was introduced, representing Buffalo; he told the convention what our churches in that city are planning to do in regard to the holding of the next convention. They have the finest hall in the United States, with a seating capacity of 5,000, and another banquet hall is near by.

With the announcement of the names of the Committee on the Centennial at Pittsburg, consisting of W. R. Warren, R. S. Latimer, J. G. Slater, W. H. Graham, Geo. H. Oliver, T. E. Cramblet and Wallace Tharp, and the singing of "God be with you till we meet again," the sessions of the Home Society were concluded.

A Cure for Epilepsy.

Out of deep sympathy for epileptic sufferers I desire to make the following statement: Our son suffered with this disease from childhood, had attacks daily. All medicine and doctors failed to cure. His case was considered hopeless. By accident we heard of a doctor who devoted his life to the study of this one disease. I wrote to one of our ministers who knew of many cases the doctor had cured. We put our son under his treatment. The first five weeks he had but one spell a week, then followed weeks in which he had none. The last two spells he had occurred two years ago. Thanks to God! I will gladly give further information to those interested. Address, Rev. E. R. Irmscher, 522 Capital Blvd., St. Paul, Minn.

The Session of the Foreign Society

The opening session of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society began on Monday morning in the Pilgrim Congregational Church with devotions led by Harry D. Smith, of Kentucky. There followed a report of progress, presented by Pres. A. McLean, which has already appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The platform was noted for its absentees, only two members of the board—S. M. Cooper and W. S. Dickinson—supporting the president and senior secretary. The following committees were announced:

Missionary Intelligencer—W. E. Crabtree, of California; F. F. Bullard, of Virginia, E. S. Muckley, of Ohio; M. A. Hart, of Missouri, and L. O. Knipp, of Pennsylvania.

Committee on Africa—T. J. Legg, of Indiana; L. J. Marshall, of Missouri; C. McPherson, of Texas; S. M. Bernard, of Colorado; George C. Ritchey, of Oregon, and P. J. Rice, of Indiana.

Committee on Nominations—W. F. Turner, of Missouri, W. P. Aylesworth, of Michigan; J. P. McKnight, of California; George P. Townsend, of New York; A. L. Chapman, of Washington, and T. P. Ullom, of Michigan.

As the record was for only ten months of the year and the reports from the field had not been received, the statement presented at this convention was necessarily of a general character, but it was one picturing victory for the society, and the most notable year in its history. There has been the largest number of contributing churches, Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and also the largest number of individual gifts. There has been an unprecedented increase in the amounts given, as also in the percentage of increase. Sixteen new missionaries have been appointed and all are to sail during the month of September. New stations have been opened at Bo Cheo and Tung Chow, China.

F. M. Rains in his characteristic way presented a few figures which show that $1,000 in excess of the $15,000 necessary to secure R. A. Long's gift of $5,000 for the college at Tokio had been raised. The general gain has been the largest in the history of the society from every source. The total amount received in the ten months was $207,800, but the $250,000 aimed at will be raised. Brother Rains believed that the churches, as churches, will give $100,000 this year and that the Sunday-schools will total over $60,000 before the year shall be closed. He emphasized especially the gain—26 new ones—in living link churches. There are now 71 of these and the secretary expressed the wish that there should be 100 at the end of the society's year. It was noted that two California churches have become living links. Brother Rains felt that we must secure $50,000 for missionary homes and concluded by quoting the testimony of some prominent demominational leaders as to the growth and forcefulness of the missionary work of the Disciples of Christ. The report was adopted.

E. W. Allen, of Fort Wayne, Ind., then delivered a very fine address on the purpose of God as revealed in the New Testament, a pretty full report of which appeared in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The central idea of the discourse was that it was God's purpose that his kingdom shall be established on earth in every human heart, and that this is advanced by every heart made to conform to the divine will. There followed what is always the most interesting hours of a convention. A number of the missionaries who have been on furlough or who are going for the first time to the foreign field were presented, several of them making brief addresses. Among them were Bruce L. Kirschner and his wife, who go to the Philippines; J. C. Ogden and wife, of Kentucky, who go to Tibet; H. C. Saum and wife, of Ohio, who go to India (a pleasing little incident occurred when their four-year-old boy, in response to the calls of the congregation was lifted in his father's arms); D. O. Cunningham and wife, of Ohio, who also go to India; Miss Griffith, of Nebraska, and Miss Stella Lewis, of Kentucky, who go to India and Japan. Among the returned missionaries were Miss Oldham, of Kentucky, and Miss May Rioch, of Canada, from Japan.

The principal business event was the change in the Constitution, recommended at the board meeting. This was presented by George Miller, and adopted. It altered Article 4 of the Constitution by adding three members to the board, so that this now consists of one president, seven vice-presidents, one recorder, two secretaries and a treasurer. Another change was in Article 10, where the phrase, "The general Missionary Convention," was made to read, "The American Missionary Society." As indicated in our editorial, it was voted by the executive committee that an additional secretary should be employed; that the question of the salaries of missionaries while at home on furlough be referred to a committee to report one year hence, and that steps be taken to establish a home near one of our educational institutes for the children of missionaries.

In the afternoon the president of the society called on some of the audience for their impressions of the morning session. Brother McLean gave a short talk explaining some of the charts that hung around the building and showing the value of these to the churches in inspiring missionary enthusiasm.

W. F. Turner then presented the report of the committee on nominations, which was adopted. This recommended the re-election of the present officers of the society, with the addition of Stephen J. Corey as an additional secretary, and W. P. Rogers, of Cincinnati, and A. B. Philputt, of Indianapolis, as additional vice-presidents. There was a lengthy report prepared by P. J. Rice and read by T. J. Legg, on the subject of our work in Africa where there are ninety-five millions of pagans and seventy-seven millions of Mohammedans. The report gave a bird's-eye view of our missionary station and its methods of work. There has been a steady advance, the buildings have been repaired and new ones erected, and an increased interest is reported. The needs of the field require at least one man to be sent out to open a new station, and if possible an unmarried lady to assist in the station already established.

W. E. Crabtree read a report on the "Missionary Intelligencer," which commended a wider circulation of that periodical. "Preparation for the March Offering," a symposium, proved to be one of the most attractive features of the Foreign Society. It embraced thirteen three-minute speeches. F. M. Rains, who conducted the symposium, called these speakers "rapid firing guns," and so they were. Not one of the speeches was tame, but all bristled with inspiring facts and most favorable suggestions. The topics were as follows: Advertising the Offering, by A. C. Smither; Making Announcements, by R. P. Shepherd; Preparing the Official Board, by I. J. Spencer; The Preacher's Preparation, by J. H. Mohorter; Reading Missionary Books, by W. G. Conley; Missionary Sermons, by Geo. C. Ritchey; Using the "Missionary Voice," by W. A. Moore; An Offering from Every Member, by G. A. Miller; Pastoral Letters, by J. P. McKnight; Use of the March Offering Envelope, by M. D. Clubb; Preparing for a Great Day, by R. L. Cartwright; Prayer in the Preparation, by W. E. Crabtree; Going Beyond the Apportionment, by C. W. Dick. These speeches will all be published in a booklet by the Foreign Society and sent to the churches in due season.

"The Need of More Giving" was the title on the program of the address to the convention which was given by W. S. Goode, of Youngstown, Ohio. This address appeared in last week's Christian-Evangelist under that more striking title of "Missing Links." It was received with great favor.

While both the morning and afternoon sessions of the convention were very well attended, the evening session was an overflow meeting, every part of the large church being crowded. H. L. Calhoun, of the Bible College, Lexington, Ky., was the first speaker, his subject being "Missions the Supreme Apologetic." It was a fine, polished presentation of the theme and appealed to the intellectual side of a big audience. The best argument for the members of the Christian religion is Christianity itself and it is in missions that we find a supreme apologetic of Christianity, said Brother Calhoun. Apologetic is that devision of systematic theology whose aim is to prove the divine origin and character of Christianity as the one religion for the human race. "Actions speak louder than words," "A tree may be known by its fruits." The best way to prove to a thirsty man that pure water will quench his thirst is to get him to drink the water.

The work of missions is the clearest and strongest manifestation of a life of Christianity. It is for this reason that we are justified in saying that missions constitute the supreme apologetic, for the work of missions shows the superiority of Christianity as it is shown nowhere else. It is by our practice rather than by our preaching that we shall some day see our religion triumphant. What India and China and other heathen lands need most of all to win them to Christ is not so much verbal argument as the spirit and character of Christ manifested in the lives and character of those who are his representatives. It was not verbal argument, but the medical missionary touching with his merciful hands the needs of men, that won the way for Christianity in Siam, Korea and Cashmere. When the church at home shall be filled with the Holy Spirit and power, then may missionaries, full of the Holy Spirit and power, be found, for a church cannot give what she does not possess. And spiritual agents for spiritual work is an absolute requirement in order to succeed. Let us embody in life what we have for so long sung in words, "I love thy kingdom, Lord," etc., for then, and not until then, shall we see the cause of Christ triumphant. We shall hope to present Brother Calhoun's address in fuller form in a future issue of The Christian-Evangelist.

The closing address of the Foreign Society's session in the opinion of many was the most striking address delivered during the convention. It was keyed to the pitch which inspires any assembly of Disciples of Christ, for its theme, "A United Church and an Evangelized World," has, in effect, been the war tocsin of all our aggressive work. It was a fine presentation of the historic position of our brotherhood on the subject of Christian union. We print on another page a portion of this address and hope to conclude it in our next issue.

THE AFFILIATED INTERESTS

Two, among many, delightfully memorable features of this assembly were: First, The people came with a convention conscience—in justice to all our many enterprises, they remained till the pronouncement of the final benediction; second, the continuously rising tide of interest and enthusiasm from the beginning till far into the night of the last day, when President Powell in dramatic language declared the sessions ended.

Vice-president A. C. Smither presided during the afternoon of the last day. W. K. Berry, of the "Pacific Christian," conducted most helpful devotions. Secretary Geo. L. Snively had charge of the National Benevolent Association hour. Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, who has been identified with this movement from its beginning, read the report of receipts and disbursements and of the status of its eight homes and hospital for the months ending August 1. This showed $60,000 in money and $8,000 in realty had been given for this sacred purpose during that period. A general expression of opinion concerning this ministry was then called for and the effect was magical from the moment Peter Colvin, of Santa Rosa, Cal., uttered the first word of appreciation till the next order of business was called. Chas. Reign Scoville never spoke more eloquently. Miss Mollie Hughes, of Independence, Mo., and other sisters, Brothers Wilhite, Jopson, Patterson and many others, so spoke as to enkindle unbounded enthusiasm, and when A. C. McKeever, of Fresno, Cal., announced himself as a convert to this cause, promising to take up the next Easter offering for its benefit, and asked all others who would help make it the largest in its history, to rise, the great audience arose as one person.

It was moved and carried that the chair appoint a committee to arrange with the association for the establishment of a home in California.

T. J. Legg, of Indiana, had charge of the National Christian Bible-school Association's session.

After presenting interesting reports and a resolution providing for the re-election of the existing board of officers, including W. H. McClain, of St. Louis, for president, he introduced Secretary W. A. Moore, who delivered one of the most effective addresses of the convention on "The Rights of the Child." Surely all who heard it will attach greater consequence hereafter to our Bible-schools and labor more zealously to improve their opportunities for the redemption of the race. It is gratifying to know Brother Moore will continue his present relations with this great cause.

James H. Allen, president of the Business Men's Association of the Christian Church, made a stirring appeal to men to identify themselves more helpfully with the progress of the kingdom of heaven. He called attention to the pathetic condition of the "neglected rich." He urged preachers to greater efforts to enlist business men in church work and to institute local auxiliaries to the national association. Brother Allen's remarks were received with a hearty and continuous applause prophetic of the early magnification of his most important mission.

Great credit for the success of these meetings is due to the tact and felicitous expressions of acting President Smither.

An important meeting of the members of the Business Men's Association was held prior to the public meeting. The President, J. H. Allen, read part of a report which had been prepared by W. D. Pittman, the corresponding secretary, and explained the reasons for Brother Pittman's tendering his resignation of that position. The work has been carried on chiefly by correspondence, Brother Pittman not finding it possible to do as he had hoped, and get around among the churches in person. But the correspondence method has not been a success, for only about 9¾ per cent of the ministers written to have made any attempt to reply; so that any failure in the matter of aggressive work must, in considerable measure, be put upon the ministers of the brotherhood. An interesting discussion followed, in which it was the unanimous consensus of opinion that there should be no going back. E. W. Darst voiced the sentiments when he said that it was a new work, and the preachers had to be educated as well as the business men. J. H. Allen stated that other denominations were taken with the idea. J. H. Garrison thought we ought to complete the organization, and that there could be a combination of the work by making the man who is to undertake the special centennial work the secretary of the Business Men's Association. George Ringo, of Riverside, Cal., who believed his church had the only chapter on the coast, thought the association was one of the best things suggested for some time, and he had found it of great advantage in the work of his church. C. H. Winders believed that there was no way to reach men so effectually as through this men's organization. C. A. Young believed that the leaven is working, and he expressed the hope that a note be struck at the convention to encourage a large number of business men to be present at Buffalo. Geo. Muckley believed that we were on the eve of one of the most tremendous works ever done, and that we must not get impatient; and he thought the association must employ the very best man possible—a man of driving force. W. S. Dickinson moved the re-election of officers, and that the matter of a secretary be left to the Executive Committee. This was carried. Geo. Snively said that the secretary must be a man who had money, hope and ability. C. C. Chapman said there must be "drive" from the very start; he believed the societies would be doing wisely to put in the money necessary to employ a first-class man, and he made a motion that a request should be made to the four societies to make a contribution to start the work of the Business Men's Association, which motion was adopted. Paul Moore moved that the by-laws be so amended as to allow the Executive Committee to elect from one to five vice-presidents and from one to twenty-five directors in each state, as they can find suitable men to take hold and push this work, and that those attending the regular meetings should constitute a quorum. This was approved. The whole spirit of this meeting and of those held at the public sessions was that the work should be pushed as vigorously as possible. It was thought to be in no sense in conflict with any of the organizations now operating in the churches, and that it would ultimately have a greater effect for the good of the church and the cause than the auxiliaries of the C. W. B. M.

One of the most interesting moments of the convention was when Benjamin Ide Wheeler, President of the University of California, was introduced by Dean Van Kirk and made a most happy address of welcome and congratulation. He said he felt very much at home among us at once. He had been present at some of our little chapels and met the men who are doing the work. He had wondered at our energy, which possibly was due to the fact that we had unloaded many of the things that had in the past weighted down other organizations. He congratulated us because we had not spent our time in worrying about differences of opinion, but had put our energies into the things that are all important, and that meant the saving of human society. Things, he said, that divide are, when viewed in the perspective of the great whole, very small things. After a fine tribute to the Bible and an emphasis on the necessity of experience, he congratulated the Disciples of Christ on their adaptability to human needs and on their good cheer. He declared that the purpose of the university was to make men rich in fruit for God and humanity, and that no church has been a source of greater strength and help to the university over which he presided than the Christian Church. It is needless to say that the introduction of Dr. Wheeler was one of the most pleasing incidents of the convention.

President E. L. Powell presided over the closing sessions. The large auditorium and galleries were again packed with eager listeners. C. C. Chapman, president of the Southern California Board of Missions, edified all through the devotional period. "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Lead, Kindly Light," by a male quartette, were most inspirational.

President Powell most happily presented J. H. Mohorter, of Pueblo, as the special advocate of the National Benevolent Association. The address was entitled, "Christian Benevolence—First in the Heart of God, First in the Heart of Man." It was one of the masterpieces of a convention distinguished for the learning and eloquence of its speeches. We commend to all its perusal in an early issue of this paper. The association is to be congratulated on such advocacy.

J. H. Allen, again, in a telling speech presented to the consideration of the audience the subject of the organization of our business men for church service. His remarks were ably supplemented by C. C. Chapman, F. M. Dowling, L. H. Porterfield, of California, S. M. Hunt, of Massachusetts, and other prominent brethren, representing the farm, store, bank, bar and bench. It was the unanimous sentiment that this board should secure a general secretary, perfect its organization, and vigorously endeavor to enlist every brother in the church in the Lord's work.

The closing exercises were indescribably tender and beautiful. One octogenarian testified to residence in California as the only "Christian only" in the state and was inexpressibly happy to be but one now of more than 20,000 brethren. The venerable Brother Durham was once the only located Christian minister on the coast. He felt now as did ancient Simeon when he beheld the Lord. John Shackleford's words were a benediction. Space forbids quotations from the sweet farewells by Brothers Smither, Ford, White, McKeever and others and the closing sentences by Brother Powell, to whom was presented the gavel, as he thanked our hosts for their countless courtesies and invoked divine blessing on all the work done by the convention and all the hopes it had inspired. "God be with you till we meet again."

Report of the Statistical Secretary

Bro. G. A. Hoffmann pointed out that the work of the Disciples of Christ and the growth of the churches continue with unabated interest. The fields in which our growth seems to be most clearly marked are Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Louisiana, California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Pennsylvania. The gain in these states seems to be from four to ten per cent per annum. There are single congregations and districts of churches in other states where the gains are fully as good, but taken as states the reports from these are most encouraging. In some eastern states every church is expected to have a minister giving his time and attention to pastoral work. In some western and southern states where once a month preaching largely prevails, from ten to fifty per cent only have adequate pastoral care and training. As many of these members from country churches move to our cities, and as they are untrained in church life and undeveloped in spirituality, thousands are annually lost to our cause. Were it not for this great leakage as well as other shrinkages in our membership, our gains would astound the world. We have the greatest recruiting officers among men. Many thousands are continually converted from sin to the army of our Lord. But the number of officers who are to drill this immense and growing army of new recruits is insufficient to prepare them for battle. And yet it must not be forgotten that while the membership in the churches of Christ gained 90 per cent since 1890, the students in our colleges studying for the Christian ministry have gained 117 per cent. While among some of the denominations there is great drouth of young men entering the Christian ministry, the Disciples of Christ have this remarkable gain. In order to show these and other gains we present to you the following table:

	1890	1895	1900	1904
Churches	8,096	9,169	10,101	10,985
Ministers	4,039	4,929	5,737	6,417
Members	641,000	889,019	1,120,000	1,233,000
Students studying for ministry	468	690	807	1,017
Amounts contributed to national missionary societies	$146,243	$208,616	$413,641	$532,717
Amounts contributed to state missionary societies	$132,155	$148,000	$126,075	$208,082
Number of churches contributing to national Christian missionary societies	1,564	3,156	4,075	4,615
* Number of churches contributing to state, and not to national, societies	1,200	1,400	1,400	1,800
Whole number of churches contributing to missions	2,764	2,764	3,556	6,415

* Partly estimated.

These figures on the gains of ministerial students in our colleges should be approached with the following considerations: First. The number of ministers who labored acceptably for churches fifteen years ago without college preparation was much larger than now. Second. The time spent in school in the preparation for the Christian ministry is at least twenty per cent longer now than fifteen years ago. Third. The growth and demands of our churches are localizing the labors of hundreds of our ministers and making of them scriptural shepherds of a single congregation where formerly they were the great preachers of a district or state. These and other reasons might be given to indicate that if our growth in the ministry were even fifty per cent larger than it is at present, there would be no difficulty in readily adjusting and utilizing such a gain. Such an increase in our ministry would double our net gains in membership; it would deepen the spirituality of our people and even more rapidly increase our offerings for missions.

This report does not endeavor to present the annual statistics. In matters of education we have made the most rapid progress in our history. The attendance of students has been larger, the buildings constructed more numerous and costly, and the amounts added to our endowment funds more benevolent than that of any previous year. Our missionary offerings thus far also show more than the normal average gains. A single congregation gives more for missions now annually than the whole brotherhood gave in the year 1872 to our only National Society.

This report called attention to the fact that we are not utilizing the personal in missions as we should. Hence the great need of city, county and district missions, where you can put men's lives at work as well as their money. The southern and western fields are only a blessing if you will follow your brethren with the home missionary to plant churches at their doors. The home missionary board should have the means to support the greatest preachers and best organizers in the American cities.

Report of the Committee on Conference With the Free Baptists

To the American Christian Missionary Society, in convention assembled, San Francisco, Cal.:

Dear Brethren: We refer you to the last annual minutes for particulars concerning the formation of a Committee of Twelve from this body, to consult with a similar Committee of Twelve, selected by the general conference of the Free Baptists, "on all questions relating to the union of the two bodies." The persons appointed to serve on these two committees are there given. The Free Baptist committee is "a standing committee on conference with other Christian people, to meet similar committees which may be appointed by other bodies, and consult respecting doctrinal and other grounds of union, and report to the next session of the general conference." Note that the Disciples' committee is limited to consultation with Free Baptists; but the Free Baptist committee may hold consultations with any Christian people desiring conferences on union. The Baptists and Congregationalists have invited these conferences and appointed committees accordingly. The Free Baptists, in their general conference last September, declared their readiness "to form such alliances with other Christian bodies as may promise larger results in advancing the Lord's kingdom." They "regard loyalty to Christ and the Bible, and the independence of the local church, as the basis on which closer relationship may be obtained." They do not favor a union which will not "conserve all moral and legal obligations of the church as a corporation and safeguard all vested rights;" nor do they regard any movements desirable that do not promote the union of the whole denomination as a body;" and therefore, "commend the brethren to refer all proposals and plans of union to the general conference, the denominational head, that action, when taken, may be the action of the whole and not of a part." It will be seen that nothing final can be undertaken by the Free Baptists until their committee shall have reported to the next session of the general conference in 1907; and that many complicated matters must be considered before they will be ready to report. Moreover, the union must be "the union of the whole denomination as a body." Even one local church, adhering to the denominational doctrine, name and polity, would be able to hold denominational property, and would succeed to all vested rights. This is not a problem of easy solution.

It will be recalled that the Free Baptists and Disciples have had this subject under discussion before. At the annual convention of this society in October, 1888, W. L. Hayden, chairman of a similar committee, reported the result of a joint meeting held at Worcester, Mass., in September, 1888, as follows:

"It was unanimously agreed that the last commission of Christ, interpreted by the teachings and acts recorded in the New Testament, is the true basis of the union or consolidation of Christian bodies."

It was further agreed that a union of Free Baptists and Disciples on this basis involves:

"1. The adoption of a name that honors Christ as the sole Head and authority of his church. . . .

"2. The creed basis that 'Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.' . . .

"3. Conformity of the worship to the model of the New Testament church; weekly communion, practiced by the Disciples, may be adopted by the several congregations of Free Baptists as they shall see that apostolic teaching and practice require it.

"4. The recognition of the independence of the congregation in local affairs and methods of Christian work; and the duty of Christians and congregations to associate for mutual counsel and help in all general interests, and to co-operate for the advancement of the cause of Christ."

They further recommended an immediate co-operative union as follows:

"1. By mutual recognition of the approved ministers, and the congregational acts of both bodies.

"2. By free exchange of pulpits and pastors.

"3. By uniting in evangelistic services, and other Christian work.

"4. By uniting in one congregation where financial and numerical strength does not warrant two congregations."

This agreement was signed by all five of the members of the Disciples' committee, and by the chairman of the Free Baptist committee, who alone was present. Doctor Ball signed it later. Our convention of that year passed resolutions "heartily approving of this action," and recommending "that the different congregations do all in their power to accomplish the proposed union along the lines indicated by the conference committee." It does not appear that this joint report was ever presented for consideration to the general conference of the Free Baptists.

Your committee met in Cleveland, Feb. 21, 1905, and organized by electing E. B. Wakefield, chairman, and R. Moffett, secretary. We also appointed S. H. Bartlett as assistant secretary, with the privileges of a member of the committee. W. F. Cowden, of Washington, sent his resignation, with request that T. W. Phillips, of Pennsylvania, be elected in his place, which was done, and W. F. Cowden retained as advisory member. E. B. Wakefield, R. Moffett, L. L. Carpenter, J. S. Gray, T. W. Phillips and L. M. Sniff were appointed an executive committee, three to constitute a quorum. The secretary was authorized to open correspondence with the Free Baptist committee and ascertain: (1) Whether the committee would give their sanction to an immediate co-operative union, as suggested by the report of joint committee of 1888, without waiting for the action of general conference. (We believe that co-operative union is the only practicable union for many years.)

(2) Whether they desired a joint meeting any time during this year, and if so, when and where?

To these inquiries no response has been received.

Late in May we were informed that the Free Baptist committee would be in session at Ocean Park, Me., July 14, and that the Disciples' committee, or any part of it, would be received for a short conference. Accordingly we sent J. M. Van Horn, of Worcester, Mass., and S. H. Bartlett, of Cleveland. They report that they were cordially received and accorded the privilege of addressing the committee along lines that would advance the cause of union between the two bodies. They left the meeting with assurance that the committee would report after the meeting had adjourned. No report has been received from the secretary, but we learn from the Morning Star that in view of the fact that the Baptists and Congregationalists, as well as Disciples, had requested conferences on union, "the Free Baptist committee decided to hold a meeting to meet representatives of these bodies at some mutually convenient time and place, possibly in connection with the National Church Federation convention to be held in New York city next November." There will therefore be nothing for this committee to do until the Free Baptist committee shall have notified us of the time and place of their next meeting.

It is well known that the Disciples have been pleading for nearly one hundred years, for the union of all Christian people by a return to the doctrine and practice of the church of Christ as found in the New Testament. We have believed that a return to the church of the first century is the way to the union for which Christ prayed. The keynote of this plea was given, and expressed by Thomas Campbell in 1809: "That we may come fairly and firmly to original ground, upon clear and certain premises, and take up things just as the apostles left them, that thus disentangled from the accruing embarrassments of intervening ages, we may stand, with evidence, upon the same ground on which the church stood at the beginning."

The Disciples believe that they stand on this ground, and will not consent to union upon any other. And it is because the Free Baptists are reported as standing substantially on the same ground, that we have hope that these conferences and discussions will make this fact clear to both bodies, and show that union is already an accomplished fact. Between the Disciples and the Pedobaptist bodies there is too little in common to encourage the same hope for a speedy union.

It will take time. It may take much time, but all the signs of the times point clearly to a coming union, and we trust it will be the union for which Jesus prayed. His people are praying for it, and growing into it, and the more so as they come to recognize that they are "workers together with God."

We submit herewith a special report by the secretary to which we call the attention of the committee to which the report may be referred.
R. Moffett, Secretary.
E. B. Wakefield, Chairman.

P. S. The supplemental report deals with the business interests of the committee, and recommends that some provision be made to meet necessary incidental and traveling expenses. Also that the committee be reconstructed "with a view to locating the members near some central point, and comparatively near places where regular meetings and joint meetings may be held."

A Modern Plea
for Ancient Truth

Report of the Standing Committee on Evangelism.

The work of this committee has been the not easy task of putting into practice an untested theory, the giving of form and activity to an idea, the clothing of dry bones with flesh, and the breathing of the breath of life into a new body.

The superintendent did not assume the duties of office until November, 1904; hence the reports for but nine months of the first year's endeavor to organize our evangelism.

Our first aim has been to awaken a deeper, more widespread, more practical and abiding interest in evangelism; to make soul-winning the passion of every preacher and Disciple, and so to direct this passion as to save the waste, both of effort and result, in former years. This we have sought to do in various ways.

In order to get our work fully before the preachers and churches we prepared a special evangelistic number of the "American Home Missionary," which was wholly given to the work of this committee: we sent out circular letters and folders, concerning our aims and methods, to all our preachers and many others. We have set forth in these our own views of an organized evangelism; we have sought to obtain from all the brethren, through these mediums, suggestion, advice and friendly criticism, and have conscientiously sought to make our organization an agency to help every preacher, increase his efficiency as a soul-winner, and save his ministry from ruts, dry rot and formalism, changing in many cases the pulpit from a lecture platform into a life-saving station. We have tried to increase the preacher's power and efficiency, multiply his workers by enlisting his entire membership in the work of soul-winning, and thus extend more rapidly the borders of the kingdom of God.

A department of evangelism has been conducted regularly in the "American Home Missionary."

We are slowly and laboriously organizing an evangelistic bureau or an intelligence bureau concerning evangelists and singers. Many churches desire the services of these workers, but do not know how to go about securing them. They are unacquainted with the persons who do evangelistic preaching and singing. We are slowly making up lists of evangelists and singers, and pastors who can hold an occasional meeting; we are seeking to obtain such accurate information regarding these persons as to enable us wisely to assist the congregations in selecting workers from these available sources. We are aiming to get the workers into those particular fields for which they are best adapted, and are advising them against going to the places where, in our judgment, they may not reasonably hope to succeed. Our excessive congregationalism results in a great waste of energy. Numbers are seeking the evangelist, and evangelists fields of labor, but they miss each other, and the would-be workers are too oft idle. In seeking to remedy this defect, we have brought together about 110 evangelists and congregations, and have likewise secured an occasional singer for a church desiring one.

We have encouraged our brethren in cities where we have two or more congregations to conduct simultaneous campaigns, with a view to impressing these cities much more deeply than is possible when revivals are held separately. Kansas City, Cincinnati and Pittsburg are among the cities planning for simultaneous campaigns in the early autumn. It is thought that the campaign in and about the last-named city will result in 50 of our congregations beginning meetings on October 29. A fund of some $12,000 is being raised in advance to guarantee the expenses of the campaign. Never in our history have the daily papers shown such eager desire to get the news concerning our movements as concerning this evangelistic campaign.

In Marion, Ind., in July, was held a simultaneous campaign, which is unique in our history. Some of its fruits were about 150 conversions, one new congregation organized in a good part of the city, good will and co-operation brought about between our two old congregations, which had not been working harmoniously.

We have conducted two schools of evangelism—one in Chautauqua, N. Y., and the other in Bethany Park, Ind. Those who attended received instruction and inspiration which delighted them and equipped them far better for the work of soul-winning. We expect to have at least a half-dozen schools next summer.

Rallies and conferences on evangelism are being arranged for a number of our cities and strategic points for next autumn and winter. We are planning to visit all our colleges and address the students who are preparing for the ministry, with a view to giving the evangelistic spirit to all their work, making them from the beginning of their career successful soul-winners. We hope to point out to them the best methods of procedure, and so interest them as to make them avoid many mistakes and increase their power and the fruitfulness of their work.

Your superintendent was permitted to work in two great union revivals during the winter. He fully believes that these meetings are the key which will admit both him and many of our preachers to the ranks of union evangelists. We urge our brethren to turn toward this kind of evangelism, and to prepare themselves rightly to do it. We further urge them everywhere not only to enter into the union campaigns, but to stand lovingly and firmly for a full and fair representation on the preaching forces in all campaigns of which they are a part.

With a view to building up self-supporting churches by a single great evangelistic effort instead of by the longer process of pastoral care, we have tried a few meetings. The results thus far justify the conclusion that, while this may occasionally be possible in villages and towns in the south and west, it is not possible, unless very rarely, in large cities in any part of our country. The expense of such campaigns in cities apparently is out of proportion to the results gained. As an occasional method it might be wise, but in the light of our present experience it is the exception and not the rule.

Hundreds of churches, many preachers and some evangelists have written us asking for instruction as to conducting successful meetings. As far as possible we have furnished the desired information. In order the better to answer such calls, we are writing and publishing articles and tracts on various phases of evangelism. We are compiling a general literature of evangelism, and have taken some steps toward creating such a literature of our own. We hope ere long to publish a book on evangelism and a book on methods.

We are encouraging all pastors to be evangelists, not only in the service of their own congregation, where every sermon aims at turning people to our Lord, but likewise are seeking to have them released from their congregations once or twice during the year to hold evangelistic meetings for other churches. We are persuading an occasional man of education, ripe Christian culture and marked ability as an evangelist, to resign his pastorate and do evangelistic work.

We are arousing an evangelistic sentiment in our Sunday schools. We have made some small progress toward making the Society of Christian Endeavor more largely an evangelistic force.

Your committee has a vision of a great work. It is a rule that the hosts of the Lord can be but slowly impressed with the idea of a new service such as we have in mind. We are earnestly attempting great things for God, and through the responses of the brethren, whether immediate or long deferred, hope for great things from God.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF CHURCH EXTENSION.

The receipts from the corresponding secretary, for the ten months, are $24,504.12, which is a falling off of $4,555.93, compared with the same months last year, due to a falling behind in annuity receipts. This falling off in annuities will be more than made up by annuity gifts of $10,000 that are promised for August and September.

At the board meeting on Aug. 1 the funds were so low that the board will not be justified in making any more promises of loans until after the September offering. The board has granted $100,000 more than we have money on hand to pay, and this does not include loans promised last year which are not yet closed. It is hoped that the brotherhood will realize the necessity of making a great effort to supply this deficiency during the annual offering, so that, with returns on loans and individual contributions, the board may be able to meet its obligations. Unless the September offering is more liberal than usual it will be many months before the board can grant any more loans. During the last two months the board paid out on loans over $40,000. Over forty churches applied for loans during June and July.

The total new receipts were $38,125.49, while the entire receipts, including returns on loans, were $96,061.51. The amount in permanent fund, July 31, 1905, was $457,332.17.

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ILLINOIS.

Pekin, Sept. 4.—We closed our tent meeting last night, with fourteen added; thirteen by baptism, one by statement. Chas. H. Altheide, of Bloomfield, Ia., singing evangelist, was our leader of song and soloist. The music was led by a large chorus. The meeting was successful in every respect and we feel that we have won a victory for the Lord and the primitive gospel. The tent was pitched a half block from the court house square. We competed with band concerts, boat excursions, street fakirs and numerous other attractions, and our pulpit was within twenty feet of the rear door of a saloon and billiard hall which was in full blast every night, but we drew good audiences and preached them the simple gospel and were rewarded by seeing souls born into the kingdom.—J. A. Barnett.

Saybrook, Sept. 3—There was one confession yesterday. We observed Church Extension day and raised more than $17.—James N. Thomas.

INDIANA.

Fowler, Sept. 9.—I begin here to-morrow, Sept. 10, with the pastor, S. F. Rogers. Will assist him also at Boswell at the close of this meeting.—Vitallis E. Ridenour, singer.

Indianapolis, Sept. 9.—Closed a 19 days' meeting at Bluff Creek with 27 added—seven by letter, one from United Brethren, one reclaimed and 18 made the confession. Fourteen men came by primary obedience.—Clay Trusty.

Mooresville, Sept. 5.—The Clark family closed a meeting of twenty-one days, with sixteen additions to the church. Brother Clark saw that the elders and deacons were selected and left the church in fine condition.—E. B. S.

IOWA.

Kalona, Sept. 4.—I am in a meeting for the Frank Pierce church, a country point, and the prospects are good. Sister Van Kirk, the pastor's wife, is the leader of song. I have one or two open dates for those desiring an evangelist. My temporary address is Kalona, Ia., permanent address, Villisca, Ia.—S. M. Perkins.

KANSAS.

LeRoy, Aug. 30.—Martin family is having a great meeting, with 51 additions to date.

KENTUCKY.

Latonia, Sept 4.—One addition at Latonia yesterday.—H. C. Runyan.

Latonia, Sept. 4.—Seven persons made the good confession at Bank Lick church on Sept. 3.—P. H. Duncan.

Bedford, Sept. 9.—G. W. Nutter, of the Parkland Church, Louisville, is in a meeting here. Three confessions the second night of the meeting. Prof. H. F. Cappa is in charge of the singing.

MASSACHUETTS.

Everett, Sept. 4.—During the month of August, we had seven additions—four by letter and baptism, three by confession.—A. T. June.

MISSOURI.

Columbia, Sept. 4.—We closed a two weeks' meeting with home forces at Mt. Pleasant church, in Howard county, September 1. This church has not done any good for several years. But God blessed our labors. The visible results were twenty-three added. The meeting closed full of interest and large audiences. There were four added to the church at New Hope, at the regular morning service last Lord's day.—B. F. Goslin, pastor.

Richland.—We closed a two weeks' meeting at Crocker. Joseph Gaylor began with me on the third Sunday, but we both had to leave for regular work on the fourth Sunday. Brother Gaylor was not well, and did not come back. I continued the meeting. We closed with sixteen accessions—nine confessions, three reclaimed, one by letter, two from M. E. and one from the Baptists. A prayer-meeting will be started there this week. Sister Watkins' Junior band is doing nicely. The work at Dixon is doing nicely. They raised more than their apportionment for Church Extension, also paid their county pledge of $5.—J. R. Blunt, pastor.

St. Louis, Sept. 4.—One confession and baptism at Bonne Terre, on last Lord's day.—J. G. M. Luttenberger.

Aullville, Sept. 5.—Meeting here four days old, with four accessions.—L. B. Coggins.

Fayette, Sept. 6.—Had a good meeting, with forty-five additions.—W. H. Dollard.

Brunswick, Sept. 4.—One baptism yesterday. Revival begins September 17 and closes October 8. We will teach the gospel, and Frank M. O'Neal, Springfield, Mo., will be leader of song.—E. H. Williamson.

Belton, Sept. 4.—Four added by confession and baptism. C. E. reorganized. We begin meeting here October 1 with home forces.—W. H. Scrivner.

Kansas City, Sept. 5.—One more baptism at my regular appointment at Fairview. Our work is much stronger there.—C. L. Fife.

Canton, Sept. 5.—Our meeting at La Grange closed recently with fourteen added; nine by primary obedience, one from the U. B.'s and four were reinstated. The preaching was done by G. W. Buckner, of Macomb, Ill. The La Grange church has passed through many trying experiences, but is on the top grade once more. Bro. J. E. Yokley takes the work after September 15.—R. M. Dungan.

UNION OF CHRISTIANS IN LOCAL AND GENERAL WORK.—John 17:20,21; 1 Cor. 3:1-9.

Union the Supreme Desire of our Lord. Under the very shadow of the cross our Savior pours out his heart in pleading for the union of all who shall believe on him through the testimony of his apostles. This includes all Christian believers, for only through the apostles' testimony have they come to faith in the Son of God. If, therefore, we regard the earnest longings of our Redeemer, we will be united in faith, in love and in service. The Disciples of Christ may rest assured that in pleading for the unity of Christians they are in perfect harmony with the divine will.

Union the Natural Condition of the Church. The church is called the body of Christ, the house of God, the bride of the Lamb, the temple of the Holy Spirit. (Eph. 1:22, 23; 1 Cor. 12:12, 13; 1 Tim. 3:15; 2 Cor. 11:2; Rev. 19:6-10; 21:9-11; 1 Cor. 3:16, 17; Eph. 2:19-22.) All these figures of speech involve the unity of the church, and show the fatal effects of division to be destructive of the divine purpose. In seeking to restore primitive Christianity, therefore, we are endeavoring simply to return to the normal state of the early church.

This Union Must Characterize the Local Church. The local church is the representative, in its community, of the whole body of Christ. When there is strife and division in the local congregation, the cause of the Master suffers shame before the whole world. And those responsible for this strife are accounted carnal, wicked, unchristian. (See 1 Cor. 3:1-4; 1:10-15.) It is one of the sad ironies of our history as a people that some of the loudest talkers for Christian union have been the worst sinners in the matter of disunion. Over questions of expediency in work and worship have risen wrangling and bitterness that grieved the heart of God, and alienated the hearts of brethren. Preachers have headed parties in the congregation, each claiming to be "the Church," and have scandalized the cause of the Lord in the community. Such sins ought to be repented of, and such unholy strife put away from the body of Christ. Some sin against the unity of the church by being indifferent to its needs, and taking no part in its work or its financial support. Union in the local congregation demands that every member shall do his own duty in all the affairs pertaining to that local body of Christians. Such union would make every church among us prosper and grow.

This Union Must Characterize Our General Work. There are some duties belonging to the church of Christ which cannot be fully discharged by the local congregations, independently of one another. The evangelization of destitute parts of our country; the building of houses of worship for new and weak congregations; the proper care of aged and destitute preachers and widows and homeless little children; the preaching of the gospel of Christ to the heathen nations afar off; these are obligations that can only be discharged by the co-operation of all our membership. This necessity is the reason for the existence of our various missionary and benevolent societies. Through these all our churches may share in the great work of making Christianity the very life of all men, in all nations. To refuse to co-operate in these holy enterprises because of indifference, is to sin against the world's needs, and the Savior's express commands. To refuse from "conscientious objections" to organized methods of doing the work, is to sin against reason, which can find no other way to accomplish any of the larger tasks in behalf of humanity, in business, education or religion. The fact that those who fail to unite in our co-operative work do little or nothing for the salvation of the world at large is sufficient proof that their theory is unwise and their course doomed to failure. The union for which our dear Lord prayed will not be fully realized until all believers wear his name, and seek his will alone; until the members of every local congregation live and work together in beautiful harmony, and all these congregations bear their share in the larger enterprises through which the world is to be brought to Christ.

THIRD QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Golden Text.—The Lord is thy keeper. —Psalm 121:5.

The lessons of the past quarter cover a period of about 125 years, including something over a century preceding the final conquest of Jerusalem by Babylonia and a few years of the captivity.

Beginning with Sennacherib's invasion of Judah, in 701 B. C., we find Isaiah the dominant personality of the kingdom and Hezekiah the reigning king, by turns weak and reckless, self-willed and devout. Under Isaiah's influence, Hezekiah brought about a religious reformation. From the time of the separation of the kingdoms (937 B. C.) Judah enjoyed periodical reformations, which usually took the form of a more or less emphatic protest against worship at high places and the use of pagan and immoral rites in the service of Jehovah. Asa and Joash had been among the reformers. Hezekiah's reform was much more sweeping—evidently too sweeping to be popular, for it was followed by a reaction under Manasseh. It was during Hezekiah's reign that Sennacherib led his expedition against his rebellious vassals in the west. The time was not ripe for Judah's fall and the Lord prepared destruction for Sennacherib's host (Lesson I).

Hezekiah's career was in danger of being cut off by sickness and he prayed for deliverance. It was especially necessary, in that crisis of the nation's affairs, that he who controlled the policy of the government should be wholly convinced of Jehovah's protecting care. The constant temptation was to seek safety for the country by military measures or by foreign alliances. The message of the prophets was that the only safety lay in trust in God. Hezekiah's remarkable cure, through the agency of Isaiah, must have been intended to impress this upon him (Lesson II).

The sufferings of the chosen people at the hands of their conquerors were intended to be remedial rather than punitive. They had sinned and they must be punished, but the prophet always spoke a note of hope. He told of salvation through suffering, of perfection through punishment, of redemption through sacrifice. So the sublime messages of the latter part of Isaiah (Lessons III and IV), whether composed before or during the captivity, must be conceived as bearing an intelligible relation to the needs of the time in which they were spoken, while in the light of God's larger redemptive plan for the race, as disclosed in the revelation through Jesus, their meaning becomes vastly richer and more spiritual.

Manasseh, who succeeded Hezekiah, lent himself to a reactionary movement which undid the reforming work of his predecessor and reduced Judah almost to the level of a heathen nation. The danger of corruption through the absorption of pagan rites from the neighboring races around and even within Palestine, was now augmented by the danger of corruption through the overwhelming influence of Assyria, whose increasing political ascendency of necessity gave new prestige to her civilization and her paganism. Manasseh fell into this current of corruption. The record mentions briefly that he was carried captive to Babylon and after his return turned from his evil ways. But his reputation was already fixed by his former wickedness and the book of Kings mentions neither his captivity nor his repentance (Lesson V).

With Josiah the pendulum swung back to the side of reform, the influence of the prophets revived, and the law in regard to the centralization of worship (whether newly codified or only newly discovered) was for the first time firmly enforced and established. It was probably the reformation under Josiah more than anything else that prepared the nation to retain some degree of faithfulness and purity under the hard trial of captivity (Lessons VI and VII).

The death of Josiah, in a vain and unnessary attempt to resist an Egyptian expedition, ushered in a brief period of Egyptian domination over Judah's affairs. Jehoiakim was an appointee of Pharaoh. Jeremiah the prophet is now the great figure in the nation's religious life. The fate of the nation was already sealed. The crash could not be prevented. It could only be predicted and interpreted. This Jeremiah did. As a prophet of evil, he was accused of disloyalty. When it became unsafe to preach, he wrote. The king showed his contempt by destroying the manuscript. Later the prophet's life was in jeopardy, but the then king, Zedekiah, protected him while keeping him in prison (Lessons VIII and IX).

The fall of Jerusalem before the power of Babylonia in 588 B. C. was but the culmination of a long period of practical vassalage in which the independence and dignity of the nation had been wholly lost and its fate had been a mere matter of administrative detail for an oriental monarch to decide. It was more than conquest. It was intended to be national annihilation by the transportation of the people and their amalgamation with other races. It had worked out so when Assyria had carried away the people of the northern kingdom after the fall of Samaria in 721 B. C. But the result was somewhat different in the case of Judah. God's plan included a restoration through which all the nations of the earth were to be blessed (Lessons X and XI).

The captivity developed heroes of faith whose exploits strengthened the courage and hope of the captives and in similar crises in the later history of the nation, furnished inspiration and encouragement. Daniel was one of these favorite heroes, whose upright example during the early days of the captivity was scarcely more potent than his increasing fame in Maccabean times when the nation was confronted by similar perils (Lesson XII).

OUR HOME MISSIONARY WORK.—Matt. 9:35-38; 10:1-15.

For the Leader.

Our Home Missionary work. If any people in the land are loyal to the fellowship and work of which they are a part, that people must be the Disciples of Christ. Our home missionary work means the work we are doing for home missions.

Home missions are first in order. Jerusalem was the starting place of the gospel work. Judea and Samaria was the first extension of that work. Antioch and the ends of the earth came next.

Antioch and the ends of the earth were not possible until Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria were taken as a base of operations. To hold to either home or foreign missions, the one as a preference over the other, is to miss the point altogether.

We do one that the other may be possible. The one for the sake of the other, and both for our sake and the will of the Lord.

It will help us to look up and give the meeting some of the definite things we are doing in the home field.

For the Members.

1. Helping the cities. The work of our home board that commends itself to us is the help to the cities. Missions in the neglected parts of the great cities are of the first importance. Some one has said that we must either save the cities or be saved from them. We have missions in the cities of Halifax, N. S., Montreal, Can., Winnipeg, Man., Brooklyn, N. Y., Syracuse, N. Y., East Orange, N. J., Charleston, S. C., Tampa, Fla., Mobile, Ala., Atlanta, Ga., El Paso, Tex., Galveston, Tex., Albuquerque, N. M., Salt Lake City, and many other cities. What these churches will be able to do when they become themselves the foster parents of missions no one can estimate. It will be no mean work.

2. Helping the state boards. Our general home mission board helps many state boards of missions. Where the combined efforts of the churches of a state are not enough to keep a strong man in the field to lead the work, or where help is needed for other purposes, an appropriation is made. This brings the touch down to the nearest point to home. It allies all our home missionary interests more closely. The following state boards have been helped: Alabama, Arkansas, California, both North and South, Florida, Georgia, Indian Territory, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, New England, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Ontario, Oregon, Pennsylvania, both east and west, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin.

3. Porto Rico is one of the new fields of our home missionary effort. We were obliged to follow the flag into this new territory. Here is a condition most trying. The health conditions are a dreadful trial for the American missionary. In fact the condition in this respect of the natives is anything but desirable. The listlessness and languor of the natives, owing to a malady peculiar to that region, make life a long drag and a tiresome task to many. Then the religious preparation has been bad. It is a Catholic country. Not of the American type, but a Spanish Catholic country. Superstition still holds sway here. The priest and the bishop rule. They have not passed the age of charms and relics. Bits of paper blessed by the bishop are sold and guaranteed to keep the devil within a certain distance of the holder; that is, he cannot come nearer than a certain distance of the one who has said piece of paper. It is a harder field than India or China.

4. Our home mission work is also among three foreign peoples within our borders. The German work, the Scandinavian work, the Mexican work. Here is a work with the Mexicans that is not lacking in the picturesque, if any one has been given to the view that home missions are not interesting, that they are dry and monotonous. Brother Taylor who was our missionary to Porto Rico—and many heard him at Omaha—has gone into the work with the Spanish and the Mexican people of the southwest. A missionary is supported among the Germans of Cleveland, Ohio. Wm. Kraft is the missionary. Our home board also supports Julius Stone among the Scandinavians of the middle northwest. Our work has just begun among these foreign people. It is a great field. There is room enough here for a whole board to give its energies and plans to carry forward. Only money is lacking. Men could be found. The plea is rich and powerful unto the saving of these people.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Do I make an effort to inform myself upon what we as a people are doing?

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Vigan, Ilocos Sur, July 17.—Five young men were baptized last week at Magsinggal, inaugurating the church there. The Bible College at Vigan has six resident students.—HERMON P. WILLIAMS.

TENNESSEE.

Bristol, Sept. 5.—The campaign under the Virginia state board, lasting eleven weeks, six at Portsmouth, five at Petersburg, closed last week, and I am now with Wm. Burleigh, at Bristol, Va.-Tenn., for September. We organized at Portsmouth, with seventy-six, after which twenty-four more were added, making one hundred in all. Bro. W. C. Wade, the supply pastor, and several others write enthusiastically of the young church. A party came over on special excursion from Portsmouth to Petersburg. H. C. Combs, secretary state board, was with me nearly all the meeting. He is a big, broad, brotherly man, a fine preacher withal, a born secretary and man of affairs. The Portsmouth meeting went far beyond our most sanguine expectations. The Petersburg meeting was held in a large tabernacle, a mile from the church. The main effort was to encourage a feeble, discouraged band and solve several delicate problems. It was to be the last effort to save the cause there. For three weeks only two or three additions, although crowds were great; then confessions began in earnest; one night twelve, another twenty-four, until seventy-two stood out for Christ; seventy being adults. Brother Richards continues the good work.—HERBERT YEUELL.

TEXAS.

Garland, Sept. 6.—Closed meeting at Tripp last Thursday night. We had no organization there. I left a congregation of 21 members; two from the world and one from the Baptists, a young man studying for the ministry. They will have preaching once a month. Meeting at New Hope resulted in eight additions.—CHAS. CHASTEEN.

Austin, Sept. 1.—We have had during the warm summer months 29 additions to the church, of whom 14 were by confession and baptism. The work has kept up well during the hottest summer we have ever had.—J. W. LOWBER.

VIRGINIA.

Newport News, Sept. 2.—Just closed a short meeting at Lebanon church, Lee Hall, with sixteen additions; eight by baptism and eight by letter or statement. W. F. Tray is the regular minister at Lebanon. Two additions here at Thirtieth Street Church at regular services since last report.—MILO ATKINSON.

Bristol, Sept. 9.—Evangelist Yeuell began a four weeks' campaign here Sept. 3. There were five added the first day, and the attendance and interest is great on the start. A Chautauqua in full blast with celebrated speakers day and night does not detract from the interest of the meetings.—WILLIAM BURLEIGH.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Beckley.—Beckley is a growing town of 1,500 people. Three years ago the Christians built a house and organized a congregation of twenty-four members. The congregation had grown to about 130 members, when Bro. W. S. Buchanan, of Marion, Ind., reached us about three weeks ago, and began what has proved to be the greatest meeting in the history of Beckley. Every member was put to work. There were 102 additions—six confessions, thirteen reclaimed, seventeen by statement, seven from the Baptists, two from the Methodists, one from the Holiness church, one from the Lutheran church. God was extolled.—G. W. PYLES, pastor, G. W. OGDEN, minister.

SUFFERED 15 YEARS

From Itching and Painful Humor, Affecting Head and Body. Cured in a Week by Cuticura.

"For fifteen years I had eczema all over my head and body. Words cannot express how I suffered from the itching and pain. I had given up hope when a friend told me to get Cuticura. After bathing with Cuticura Soap and applying Cuticura Ointment for three days, my head was as clear as ever, and to my surprise and joy, one cake of soap and one box of ointment made a complete cure in one week." Family Circle

The Enjoyment of Home.

By Grace Farrington Gray.

There are many Marthas in the world. Our modern men and women are, in the vast majority of cases, "cumbered with much serving." Many-sided civilization makes infinite demands upon the individual. There are so many things to be done, and so short a time in which to do them, that we are unconsciously drawn into the rapids of manifold routine duties. We are whirled from one interest to another, each more pressing than the last, until life is swallowed up in waves of haste and excitement.

We have "no time"—no time for ourselves, no time for our friends, no time for our books, no time to enjoy, no time to live. So inured have we become to this unnatural life that we dream of nothing better. We prefer to drift with the current. It requires a man of strong purpose and strong character to stem the tide and strike out for himself.

At the utmost we can not, in this day and age of the world, experience all sides of life. We must choose. He who would accomplish worthy things, he who would live a happy and successful life, must select his part and, shutting out all antagonistic interests, cling only to his ideal. Few there are who are able to do this. The mass of society ebbs and flows with the sea of humanity.

Scheming for our remote welfare, we forget our immediate happiness. Absorbed in a multiplicity of formal duties, we trample over the very things we seek—the moments of leisure, the days of peace, the refinements of life, the acts of love, which constitute the happiness of which we dream, and which we vainly hope to attain through those remote ends of fame, fortune, and position, to which we consecrate our best efforts.

As one who walks through the sweet sunrise mist of a spring morning, intent upon the dusty highway, and senseless of the greenness of the fields, the fragrance of the apple blossoms, and the chirps of the birds, so man walks through the good things of life, intent upon the mere mechanical feat of getting over the ground, and senseless of the higher things, the dearer things, of enjoyment, culture and love.

The devoted mother is a typical Martha, "careful and troubled about many things." Thinking only of the interests of her family, she, nevertheless, sacrifices the good times of the home, which are their richest inheritance, for a myriad of household duties. Some of these duties make for happiness, but many of them are immaterial—mere pride, or affectation, or indulgence in some pet occupation. Meantime the family starves for "the good part" in the face of abundance. They are scattered. Only the insatiate monster of household machinery remains.

The father, zealous for prosperity and advancement, sells his birthright for a mess of pottage, and finds when his life is lived that the silent papers in his desk or the clattering mills on the river are but small interest upon the investment of mind and heart and soul. They but mock that happiness which is now as far past as it once seemed in the future.

What men need for happiness is not more opportunities, but more ability to enjoy. They need that broad-minded judgment which puts all things in their proper relation and discriminates, moment by moment, between the immaterial and the important. They need the perception and the force of character to seize hold upon "the good part, which shall not be taken away."

Work has necessarily a large place in the practical world. It is the great benefactor of mankind. But it should be the servant and not the master. When men yield themselves wholly to the treadmill of the commonplace and the utilitarian, they become mere machines. They should remember that there are things which are not measured in the coin of the realm. And in the end these are the things which count. There are bonds that are better than government bonds. Daily peace, serenity and pleasure are more to be desired than a hypothetical happiness in some more prosperous future.

Choose, then, "the good part, which shall not be taken away."—From "Dreams and Ideals."

The Spirit of the Northwest, Where Men Laugh Equally at Success and Failure.

Joseph Blethen tells in the August "World's Work" "What the Northwest Is." His conception of it may be briefly told in this quotation:

There has been a similar transition in character from westerner to American. The horseback era followed the navigation of the streams, and then the railroad came to hang the great spaces of the west with cities like long circuits of electric lights waving along a boulevard. With the railroad the westerner passed away, leaving the American citizen proud of his section. With the railroad came the period of town building and town booming, wherein the men from the east, traveling westward in a Pullman, endeavored to make fortunes overnight in real estate gambling. It took the collapse of the boom and the awful years that made Kansas bleed and populism prosper to teach them that they had found a new empire. In these men are now blended the traits of the cowboy and of the real estate man, of the vigilante and the student of law; but added to all these is the conservatism of the capitalist and the responsibilities of success. They "plunge" less now, since they have more to risk; they fight harder now, since they have more to protect. But they are the same adaptable, energetic, optimistic spirits who pushed the pioneer ahead and created for themselves great wealth where only opportunity awaited their coming. They are still pushing. These are the men who have made that three-fifths of the nation which lies west of Chicago so fat that the cliff-dwellers of Manhattan have grown richer by selling them their wares—from steel bridges to magazines, from life insurance to Massachusetts state bonds. Their one care is a constant watch for opportunity and their rule of honor is respect for every other man's right to try. They laugh when they win, because success in a successful country need not be taken too seriously. They laugh also when they fail, because failure amid so many opportunities is ludicrous. They are crude and they meet their social problems in their wives' names. Their optimism is the optimism of plenty; their conceit grows out of their achievements. The New Yorker scornfully says: "Why should I go west?

Church Manners and Courtesies.

For the last month and more we have taken part in a little drama which has been enacted in almost every church—and over and over again—a little scene which might well be called the first act of "the cold polite."

We came back from our summer's rest by the shore or among the hills, having in the long months of our absence seen none of the familiar faces which greet us each Sunday in our own place of worship.

In the country—if we were not too near the city—we had, mayhap, met much courtesy and friendliness in the church we attended. After each service the pastor made a special effort to greet us—the "leading members" held out welcoming hands and in true country fashion inquired as to our health, our pleasure and our comfort—even going to the length of asking our opinion of the sermon.

It was all so pleasant and cordial and seemed a part of the breeze, the trees, the simple life and the unconventionality of the season and the place.

When we reached home in the autumn and went back to our own church, and into our accustomed pew we brought with us some of the genial glow we had found elsewhere.

But alas! Few are the city churches where the glow can linger and illumine the winter days. Unless the position and prominence of the church-goer is such as to make him a marked personality he receives scant attention from any one not known to him in circles outside the church. In some cases this is carried so far that the men and women accustomed to sit in plain sight of each other for years do not, after the summer separation, acknowledge each other's presence by so much as a bow—much less by any cordial handshake and inquiry as to what the months of absence have wrought.

This is true of many Protestant churches, at least, and particularly so of those which draw their congregations from a rich and fashionable neighborhood.

There seems to be some secret dread lest a church acquaintance should wickedly aspire to become a social comrade as well, and unless one is sure of the standing and claims of such an acquaintance we act as if no greater misfortune could befall us, and we present to all who have not been introduced a stern front which seems to say, "Speak to me at your peril!" —or, at the best, we pass the aspiring one with a gaze of complete indifference.

Now we know that in every organization there must be people of widely differing positions—that there must be social gulfs which it would be most unwise to attempt to bridge, even if the attempt be made in the ordinary way in which we meet those lower in the social scale than ourselves.

So this is not a plea for the social unity of any body of workers or worshipers, but it is a plea for the abolishing for one day of all class distinctions between people engaged in the worship of God. If our worship has been done in the true spirit it has brought to us the remembrance of a common brotherhood, which is one of the closest ties humanity knows—and in the light of this memory the richest, the most gifted, of mankind could not pass quickly by, indifferent to the little courtesies due from him to those around him.

It is not necessary to seek out the lowly washerwoman to dazzle her with our gracious condescension; the greeting to her is well in its place, and we must admit that it is usually given with tact and cordiality; it is the quiet little body in the next pew—quite as much of a lady as you are—who slips in and out of her place just as she has done every Sunday for six years quite unnoticed, who needs and would appreciate your cordial smile and kindly greeting. She would resent your condescension, and there is no question of that, but what is courteous would meet with a quick return from her.

Or, it may be that close to your place sits a young woman who has almost grown up under your eyes—you know each other perfectly well by sight, if not by name, why should you wait to know more before offering each other the commonplace courtesy of a cordial handshake or an inquiry which betokens the sense of the other's existence?

Our city is too big and its population too varied to make it possible that a church friendship should often be much closer. Yet even the danger of a possible effort of the other side to make it so should not be sufficient reason for our forgetting that in this particular house and in this service we are all equal, and that here no failure in politeness and friendliness can be excused, especially to strangers. We would not fail in the ordinary walks of life. Given the usual amount of gentle breeding, we endure heroically the boredom of tedious people and the society of those we consider our inferiors; yet week after week we carefully avert our eyes from the "unintroduced" in the next pews, and walk down the aisles shoulder to shoulder with them, but quite blind to their presence.

The smile and bow of casual acquaintances would be a simple politeness—and merely that—in nowise insisting upon a recognition which shall lead to an attempt at friendship.—Public Ledger.

Setting Sail.

Tomorrow I have wastes of sea to ride,
Long wastes, beneath the blue and boundless dome,
And wild the wind, and white the breakers comb,
But yet I fear not shoal or swelling tide—
Home lies the other side!

Some other morrow I shall sail a tide
Vaster and darker. But in farther skies
Through breaking mists what shining heights may rise—
And in great quietness I shall abide,
With home the other side!

Stopping the Paper.

Benjamin Bigguns, the leading citizen of Punkville, rushed into the office of the "Weekly Banner," and, shaking his fist under the editor's nose, indignantly cried:

"I want you to stop my paper at once. Your miserable sheet shall never be permitted to enter my door again!"

"Wh-what's the matter?" the editor gasped.

"There!" the great man snarled, "look at that! You asked me last week to give you a list of the maxims I have made for myself—a list of the rules that have aided me to win success! There! Look at that! I wrote that my first and greatest rule was this:

"'Always make a friend whenever you can.'"

"Yes," assented the editor, "I remember it."

"Look! Look! There it is! 'Always work a friend whenever you can!' And my name signed to it!"—Record-Herald.

English Walnuts

AN EXCELLENT, SAFE INVESTMENT

Builds a home and maintains it, and in the finest climate in the world. The walnut is not a perishable product, but grows better each year as the trees grow older. Trees are thrifty; growers and records show them to live and bear for a thousand years.

Do You Want a Safe Investment—

one that is not only safe, but will earn you a large per cent? It is an investment in land and water—26,628 acres of land near San Diego, Cal.

Of this, 16,628 acres are rich Mesa land, good for grape-growing, wheat and barley raising and cattle ranches, worth $25 an acre.

Ten thousand acres is rich valley land, suitable for English Walnut culture, and is now being sold in ten-acre ranches for above purposes at $150 an acre.

Within twenty-two miles of the best harbor on the Pacific Coast, and one of the finest resorts in the world, "Coronado Beach."

We are incorporated for only 720 shares at $100 per share, and the land is worth double that price as it now stands.

The development of a placer mine of 100 acres, owned by this company, by patent. This mine makes a good showing on the surface, and all experts perdict a fine income.

The development of a town site, wherein the land will yield from $500 to $1,000 per acre, also a lumber yard for the building of homes for the land buyers.

"This is one of the favored spots of the earth, and people will come to you from all quarters to live in your genial and healthful atmosphere."—PROFESSOR AGASSIZ.

"San Diego has the most equable climate in the world."—GENERAL GREELY, chief signal officer (at the time, the head of the government weather service.)

"One who has ever breathed this atmosphere would want to live here always."—EX-PRESIDENT HARRISON.

The natural growth of the surrounding country will pay a handsome profit in itself, but adding our development of the land, it will pay a far larger profit—at least $200 a year for six years.

This is not a stock deal; the 720 shares own the ranches and each share gets its proportion of the profits. (The company planting and caring for the ranches until they come into bearing, is a pretty good proposition in itself.)

We have 150 shares not yet subscribed for at $100 per share. Write at once for descriptive matter. Do it now. You may be too late. Principal office, San Diego, Cal.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

(THE FIFTH EVENING.)

As they passed the blacksmith shop they observed that the great double-doors were closed. A broken wagon-wheel leaned against one of them. "That's the first thing to be done in the morning," said Ed Woodney, nodding toward the wheel. "Worth Acre's a great old chap. I tell you, it tests a man's religion to do a good act when nobody expects it, and half the town thinks less of him after his doing it."

"I shall always think more of him for taking his poor old grandfather out of the asylum," said Mace. "I'd think anybody would!"

"That old grandfather is pretty expensive," returned Ed. "Worth might have several thousand more dollars if he'd left him alone, besides expecting to inherit a good slice of property. The whole family has cut him off their correspondence list since he interfered. They say, what right had he to meddle when old Mr. Acre's own wife and children are alive and flourishing? And of course if he had more money and more expectations, people would think more of him."

"Would they?" returned Mace. "Do you think people really think more of a person because he has property, or isn't it that they just think more of the property? If I owned a hundred dollars, would you like me any better?"

"But, say!" returned Ed, "you have got that much, you know, haven't you, now?"

"Certainly not!" laughed Mace, amused by his rueful astonishment. "I couldn't afford to own a hundred dollars in the present financial state of the family."

"Oh, mercy!" cried Ed. "Would you mind telling me?"

"Of course not. I own an organ that Mr. Tumbleton ruined in moving, and some clothes, and books, and three dollars and twenty-five cents, and a street car ticket, but it isn't any use unless I go to Jefferson City."

Ed laughed and declared, "I don't believe I'd like you any better, Mace, if you owned that street-car track! I'll admit I never met a girl like you before, so open and frank, and ready to do things, you understand. I believe one reason the world is inclined to look down on poor people is that the poor people are themselves so desperately ashamed of being poor, and instead of enjoying themselves in their surroundings are straining every nerve to appear like rich people."

"That's it!" cried Mace. "The very term 'poor person' is insulting to most poor people. It's not so with us. We're poor and we know it, and we don't care anything about it—at least father and mother don't. Sometimes grandmother and I pull a little hard," she confessed. They had reached the store. No one was to be seen, but from the open upstairs window issued three or four mingled voices, apparently rehearsing the words of a quartette without the music. Ed knocked on the store door. Maria Tucker, the "mutual" child of thirteen, came down the outside stairs and invited them up. "It isn't worth while," said Ed. "I've broken my mandolin string and I came to buy another."

"We don't sell anything after six o'clock," said Maria Tucker.

"But I must have the string," said Ed. "We have invited company. I'll pay just any price you want. Name it, Maria Tucker, and don't be afraid of big figures. Surely you won't spoil our concert!" Before Ed had finished his persuasive entreaties, Helen (Mr. Wren's daughter) and Puss (Mrs. Wren's daughter), each of sixteen, joined the group.

"But you don't understand, Mr. Ed," interposed Puss. "It isn't that we wouldn't accommodate you if we could. But we haven't any strings to sell, because we are not keeping a store."

"It's true the store's here, right in front of you," Helen explained, "but we have nothing to do with it. We don't mention it after six o'clock."

"We can't sell anything," Maria Tucker corroborated, "because we're not in the selling business." These remarks were not spoken one after another as set up here in type, but all together. A few words from each contributor could be gleaned from the general clamor, enough to convince Ed that the future was doubtful, to say the least. At this time, old Mrs. Wren caught sight of them from the upstairs window and began calling to them to come up. "Come on!" said Ed to Mace. "Let's go up; I must have that mandolin string." They filed up the outside stairs: Ed, Mace, Helen, Puss, Maria Tucker. At the head of the steep stair-case was a little square platform, but as it wasn't large enough to accommodate so many at once, Ed and Mace went into the hall and followed the old lady's voice, which had never ceased for a moment. It lured them into the front room, where Mrs. Wren lay in bed, and Mr. Wren sat reading a newspaper which had come on the daily hack. Peter, the "mutual" son of twelve, was seated in a corner, talking to no one in particular, while old Mrs. Wren, leaning upon the open window-sill, turned her head from one to the other in addressing her remarks, which bore upon the past when she used to live in Lexington, Kentucky.

"You are not well!" cried Mace, going to the bedside, while Ed explained his errand to Mr. Wren.

"Yes, I am quite well," said Mrs. Wren dolefully. "But I had a dreadful spell early this morning; it is needless to say of what nature, since I recovered in a few hours. But I had the worst luck! While I was in the severest throes of my malady—to be neighborly with you, I will say it was cramp colic—Miss Susie Day and Mrs. Winterfield both came to visit me, not together, but in close succession. I was so intensely engaged, so vitally absorbed, that it was quite impossible to see them. Now, the last time Mrs. Winterfield was here, I was too ill to have company. So, although I am quite well, I dare not go out of the house, or even be seen at the window, for fear they will be mortally offended. It would be useless to explain to them that I feel as strong and well as an ox at this moment, but that some ten hours ago my stomach—"

"Ma," interposed Annie, who, in a sense, was the mentor of the family, seldom speaking herself, and keeping an eye upon all the others, "I would not speak about stomachs to Miss Woodney."

"Quite right, Annie," said Mrs. Wren cheerfully. "Well, Miss Mace, you see how it is. I'd dearly love to be sitting out on our front porch, but it's out of the question; and all the family are keeping me company, except Reginald. He's in the country."

"Never mind about Reginald," said Annie.

"Quite right, Annie," returned Mrs. Wren. "I am always wandering, Miss Mace, and it's well I have Annie to bring me to the right path again." Mrs. Wren beckoned to Mace to bend down to her, then whispered, "That child is the smartest member of the family, but she simply won't talk! But if you ever find her out, you'll see how deep she really is!"

All this time old Mrs. Wren had been telling Mace and Mrs. Wren and Annie a tale about the great funeral of Henry Clay, while Peter had been asking old Mrs. Wren for particulars relative to tobacco-raising. Mr. Wren replied to Ed Woodney thus: "It isn't to be thought of, Ed. My wife simply will not have business after six o'clock. The last time I broke the rules was sneaking into the back window and getting nabbed for a burglar. It was on Mace's account, too—wasn't it, Mace?"

Mace heard her name and turned in be-

HAY-FEVER
AND
CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific.

Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clossen, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York wilderment from Mrs. Wren to old Mrs. Wren, and then to Peter and then to the big merchant.

"What is it, Mr. Wren?" shouted his wife.

"My dear," answered the little fat gentleman, hollowing his hands about his mouth and trumpeting back like a ship signalling in a fog, "Ed Woodney has come to—to get—to see if he could obtain—or—or procure a mandolin-string. They have company at his house and—and he broke his—"

"The largest crowd you ever could imagine, Mace," called old Mrs. Wren, her shrill voice gaining the mastery. "I was in my carriage, and the Clays—"

Mrs. Wren beckoned to Ed, and said, "You know, of course, that we don't sell merchandise. We are retired. But Reginald has some strings. I will go hunt them for you." She threw back the cover and revealed the fact that she was fully dressed. "Mr. Wren," she called, "pin that red shawl across the window while I pass and repass so Miss Susie Day can't see me from her house."

"Where is that there shawl?" shouted Mr. Wren.

"Pa," Annie reproved, "that there is not correct. You should say that shawl, and not that there shawl."

"Well, if anybody has saw it," cried the other desperately, "quit talking long enough to say so; and if I can make myself heard by saying that there shawl, let them be correct what has a clear deck to hisself!"

Annie was alarmed to find that in his excitement all her father's grammar threatened to fall to the ground. She hastily sought the shawl and pinned it across the telltale window. Then Mrs. Wren sneaked like a criminal from her bed and went after the strings. "I am lending you these," she explained on her return. "They are Reginald's private property and do not belong to any stock-in-trade. You will receive them as a friend of the family. Now take down the shawl, and pull this bed a little more east, so I can be seen propped on my pillows from the second story window of the Days." Ed accepted the strings with graceful courtesy, and he and Mace departed, their ears humming.

"Come across the street," said Ed, "I want a look at your place. Really, I feel a wonderful interest in this cottage since you've moved there."

"We can't get up on the sidewalk from the road," said Mace. "We'll have to go up as far as Horseshoe House. Isn't that romantic, to have a sidewalk like a suspension bridge?"

"It's fine!" said Ed. "But do you know, I never imagined anything in this village was romantic."

"Oh, there are many things!"

"Then will you come and show them to me?" asked Ed.

"That depends on you," said Mace gravely. They were standing in the road, under the sidewalk.

"Oh, I forgot you had a sermon laid up for me!" exclaimed Ed. "Please put it off a little longer. Look, Mace, somebody has been digging under your sidewalk-bridge! Perhaps it was Tumbleton's big St. Bernard. Oh, you ought to see his dog, Pup!"

"I've seen him," exclaimed Mace promptly. The young man had picked up a stick and was idly prodding at the loose earth. "They tell me," he said, "that dogs bury their bones—instinctive misers, dogs are. Wonder what Pup has here?"

"Feathers!" exclaimed Mace suddenly.

Ed dug. "A chicken!" he cried. "Look. Why, this is a fine, young rooster!"

"It must be the Winterfields' dorking!" Mace said, bewildered.

"And buried under your sidewalk," said Ed with a tragic air, holding his stick above his head and pointing at the unwas scratching in your grass early this mean? What had that rooster done to you?"

Mace laughed. Then she grew serious. "It's very strange," she murmured. "One was scratching in your grass early this morning. Maybe it was this one!"

"Let us hope so," said Ed, "and that retribution came swift and sure. I'll bury the vandal—no, let's tie it to this stick and carry it to the Winterfields'. It's on the way home, and if anybody is looking it will attract attention and make village news."

Business Notes.

The Cradle Roll, needs seeing after in a nice way and we have just the things you need for its successsful prosecution. Order samples.

The first edition of "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, is nearly exhausted and another must soon be on the way. The price is $1.00.

The Subscription Department reports having made the largest gains in 1905 of any year in the history of the Company, The Christian-Evangelist now being at "high water mark" in its circulation.

Of the American Standard improvements there is no end, and now we have an excellent New Testament in divinity circuit, full leather, at 75 cents. It is one of the prettiest, handiest and most convenient books.

Now that the forces are taking up their work after a pleasant vacation, do not forget the Home Department, so important and helpful, and do not forget that we have everything needful to make it a success. You can have all the samples by asking.

This fall will see many "Rallies" in our schools, and for these we have prepared some handsome rally souvenirs at $1.50 per hundred, postpaid, but the supply is very limited and we advise early orders, for you may call to mind how many were disappointed last year.

Do you wonder what number they are singing now, when you come into church a little tardy some Sunday? We have prepared a hymn register for all the hymns of any one service to be put before the congregation, so that without embarrassment any one can turn to the number and join in this delightful feature of the worship. Write us.

"The Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, is meeting with no more cordial reception than we expected, but the commendations coming in are somewhat more enthusiastic; all knowing the author would expect a fine list of eloquent discourses, and they are not disappointed. The book is listed at the popular price of $1.00, postpaid.

The little booklet used in drilling Juniors in Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies by H. F. Davis in his work in Missouri is now ready, with an exact reproduction of the chart used in his work and we are putting it on the market at five cents each, or 50 cents per dozen, postpaid. Order one, and you will order more for drill work in your school and for interesting your societies.

The abridged edition of "Gloria in Excelsis" in boards is put on the market at 55 cents postpaid, or by the dozen, $5.00, not prepaid, and by the hundred, $40, not prepaid. The cloth abridged is 65 cents prepaid or $6.50 per dozen not prepaid, or $50 per hundred not prepaid. The abridged in leather back is 80 cents each, postpaid, by the dozen, $8.00 not prepaid, and by the hundred, $60 not prepaid. The abridged has 400 pages, the responsive readings, and is a first-class book with fewer songs.

Have you been keeping in touch with our new song books? Gloria in Excelsis is par excellence, but among the cheaper books, Praises to the Prince; Popular Hymns No. 2; Living Praise; Silver and Gold; Gospel Call No. 1 or No. 2, are each 25 cents prepaid, in limp or boards; $2.00 per dozen, not prepaid, or $15 per hundred, not prepaid. By the dozen in boards they are $2.50 not prepaid; they are $20 per hundred, not prepaid. In cloth, by the dozen, they are $3.00, not prepaid, or by the hundred $25, not prepaid. There are no "Gospel Call," either part one or two in cloth. The Gospel Call combined is not bound in limp at all, but in boards and sells at 50 cents prepaid, or $5.00 per dozen, not prepaid, or $40 per hundred not prepaid. In cloth it is 65 cents prepaid; is $6.50 per dozen, not prepaid; is $40 per hundred, not prepaid. We have the song books and song book business of the church.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

"IN FAITH, UNITY; IN OPINION AND METHODS, LIBERTY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY."
Vol. XLII. September 21, 1905 No. 38

Current Events.

The Need of Manhood.

The "Chicago Journal," a strong Republican paper, has enough of the true spirit of manhood in its management to stand for what is right and good rather than for its own political party when this is corrupt. For instance, it argues that while we loudly bemoan Russia's need of manhood, America's own need of manhood cries out from every page of every newspaper every day. "Philadelphia," it says, "needs manhood to support and carry through the fight begun against exposed political chicanery and crime; Missouri needs manhood to sustain Folk in his efforts to rescue the state from its long tolerated defiance of law, and Wisconsin and Kansas need manhood in their contest with entrenched monopoly. Ohio needs manhood to dethrone political bossism that, like a gigantic spider, has entrapped the state government in its web." When a political paper can thus commend the work of a Democratic governor in one state and throw the weight of its influence into dethroning Ohio bossism, which is allied with the paper's own political party, it shows that there has been a great awakening. Every editorial writer feels free to castigate poor Russia in its benighted condition, but altogether too many newspaper writers can find little in their political party that seems to them to need the whip.

The Government of Ohio.

The state of Ohio has for many years been strongly Republican and it is possible that at the next election the party in power may still hold the reins of government, but this will not be without a strong effort on the part of the good people of that state to overthrow the ring-rule that now controls the state which has prided itself upon supplying so many of our presidents. The coming election is one of more than ordinary interest for, like the recent election in Missouri, the question at issue is not so much a political one as a moral one. Those who are familiar with the situation in Ohio know that the liquor interest of the state is doing all in its power to re-elect Governor Herrick. That gentleman is, no doubt, in many respects a very admirable man, and his attitude toward the gambling interests has been on the side of morality. But he has fallen short in other respects, and we believe that the reasons which have prompted a great many of the best men in the state to withdraw their allegiance from him are good ones why he should not be elected when so admirable a candidate as Mr. Pattison, who stands four-square for the advancement of every moral question, is presented in opposition.

A Russian Concession.

Moved by an entirely natural and commendable gratitude to the United States for its part in bringing the war to a close, Russia has yielded a point that has been in dispute between the two countries for several years. The announcement was made by M. Witte at the farewell conference between President Roosevelt and the Russian envoys. The Czar has ordered a reduction of the tariff upon certain important classes of American manufactured goods by the removal of a discriminating and retaliatory charge which had been made against products from this country. The trouble arose out of a dispute over the sugar bounty. Our present tariff law authorizes the collection of a differential upon imported sugar which has received a bounty in the country of its manufacture. Russia does not pay a cash bounty on exported sugar, but it imposes an internal revenue tax upon sugar manufactured in the country, and refunds or remits the tax upon sugar that is exported. Our government held that this was equivalent to paying a bounty, and collected the additional duty. Russia resented this, and by way of retaliation imposed a higher rate on certain classes of American goods than upon similar goods from other countries. There was a chance for a tariff war, but it never came to that, though there were friction and mutual accusations of failure to comply with the terms of the "most favored nation" agreement. Russia now yields the point so far as to cancel her retaliatory tariff and admit all American goods on as favorable terms as those from any other country.

A Revised Opinion.

The "tainted money" question will not down. During the past week there have been two or three interesting contributions to the discussion. First came the publication of Dr. Washington Gladden's revised opinion on the subject—or perhaps it was a revised statement rather than a revised opinion. The gist of this is that an institution may properly receive funds from any source, even from an oil magnate, without investigating the moral status of the contributed dollars, but that gifts ought not to be solicited from parties who may reasonably be suspected of having acquired their money in objectionable ways. The distinction here is between accepting voluntary gifts and asking for them. It is worth making. Some objectionable elements are eliminated if the representatives of charitable, missionary and educational institutions do not put themselves in the position of suppliants before the possessors of ill-gotten gain. Even a trust magnate must do something with his money, and Dr. Gladden admits that it may be allowable for him to offer it, modestly and voluntarily, to a good cause. The distinction, however, weakens the force of some of the arguments which have been used. For example, it breaks up the parallel between receiving "tainted money" of the sort that has been under discussion and receiving stolen goods from a common thief. A church would scarcely like to receive a gift of stolen goods from a burglar, even if he brought it to the altar voluntarily. Perhaps we shall have to admit, after all, that there is some sort of moral distinction to be made between the house-breaker and the monopolist.

The Care of Public Money.

It is announced that the state auditor of Indiana has been found to be a defaulter to the amount of about $145,000. This, in a commonwealth which is virtuous even to the extent of an absolute anti-cigarette law, and which has a governor who is one of the three great gubernatorial reformers, is certainly startling. The discovery was made by the diligence and zeal of the governor. The facts in the case are, that the auditor, whose duty it is to keep certain moneys belonging to the state and to make periodical settlements and reports, has invested the amount mentioned in certain securities which appear to be of the most obviously insecure and speculative sort. The law requires that the auditor shall be required to account for the public moneys received by him, and also for the interest accruing on the same while they are deposited in bank. The supreme court has decided, however, that public officers who are charged with the custody of public money cannot be required to account for interest on it during the time it is in their possession. From this decision has grown the custom, on the part of such officers, of investing such public money for their own benefit. This would be a wholly vicious and indefensible system even if there were some provision for guaranteeing that the funds would be conservatively invested as trust funds should be. But more than once officials have succumbed to the obvious temptation to invest in speculative enterprises in the hope of large and quick returns. Judging from the amount of mining stock purchased by the late auditor and held by him as security for state funds, it is evident that he had fallen into this habit in its worst form. He has become a defaulter by accident and bad judgment rather than by intention. He deserves his punishment, but the chief fault is with a system which furnishes an open door and a standing invitation to such aberrations. It is palpably absurd to tolerate for a moment an arrangement under which public officers are allowed to invest public moneys for their own benefit and at their own discretion.

A Naval Disaster.

The accidental explosion of Admiral Togo's flagship, Mikasa, resulting in the total destruction of the vessel and the loss of 599 lives, adds one more to the long list of costly naval accidents in time of peace. A complete list of even the serious accidents which have occurred on battleships in times of peace during the last ten years would be appalling. One recalls at once a few of our own misfortunes. There was the destruction of the Maine, which marked the beginning of our war with Spain, as this marks the end of Japan's war with Russia. There was the explosion in the turret of the Missouri not a great many months ago; still more recently, and still under inquiry, the explosion of the Bennington's boilers. Probably few of us realize what constant peril lurks in the mechanism of a modern battleship. The greatly increased size and power of her guns and the explosiveness of their projectiles, and the heavy demands made upon the boilers to secure the necessary speed, both augment the risk. It seems to be a law of nature that destructive devices shall be dangerous to those who use them. The man who uses a steel trap has to take the chance of getting his own foot caught in it. The man who has a gun has something with which he may kill or which may kill him, depending on the care and skill with which it is handled. Dynamite is more dangerous than powder. Increased peril to the user is the price of every increase in the efficiency of a destructive agent. So it is with battleships. It does not mean that we must accept these awful accidents as a matter of course, or that we must go back to bows and arrows because big guns are sometimes destructive at the breach as well as at the muzzle. But it does mean that we must have ever-increasing skill and care. And perhaps it should serve to remind us, even in time of peace, that war is essentially a bloody and fatal business.

The Armistice Signed.

The armistice between Russia and Japan has been signed. By it the representatives of both powers in the field agreed that on and after Sept. 16, all hostile and inimical acts should cease. A neutral zone four kilometers wide was established between the armies. Thus the peace which was negotiated at Portsmouth becomes a reality on the field. The conditions of the armistice, which were discussed at great length and with much care by both parties, will govern the relations between the armies during the period pending the formal ratification of the treaty of peace. The army takes nothing for granted. While the general public has already counted peace as an assured reality, speaks of the war in the past tense and is rapidly forgetting all about it, the armies remain just where they were, prepared for the improbable exigency of a resumption of hostilities in case either government should fail to ratify the treaty. But for practical purposes we may still feel safe in saying that the war is over.

Insurance Revelations.

The legislative investigation committee which is probing into the records and methods of the great insurance companies in New York, is unearthing some interesting and not altogether reassuring facts. It is becoming pretty evident that we might as well have saved some of the indignation which we were so recently lavishing upon the Equitable and its managers so that there might have been a more just distribution of it among those who are equally entitled to it. The search-light happened to fall upon the Equitable first, but it is doubtful whether any just charge has been brought against the Equitable which could not be made with equal propriety against the other companies of the first class. The righteous wrath and indignation of the American people are always short-winded, and it is not likely that any revelations that may be made will create much of a sensation now, but it is just as well to know what has been going on. For one thing, it seems that they have not been above resorting to the boldest fictions to make their books give a false impression of their dealings. For example, when it was advantageous to make it appear that certain stocks or bonds were not owned by the companies, they could be sold to some office boy or clerk (drawing a salary of perhaps ten dollars a week), and his note for several million dollars accepted. The transaction would not be so risky as it might seem, for the company would merely keep the bonds in its safe as collateral for the notes instead of keeping it upon the books as an asset of the company. The purpose of this shrewd device, which honorable business men of national reputation have been using, is to make what is appear as if it were not. There are several names for this kind of an act, and some of them are very harsh. The dealings of the insurance companies with their allied trust companies and with syndicates of bankers and prominent financiers, are still undergoing investigation. It has already been shown that the New York Life would apparently rather receive 2 per cent interest from a favored trust company than 4 per cent in the general money market, the security being equally good, and that it has been a practice to go into stock and bond deals with friendly bankers and brokers on terms under which the insurance company furnished all of the capital and received half of the profits. None of these things can shake the faith of the thoughtful man in the fundamental principles of well regulated life insurance. But more and more it is borne in upon his mind that, in so far as the protection feature and the investment feature can be separated, he would like to buy protection at the cheapest rate from a good insurance company and make his investments through some other channel where he can receive a little larger proportion of what his money earns.

Dr. Gladden at Seattle.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions has been in session at Seattle, and Dr. Gladden, as was expected, made a strong speech in support of a resolution against soliciting tainted money. Dr. Gladden supported his resolution with an address which was as earnest and eloquent as any of his former deliverances on the subject, and considerably more convincing by reason of the limitation of his thesis. Especially did he condemn the stand of those who would make the decision of a moral question depend upon our need of the money. A similar disposition to avoid a definite commitment was exhibited at a meeting of a Methodist conference in Indiana. A church in Whiting, Ind., had decided to ask Mr. Rockefeller to aid in the erection of a building, the town being virtually owned by the Standard Oil Company. A resolution approving the appeal was voted down, the chief reason for the action apparently being a desire to avoid going on record on either side of the question.

How the Holy Spirit Reaches Unbelievers.

There is evidence that the wild theories which once prevailed in evangelical Protestant bodies concerning the method of the Holy Spirit in convicting men of sin are no longer endorsed by thoughtful leaders in these churches, and that new light is breaking forth from the Word of God. The view once so popular among revivalists practically dispensed with the Gospel as the power of God unto salvation, and taught the direct conversion of men by the Holy Spirit without the intervention of the truth. The correction of this error is likely to lead to a widespread interest in evangelistic work throughout the world, and is indeed now having that result.

In an article in the "Missionary Review of the World," by the editor-in-chief, Dr. Arthur C. Pierson, on "God's Chosen Vessels," he is led to say:

> It is possible that there is a common misapprehension as to the chosen modes and methods of the Spirit's highest activity in the believer and the church, and through believers upon a dying world. If this is true, then by correcting and removing wrong conceptions we may open the way for intelligent and efficient co-operation with the Spirit in the work of conversion. All missions, at home and abroad, may be awaiting such new impulse and impetus to assure their highest results. More than this, a new era of power and progress may be even now dawning, and we need to be on the alert to catch God's signals and follow them.

The example of the Welsh revival is cited, in which, as soon as any church put itself right with God and with men, it became a vessel of God to bring salvation to the unsaved. The Lord wants human instrumentalities with which to carry on his divine work, but these human instrumentalities must be meet for the Master's use. Otherwise he need not have called Paul or any other "chosen vessel" into his service. Again we quote Dr. Pierson:

> It was some such course of study as this that led the late Dr. A. J. Gordon to the conviction that, during this present dispensation, the Spirit's method is to teach the unsaved, not by directly working on their hearts, but always through the believer as his chosen vessel—the medium of communication.

It was a fresh and original study of the New Testament that led the leaders in this Reformation to see that truth nearly a century ago. Not only did they see it and proclaim it as God's method of reaching and converting men, but for doing so they were misunderstood and misrepresented, being charged with denying the very existence and work of the Holy Spirit.

If there came to be, through the correction of this error, a lack of proper emphasis of the work of the Holy Spirit in the believer to prepare him to be a medium of communicating divine truth to the world, on the part of many among us, there is not wanting abundant evidence that this fault is now being corrected, and the position which has always been held in theory is now coming to be a vital experience and an essential condition of all successful evangelization.

Now that our religious neighbors are coming to see that the Spirit's convicting power is mediated by the truth in men who believe it and live it, and proclaim it, and the Disciples of Christ, who have always held to this truth, are realizing as never before that this preparation for the mediumship of God's power unto salvation is the personal work of the Holy Spirit, who was promised to the disciples for this very purpose, are we not coming into an understanding of the truth that will make possible such a wave of evangelistic power as the world has not known since the apostolic age? God grant that it may be so, and that we who plead for New Testament Christianity may seek that fullness of the Spirit which alone can enable us to exemplify, both in our lives and in our achievements, the supreme excellency and unconquerable power of that faith and zeal which characterized the apostolic age. The world is convinced of the correctness of the theory, but it awaits a practical demonstration of the beneficent power which transformed the early disciples from timid, hesitating, worldly-minded followers of Jesus into the spiritual giants they became, and brought the proud Roman emperor to bow at the foot of the cross for pardon and peace. We have an omnipotent Gospel when preached by Spirit-filled men. It is an impotent Gospel in the hands of a worldly-minded, mammon-loving, self-seeking ministry.

A Message from the Pew to the Pulpit.

In a series of articles in the "Saturday Evening Post," by Senator Albert J. Beveridge, on "The Young Man and the World," he devotes one to "The Young Man and the Pulpit," which contains some good advice. It is well for ministers, and especially for those beginning their work, to know how the mass of men who occupy the pew regard their calling. Senator Beveridge gives the preacher of Christ's Gospel the very highest place, but he wants him to be a preacher of the Word, and not a mere lecturer or entertainer. Hear the senator on this point.

> First, then, young man aspiring to the pulpit, the world expects you to be above all other things a minister of the Gospel. It does not expect you to be primarily a brilliant man, or a learned man, or witty or eloquent, or any other thing that would put your name on the tongues of men. The world will be glad if you are all of these, of course; but it wants you to be a preacher of the Word before anything else. It expects that all your talents will be consecrated to your sacred calling.
> It expects you to speak to the heart, as well as to the understanding, of men and women, of the high things of faith, of the deep things of life and death. The great world of worn and weary humanity wants from the pulpit that word of helpfulness and power and peace which is spoken only by him who has utterly forgotten all things except his holy mission. Therefore, merge all of your striking qualities into the divine purpose of which you are the agent. Lose consciousness of yourself in the burning consciousness of your cause.

He tells of a friend of his who, on returning from church, said: "I am tired and disappointed. I went to hear a sermon and listened to a lecture. I went to worship and I was merely entertained. The preacher was a brilliant man, and his address was an intellectual treat, but I did not go to church to hear a professional lecturer. When I want to be merely entertained I will go to the theatre." This objection, too, is most apt to come from intellectual people, who feel the need of a spiritual tonic and go to church for that. It is a hint well worth heeding by preachers, whether young or old. In this age of intense living, when the material things of life are pressed so continually on the minds of men, they go to church that they may see, through a rift in the cloud, a glimpse, at least, of the infinite blue of heaven, a vision of spiritual realities. It is to wrong one's hearers, if the man of God fails to lift the veil that hides from men's views the higher things of life; he can do this only as he preaches the Gospel of Christ. Only this Gospel can set men in right relations to God and to each other, and enable them to look at this world in the clear light that shines out of the world to come.

Another wise suggestion to the young man in the pulpit is to preach what he believes. "The world is hungry for faith." It wants to hear a man who will help them to believe. "More men and women today would rather believe in the few fundamentals of the Christian religion than have any other gift that lavish fortune could bestow upon them." This is not the ordinary impression concerning men of the world, but we doubt not the senator is right. Men want to believe in a hereafter, whether or not they are willing to conform their lives to the standard of living which such a faith imposes. They need to be shown that the way to live hereafter is to live now the higher, the real life.

In a word, Senator Beveridge says in effect to the young preacher, "Stick close to your business, and be sure you believe what you preach."

Notes and Comments.

September 30 is a very important day for our church this year, for then will be ended the records of the fiscal year and the books closed. Every interest we have sends out an exigent cry. We are so near the mark set by some of the societies that it would be a great pity if, for any reason, the goals aimed at should fail to be reached. Our Church Extension Board, to which we must give precedence, seeing that September is the special month for the collections in its behalf, is facing a crisis. During the past two months it has granted no new applications for aid. "Can we pay the loans promised?" is the question before the board. Applications continue to come, asking to be filed for future granting. As it looks now the board will be compelled to use all of the September offering to pay loans already granted, but no new grants can be made for months to come unless the churches come bravely and quickly to the help of the Church Extension Society. By reason of rains, no doubt, the secretary's report on another page shows no gains. There remains yet one Sunday in September and every church should see to it that it has part in the offering to house the many homeless churches that are crying for just a little help to enable them to help themselves. There are hundreds of churches who could build at once and do a good work if our Church Extension treasury could grant them a small loan.

Then the American Christian Missionary Society needs only $8,000 to complete the offering for this year of $100,000. There are men among us who could easily give $5,000 to this work and be the richer for it; hundreds could give $1,000. We only wish they could see the great wide-stretching, ever-multiplying fields of waiting opportunity. How can the people hear, without a preacher? Is not $100,000 a very small sum for our brotherhood of a million and a quarter people to raise for mission work in the home land? There remain but seven more days from this date to raise the needed $8,000.

We started in to raise the sum of $250,000 for foreign missions. Up to September 16 nearly $237,000 had been secured so that only $13,000 are needed, and about $8,000 of this are reasonably secured, according to Brother Rains, leaving $5,000 to come from some unknown source within the next week. Surely this money will not be lacking. With victory in sight, there must not be failure now.

We are interested in a correspondence started by John S. McConnell, representing the Methodist Board of Church Extension, and the secretary of our own Extension Board. Dr. McConnell had been perusing "Business in Christianity" which he found full of interesting facts, but for his personal information asked some questions about our Church Extension work. He evidently, from the nature of these questions, believes that our methods are superior to some of those employed by his own church. Among other things, he says: "I was much interested in the rather unique way you have of reporting what each state has given and what Church Extension has done within the bounds of that state. Your Board is certainly doing a good work, and you are to be congratulated." Brother Muckley had a conference with the secretary of the Methodist Board of Church Extension last November, a year ago, and was informed on that occasion that the Methodists have over $400,000 in outstanding loans that they never expect to collect. As contrasted with this, note that our own Church Extension Board has lost only $563 in the course of its work.

The treaty of peace signed at Portsmouth, N. H., between the envoys of Russia and Japan is a victory at which the whole world should rejoice. It honors both nations and it honors our Christian civilization. The part our own nation has taken in bringing about this peace is highly creditable to us, and especially to the president whose courage and tact in this delicate business has given him first place among the world's diplomats and peacemakers.

We have said it is creditable to both nations. It is creditable to Russia, because out of a very discouraging situation her envoys have won an honorable peace, better than the world dared hope they could win. It is particularly honorable to Japan, because she moderated her demands in response to the world's desire for peace and in harmony with her own desire for peace. In doing so, she has shown herself to be as magnanimous in victory as she was brave in war. What most Americans, and perhaps most people of other nations, feared about Japan, was that she would "lose her head," as the saying goes, and carry a chip on her shoulder ready to fight all creation. But instead of that she has abandoned demands which the civilized world did not, under the circumstances, deem extravagant, for the sake of peace. This fact ought to give her, and will give her, in the eyes of the nations, greater prestige than any single victory of the war.

The rioting which is reported as going on in Tokio must not be supposed to represent the sober, second thought of the nation; it is a temporary expression of disappointment on the part of the populace whose expectations had been raised too high, and who have not had time to weigh calmly the advantage to Japan of her magnanimous terms of peace. She was in a condition to be generous and has shown herself great enough to bear with moderation the victories she has won on land and sea.

The result of the war means, not only an "open door" for commerce in Manchuria and China, but an "open door" for the gospel as well. It means the advancement of Japan to the rank of a first class nation, and the awakening and development of China to a great future. It means the moderation of Russia's ambition in the east and more attention to her domestic affairs, with a freer and stronger government. All this is in the interest of human progress.

Judging by the reports in our contemporaries, some of the scribes supposed to be representing these, spent more of their time in sight-seeing or chatting with the brethren than in attendance upon the San Francisco convention. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is the only paper that has given anything like an adequate account of the proceedings, and a good portion of what has appeared in two papers, rather noted for their critical spirit, has been in the nature of criticism rather than information. In one of them appears nearly a whole page which must give anyone who reads it the impression that the writer is a born "kicker." He seems to be angry because he had to pay his own board bill at the convention. Then he thinks the churches in the west accommodate themselves to please the whims of sectarian worshipers; following which he spends nearly two columns in belaboring the convention and its managers because he was not allowed to make a prohibition speech. Sane criticism has its place, but some editors seem to prefer to deal out criticism rather than news. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has sought to give its readers the news about the convention, and it has done this very fully, and in its editorial columns it has attempted to point out the significance of some of the things said and done at the convention. There may be occasion to criticise some things. We take it that the members of our churches are in the first place more interested in what is helpful and inspiring than in any efforts we may make to change for the better things that are not especially vital.

Editor's Easy Chair.

We were tarrying in Big Goose Valley, five miles southwest of Sheridan, Wyoming, when the Easy Chair closed its last record. We tarried yet another day after that narration and made a trip twelve miles distant to Big Goose Canon—we four, the Easy Chair and wife and Brother George W. Garrett and wife. The mouth of this canon is known as "Absaraka Park," and this name is printed above the narrow rocky defile that constitutes the entrance to the canon. The road thither up the valley is a gentle incline, through green fields of alfalfa and golden fields of shocked wheat, with the irrigating ditches marking the hillsides and threading the fields, until farms and orchards and homes give place to the grandeurs and sublimities of nature. The granite walls of Big Goose Canon may not be quite so high as those of Cheyenne Canon, but any lack in this respect is overcome by the smooth granite boulders, varying in size from a cannon ball to a small dwelling house, through which and over which and under which roars and rushes and flashes and splashes Big Goose Creek, as crystal a stream as was ever brewed in the mountains, and performing in its downward plunge toward the valley all the gyrations ascribed to the Falls of Lodore, in Southey's classic poem. A photograph of it appeared in last week's issue of The Christian-Evangelist. What a home for the mountain trout in this cold, clear, dashing stream, with its rapids, darting between huge granite boulders, like "shafts of polished velocity," as Ruskin says of the rapids above the Rhine Falls! And the trout are there, too, but wary, bait-wise, and up to all the tricks of the professional angler. But it was a part of our business up there to test their sagacity, and sample them as food. We captured a few, not many, but enough to gratify our ambition, if not to satisfy our appetite. The actual catching of the trout soon becomes, to a lover of nature, a secondary consideration in such surroundings.

Of course, the women had prepared a lunch for the noon hour. It seems almost a profanation to call a meal consisting of fried grouse—which we had shot the day before—fish, pies, cakes, jams, etc., a lunch! And then the table and dining room were such as kings and queens seldom, if ever, enjoyed. A huge granite boulder, large enough to build a house on, located in the middle of the stream, which at that time flowed under it, was the table. The canon itself, with its towering walls of polished granite, roofed with the blue sky, was the dining room. Music was furnished by an orchestra of a thousand pieces, blending into a sound as of many waters. A deep pool of snow-water was our finger bowl. The All-gracious Father, whose hand reared these majestic walls, and furnished these bounties, was our host. If one wishes to know how many muscles he has, and where located, a few hours of trout fishing along this boulder-filled stream will give him the desired information. Of course, one is expected to slide from one of these slippery boulders once or twice during the day, and take a cold foot and leg bath with his shoes and stockings on; but a little thing like that will not disturb a genuine disciple of Izaak Walton. After three hours of this sort of experience the Editor felt the need of his "Easy Chair," but the best substitute for it was that same table transformed into a bed, with the aid of some wraps, on which he rested his weary limbs as if it had been a bed of down, while gazing upward at the fleecy clouds crossing the patch of blue sky like sails on a distant sea.

On the morrow, after a drive over Sheridan Heights, looking down upon the aspiring young city spread along the valley, and through some of the principal streets, with their solid business buildings and tasty residences, we bade our kinspeople good-bye, and took the east-bound train for Chicago. A sleeping car berth for this particular train to be taken at this particular town had been engaged five days before at Billings. On inquiring for it the conductor informed us that nothing was reserved, and that he could give us neither a lower nor an upper berth. We asked to see his diagram, and showed him our name recorded on it and a line drawn across it, and demanded to know by whose authority the erasing was done. He laid it on the conductor who preceded him, who was new to the business and had gotten "rattled"—another case of "the wicked partner"! Telling him we intended to find out who erased our name, and why, if it took the balance of the fall, we sought where to lay our heads in the tourists' sleeper, and finally secured two upper berths. We soon found that several others had been similarly disappointed. Of course, there is unusual travel west this fall, and the demand for sleeping car berths is great, and some allowance must be made for that; but that fact is no justification for duplicity, reselling of berths and failure to observe contracts. The journey eastward was rapid and pleasant, except Nebraska struck us hard again with an attack of hay fever, as we crossed its fertile plains. On the train we got acquainted with Brother Settle, of Sheridan, coming east; and Brother McCoy, of Allerton, Ia., returning home from the coast, who gave us a first-hand account of the Iowa state convention, "the best in the history of the state," and the glowing prospects of Drake University. How refreshing to meet with a business man who knows something about, and is deeply interested in, something besides his own business! Lincoln, Omaha, Chicago were passed as so many commas, for we were hastening on to Pentwater for a period.

At 10 o'clock Saturday night two travel-worn, dusty pilgrims landed at Pentwater, passed along the winding walk that leads across the narrow peninsula to Lake Michigan, and then south along the banistered sidewalk to "The Pioneer" cottage. The half-full moon was shedding a soft light over wood and lake, and the latter was sleeping so quietly that not even its breathing reached our ears. In a few moments we were sleeping, also. And here we are resting a while, after our long journey of between six thousand and seven thousand miles. It was just a month from the morning we left St. Louis to the evening we landed in Pentwater. It has been a month of rich and varied experiences, well worth the time, expense, weariness and whatever discomforts were incident to the journey. That no accident occurred to mar the happiness of the expedition west and return, so far as we have heard, is cause for thanksgiving to Him who neither slumbers nor sleeps. The men and women who made up the company of "The Christian-Evangelist Special" were a part of the salt of the earth and the light of the world. Their fellowship was delightful, and the memory of our happy association together during the long journey across mountains, plains and deserts will linger with us after many of the humdrum experiences of life have been forgotten. . . . It is delightfully quiet and restful here at Garrison Park. Only one cottage besides our own is occupied on the Lake Michigan side, and that will be vacant in a day or two, leaving us the sole occupants. But we still have the music and majesty of the lake, the society of the woods, and the visits of golden and crimson sunsets. We are not lonesome. There is a note of melancholy in the autumnal anthem the lake is singing today, which means separation soon—too soon—from these loved scenes and associations.

A United Church and a Believing World*

By
F. M. Dowling

A Reunited Christendom the Preparation for a Christianized World.

And now, my brethren, before God I charge you to hear the conclusion to which we are driven by the premises involved in the statements that have been made: We, as a people devoted to the reuniting of the dismembered body of Christ to the end that the world may believe, ought to be the foremost foreign missionary people of Christendom. For, hear me, present indications and accomplished facts compel the belief that the problem of Christian union is to be solved chiefly on the foreign field.

Dr. Barton, one of the secretaries of the American board, made an extended tour of the mission field, and when he returned home, said: "The missionaries are in advance of the home churches in fraternal co-operation for the promotion of the kingdom of Jesus Christ in the world in ways that are Christian before they are denominational. I assume no unusual prophetic vision when I make bold to declare that this position of leadership will be maintained in the foreign work until the churches in the United States are compelled to fall into line."

At a conference of the Foreign Missionary Boards of the United States and Canada, Robert E. Speer, a secretary of the Presbyterian board, said: "I know the views that many hold, that the denominational lines are providential gifts to the children of men. Some missionaries hold that they are sent out for the propagation of denominational differences. I have heard missionaries antagonize the matter of self-support because, they said: 'If we press this matter the Christians now organized under many different names will get together all IN ONE BIG CHURCH UNDER ONE NAME and we won't have them any longer under our doctrinal control.' I think they would, and I think that one name is above the other names."

Mr. Mott notes the tendency in the mission field toward an organic union of the various branches of each denominational family, and then remarks: "This plan is the first stage in the union of the Christian forces." His second stage is not quite what he leads us to anticipate, and yet it is almost that, for he says: "The sentiment in favor of this movement toward a closer union is far stronger on the mission fields than at home. Even greater progress in this direction would have been made on the mission fields had not the missionaries been hindered in their plans either by denominational ambitions or by the lack of vision of the home churches. Without doubt the church in non-Christian lands has important lessons to teach the church in Christian countries. Face to face with the vast and powerfully entrenched forces of heathenism, with its ignorance, superstition, and sin, they clearly see that nothing short of a union in spirit, plan and effort on the part of all true disciples of Jesus Christ will prevail. In the presence of a world that is unbelieving to an extent and to a depth which those living in Christian lands can not fully realize, they long to be in a position to present that mightiest apologetic—the one for which Christ prayed—that the world may believe in the divine mission of their Lord." A little while ago I quoted the saying of Dr. Behrends: "I can not evade the conviction that foreign missions carry in them the SWIFT DOOM OF OUR PETTY sectarian divisions." In the same address follow these burning words: "They [the foreign missionaries] have fought their way through to a simpler theology than have we. They have ceased to tithe the mint, anise, and cummin. They have learned that Japan and China will never utter the shibboleths of our schools. They have concentrated upon fundamentals. They listen with silence and wondering eyes to many of our disputations. They know what kind of gospel the great world needs, and I have sometimes thought it might be well if they should draw up a creed binding upon us who stay at home. At all events the simplicity which experience has forced upon them must master us. Nor is it difficult to state what that ultimate simplicity of doctrinal conviction must be. It must be the primitive simplicity. There can be no other. We must come back to the New Testament. Our religion must centralize in personal devotion to the personal Christ. He is our Master; he alone. We shall never conquer each other. But I hope that we are all willing that Christ shall conquer us all."

PRESIDENT M'LEAN WROTE THIS back to us as a part of his message from Japan: "The Japanese want the very thing for which we plead. They want the Christianity of Christ, and not the creeds, or dogmas, or theologies, or customs of men. One of the ablest men of Japan says that there are hardly any of his countrymen who are loyal to the creeds and dogmas which constitute the foundations of the several denominations. Common believers, he adds, have been ignorant from the beginning of sects and denominations; but never before have these been so coldly disregarded by the ministers and officers in the churches as now. One prevailing current throughout all denominations is church union, and this current is growing stronger, and higher, and swifter.

LEADING MEN IN THE CHURCHES pay most diligent attention to the practical question of church union, and utterly none to the preservation of the denominations. All are waiting anxiously for the time and the man to take the final step toward a glorious reformation in Japan. The Japanese desire and pray for what we desire and pray for, that there may be one flock, one shepherd. Now is the time for us to publish far and wide the truth which we hold, and thereby help the Japanese to realize that which they so devoutly wish."

One of the greatest and most perplexing questions that came before the last general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church pertained to the sending of a missionary bishop to Japan. The committee on the Episcopacy recommended the appointment of such a bishop. The opposition to the report, representing some of the most prominent men in the conference, urged with tremendous earnestness and power that such a step would hinder the proposed union of the seven branches of Methodism in Japan. I was waiting in prayerful expectancy for some one to get A LARGER VISION OF UNION than merely the union of Methodism in Japan. That vision came to Emory Smith, of Des Moines. He said: "Mr. Chairman, it is not my desire to make a lengthy speech. My aim is, rather, to repeat what one of our brightest and best Japanese ministers told me in a conversation recently. Rev. Takesha Uki, a graduate of Simpson college, Iowa, and now pastor of our principal church in Tokio, told me and told others but a few weeks ago that they do not wish to have a missionary bishop in Japan, for the reason that it would be against a prospective union of the Christian churches now being very hopefully in contemplation in that Empire. I know that, as a Methodist, I might oppose that, but as we are all Christians first, and Methodists secondly, I presume that we will all agree that anything that tends to Christian union on a pure basis, into which Methodism can enter, of genuine Christianity, is to be preferred even to the predominance of our own denomination."

*An address delivered at the International Convention at San Francisco.

A conference of the Protestant missionaries of Japan was held in 1900 in Tokio. This proclamation was issued: "This conference of missionaries proclaims its firm belief that all those who are one with Christ by faith are one body; and it calls upon all those who love the Lord Jesus and his church in sincerity and truth to pray and to labor for the full realization of such a corporate oneness as the Master himself prayed for on that night in which he was betrayed."

WE DO NOT NEED TO TALK SIMPLY about prospective union in Japan, for behold, actual beginnings have been made! Congregations of different denominations have united, calling the resultant body "The Japanese Church of Christ."

At the Ecumenical Conference G. W. Knox, D. D., of Union Theological Seminary, said: "Missionaries in Japan of different denominational names have proved that union can be effected. Four Presbyterian bodies with two Reformed bodies united in organic union. It is possible to unite those that stand so near together on the foreign field, if the church at home will only say, Amen! Then beyond that it is possible to unite every branch of the Christian Church in a great federal union. Comity is too weak, far too weak; we must have more than that. Our faith is too weak for the unity of the Christ; too weak for the organic union which will come when the Christian's prayer is answered." The situation in other fields is similar to that in Japan.

Dr. Farnsworth, of Turkey, says that Methodists have said to him, "We don't come here to preach Methodism, we come here to preach Christ." He tells of the "good Father Dwight" who was under the Presbyterian banner when the Presbyterians and Congregationalists were working together. Some of the friends in the homeland feared that the denominational fences were being neglected, and sent out a circular to stir up the Presbyterians to look after their denominational interests. Dr. Dwight wrote back: "I really don't KNOW WHETHER I AM A PRESBYTERIAN or not. I wish you would ask my brethren with whom I have been at work these forty years."

John G. Paton, the veteran missionary to the New Hebrides, said at the Ecumenical Conference: "Though our mission is supported by Presbyterian churches, our converts do not know that there are Presbyterians in the world."

Now, brethren, supported by this array of testimony and this presentation of facts, let me reaffirm that the problem of Christian union is to be solved chiefly in the foreign field, and let me reiterate with tenfold, and more, emphasis, that the first conclusion to be drawn from the premises by the Disciples of Christ is that we ought to be the foremost foreign missionary people of Christendom.

I prepared myself to answer with statistics the question of our real interest in the union of Christians as shown by our contributions to the work on the foreign field where the problem is chiefly to be solved. But figures do not always tell the truth. They would not in this instance—certainly not the whole truth. All things considered, our history in this matter has been natural and logical. Professor Guyot, of Princeton, says that progress in the world is like the development of plant life. It has three periods of growth: The first growth is in the soil—growth by the root—and is very slow. The second is more accelerated—growth by the stem. The third is the most rapid of all—growth by the blossom and fruit. Our missionary development is passing out of the period of slow growth by the root. We are entering the period of more accelerated growth by the stem; and may God, by favoring breezes, and dews, and sunshine, and showers, hasten the period of rapid growth by flower and fruit.

I lately read this incident of travel. On June 23, 1861, Sir Samuel Baker and his party were sleeping in the dry bed of the Atbara, a tributary of the Nile. They had traveled all day in the dry river bed. On this night they were aroused by the terrified cry of native attendants,

"THE RIVER! THE RIVER!"

As they cried, they rushed for the dry and sandy shore. The mighty river, which had been gathering its waters from the melting snows of the mountains of Abyssinia rushed by, a torrent fifteen hundred feet wide and twenty feet deep, rolling on to satisfy the thirst of innumerable palm trees and transform the barren fields of Egypt into a garden of beauty and plenty. Brethren, the waters of our interest and enthusiasm in the divine enterprise of the evangelization of the world by the reunited church have been gathering on the hills of God, and, although we may still be camping in the dry river bed of indifference and inactivity, with my ear toward the mountain I catch the sound of distant thunder, and raise the shout, The river! the river! This is the river, the streams whereof make glad the city of God.

And, now, my friends, I want you to ascend with me for the mountain top vision. Christian union is coming! The evangelization of the world is coming! There is a connection between these coming events. Christian union is coming!

Dr. Behrends is right: "We are nearer each other than our fathers were, and our children will keep up the converging march." The skirmishing that precedes the decisive battle has begun.

SECTARIANISM IS IN ITS LAST DITCH.

While some things can be done by the multitudes of Christian union recruits pouring in from all quarters which, we admit, can not be done by us, nevertheless there can be no question that there is a place in the forefront of the battle for "the old guard." As for myself, I want to be in the final charge, and on the hilltop, when the signal gun is fired and the last saber thrust is sent home, and see the white flag of surrender run up to signal to the world that sectarianism and disunion in the family of God are dead forever; and, if it be not too optimistic even for the dreams of faith, I want a place in the United Army of the Kingdom when heathenism and unbelief take their last stand, and who would not want to see the day when no banner but the flag of faith floats in the skies of God!

The evangelization of the world is coming! The word of the Lord has spoken it—and it can not fail.

The night is far spent and the day is at hand. The mountain peaks are pink with promise. There are no more hermit nations. The last door has been opened and we have our missionaries standing there on the "roof of the world." The loneliest and most isolated of the isles of the sea now belongs to the Society Group. If Africa is not the only dark continent, Japan is not the only sunrise empire:

"Out of the shadows of night
The world rolls into light;
It is daybreak evermore."

Dr. Marsh makes a world-wide tour of investigation and finds abundant material for his book, "Morning Light in Many Lands." Harlan P. Beach studies the situation in China and writes his book, "Dawn on the Hills of T'ang." John H. DeForest makes a like study of Japan, and writes his

After a Great Congress

By William Durban

The first Pan-Baptist Congress has come and gone. In many respects it reached the ardent expectations of its promoters. I had the pleasure of "assisting," in the French sense of the word, at some of the functions by being present. One of the most enjoyable sessions was a meeting "al fresco" at Stockwell Orphanage. On the great, verdant, sweeping lawns, fringed by brilliant flower-beds, some hundreds of the delegates gathered in an informal assembly. In the bright summer weather a large English garden is a lovely sight. Fresh-looking boys and girls, the orphans so sedulously cared for, fluttered about with refreshments. Others of the children sang like birds on their raised platform under noble trees. Americans, Germans, Canadians, black preachers, Hindus, South Africans, Italians, and of course many English delegates mingled in long conversations. I met old fellow students from far-off lands. Having been myself a Baptist minister for many years, and being still a Baptist in the sense in which all genuine Disciples of Christ are such, I felt myself in congenial company. But I was, nevertheless, a phenomenal personality, for I could find no other representative of the Disciples of Christ. Now, as my beloved old Baptist friend, Rev. Vernon Charlesworth, master of Stockwell Orphanage, had warmly invited me to attend this social gathering as his guest, I accepted the invitation.

TOO MUCH LONDON.

For the 4,000 delegates from all parts of the world there was one stupendous difficulty. The majority had never visited England before. And of course they ardently desired to make acquaintance with the monster modern Babylon, which sprawls for thirty miles along both sides of the Thames, and runs back for many miles north of the river, and many miles also from the south bank. Accordingly these eager visitors were constrained to miss some of the many meetings that made up the crowded program. They had to solve the problem of surveying the wonders of the world's biggest city and also of appearing at the various sessions of the congress. I am afraid that the appalling dimensions of this metropolis not only overwhelmed many of the sight-seers, but eclipsed the meetings. At any rate, some of the assemblies were much smaller than they ought to be. The reason is obvious enough. The fascinations of London were too much!

THE GRAND OLD MAN.

Dr. Alexander McLaren was considered by the congregation at Manchester, to which he used for many years to minister, to be the greatest of living preachers. But I have known several of these greatest living preachers, all living at the same time. I have been emphatically assured by admirers of Spurgeon, Parker, McLaren, Liddon, Beecher, Talmage, that each of these was the incomparable pulpiteer of the time, while all of them were still alive. Only Alexander McLaren survives. He is still a wonderful speaker, but he wisely retired when his strength began to ebb. He was naturally the hero of the congress. Every time he appeared or spoke he received a splendid ovation. One thing is certain concerning him. His great influence is all on the right side. He has never been known as either narrow or broad. McLaren's long ministry among the Baptists corresponded in quality with the far briefer service of Frederick William Robertson, of Brighton, in the Anglican Church. It has never been concerned with mere criticism, with questions of doctrinal controversy, with social problems, or with political entanglements. All his sermons have been eagle-winged, soaring in the firmament of Christological truth far above sectarian squabbles, even the squabbles of his own sect. Indeed, Dr. McLaren is the prince of purely expository preachers; but his strength has also lain in the charm of his style. Every sermon is a prose poem as well as a learned, yet simple and popular exposition.

SPURGEON! CLARUM ET VENERABILE NOMEN.

Perhaps Dr. McLaren was at his best on the most pathetic occasion of the congress—the dedication of the statue to C. H. Spurgeon. I have in years gone by often seen Spurgeon and McLaren together. The former was considerably younger than the latter, and should in the natural course of things not have been the first to depart from earthly scenes. I recollect hearing two racy speeches from Spurgeon and McLaren at a Baptist dinner. No two men could have been more unlike in their personal characteristics. They diverged in almost every respect. But they loved and admired each other immensely and each took every opportunity of paying fraternal tributes to the other. But McLaren is a born patrician, while Spurgeon delighted to pose as a plebeian. Each was a supreme leader in his own sphere. McLaren's sermons have been textual, and exegetical, and expository. Spurgeon's were doctrinal, hortatory, and evangelistic. McLaren has always aimed at the conscience, through the intellect; Spurgeon used to storm the conscience right away, and illumine the intellect afterwards, though usually only by doctrinal disquisitions. Knowing both these men so well, these

"THERE'S A REASON"

That's All Right, But What Is It.

A lady teacher in South Dakota says:

"I was compelled to give up teaching for nearly 4 years because of what the physicians called 'nervous dyspepsia.' Nor was I of any use in the household economy. I was in many respects a wreck.

"I had numerous physicians, one after another, and took many different kinds of medicine, but they did me no good.

"Finally, 5 years ago, I began to use Grape-Nuts food. I grew stronger in a very short time on the new diet, and was soon able to resume and am still teaching. I no longer use drugs of any kind, my dyspepsia has disappeared and I am a hearty woman—thanks to Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason. Brain work and worry take strength from the stomach and bowels. They become too weak to handle the fried meat, eggs, bacon, coffee and white bread, so, partly digested they decay and cause all sorts of trouble which will become chronic if continued. Then the nerves and brain grow weary for they are deprived of the rebuilding elements the food must furnish to replace the soft gray filling of nerve centres and brain which is partly used up each day.

Now comes the mission of Grape-Nuts to supply the "Reason." Made in a peculiar and scientific way of the selected parts of Wheat and Barley this famous food contains natural phosphate of potash with albumen which combines with water in the body and makes that gray matter quickly and surely. Then when nerves and brain feel the power of new made and properly made cells, the strength returns to stomach as well as other parts. "There's a reason." Anyone can prove it.

memories and reflections naturally coursed through my mind. Dr. McLaren's eulogy of his old friend will never be forgotten.

NOTABLE MEN.

As the largest contingent of delegates from outside Britain was from America, so the most noted of the delegates were from that country. Naturally the greatest personal attraction was Dr. Prestridge, the real originator of the congress, who appropriately presided at some of the most important sessions. His noble features and splendid voice, with his admirable management of his great audience, won for him profound admiration. Dr. Burdette—that genius known in his own country as "Bob Burdette"—the famous refined humorist, was another very interesting figure. But I have not space to dwell on the various personalities who created special interest. Bright women did their part. Colored delegates were in striking evidence. A conspicuous visitor was a young Siamese Christian.

RUSSIA AND JAPAN EMBRACING.

The most sensational incident of the whole congress was undoubtedly the episode which took place in a session of delegates from the near and far east. A Russian and a Japanese embraced each other in public. I afterwards, in an interview with the Russian in question, Baron Uixkiull, listened to his joyous reflections on the opportunity of showing how the Gospel brings peace. Those two Baptists greeted each other as Christian brothers, even though their two countries are at war. Baron Uixkiull is a wealthy Russian nobleman, who became a Baptist some years ago and has built three churches on his estates in Esthonia.

The Fine Art of Living.

By
F. D. POWER

Living is a fine art. A man's life is measured, not by the years he has lived, but by the way he has lived them. When we consider life simply on the score of years, how enormously it is exceeded in the vegetable world! According to Humboldt, among the trees the ivy lives 450 years, the chestnut 600, the olive 700, the cedar 800, the oak 1,500, the yew 2,800, and the banyan 5,700. An elephant will live to be a thousand years of age. Thomas Parr, the oldest man of modern times, whose tomb one may see in Westminster Abbey, at 120 married his second wife, at 130 worked on the farm, and at 152 died, but not of old age. A poor farm servant, he was summoned to court by the king, and the change to too liberal a diet killed him, as it has killed many a good man before him, and since. Life consists not in years. "He lives most who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

A wise word is that scripture: "What man desireth life and loveth many days that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil and thy lips from speaking guile. Depart from evil and do good. Seek peace and pursue it." Here we are taught not only the art of living, but the elixir of life. David knew all about the secret which Brown-Sequard and the old alchemists before him sought so diligently to discover. Ponce de Leon, who so long and so earnestly hunted among the Bahamas for the verification of the old tradition of the fountain of perpetual youth, need only have turned to the thirty-fourth psalm, or Peter's first epistle. To him who would live long and live happily and prosperously there is an unfailing prescription in the Word of God. We love life. We ought to love it. We desire to live as long as God ordains it. We can never lift our hands to take life, or profane it, or waste it, so long as the fear of God is before us. We wish for good days while we do live, and where shall the secret of long life and good days be found except with Him who gives life and prolongs it, and rewards the virtue of high and holy living?

What, then, is the fine art of living? The first condition is that a man "refrain his tongue from evil." Evil speaking, lying and slandering must be put away. All excess of passion tends to the shortening of life, and nothing preys on the constitution more than disorderly passions; and of the passions that destroy peace, what is more hurtful than malice? He is a foolish man who sets fire to his own house. What of him who sets his heart on fire and burns himself up with anger, revenge, malevolence? This is misery. This is the mind of Satan. To cherish it is to be an enemy of all peace, at outs with God, angels and men; hateful and hating and utterly unhappy. Evil speaking devastates life. Clear and round dealing is the best system of hygiene. Falsity and perfidy, envy and ill-will, malignant and malicious feelings demoralize and abbreviate life, while truth and fair dealing, justice and nobleness, kindness, forbearance and patience sweeten, beautify and lengthen it. Hatred is hell; love is heaven.

Then the lips must "speak no guile." Men have little joy in living who live double, whose hearts and lips deal out poison, who are full of flatteries and deceits and dissimulations and treacheries. The fine art of living is found in living honestly and truthfully. Winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent. False dealing makes misery. Speaking guile shortens and embitters life. The whole existence is tainted, made wretched, abbreviated, when the soul is treacherous toward men. Those who deal in craft and duplicity have not learned the secret of long life, or the first rudiments of the art of living. Honor, integrity, high-mindedness, honesty, candor and truth are paid in God's own coin. A clear conscience, a pure mind, rectitude within and

HONEST PHYSICIAN
Works with Himself First.

It is a mistake to assume that physicians are always skeptical as to the curative properties of anything else than drugs.

Indeed, the best doctors are those who seek to heal with as little use of drugs as possible and by the use of correct food and drink. A physician writes from Calif. to tell how he made a well man of himself with Nature's remedy:

"Before I came from Europe, where I was born," he says, "it was my custom to take coffee with milk (cafe au lait) with my morning meal, a small cup (cafe noir) after my dinner and two or three additional small cups at my club during the evening.

"In time nervous symptoms developed, with pains in the cardiac region, and accompanied by great depression of spirits, despondency—in brief, 'the blues!' I at first tried medicines, but got no relief and at last realized that all my troubles were caused by coffee. I thereupon quit its use forthwith, substituting English Breakfast Tea.

"The tea seemed to help me at first, but in time the old distressing symptoms returned, and I quit it also, and tried to use milk for my table beverage. This I was compelled, however, to abandon speedily for while it relieved the nervousness somewhat, it brought on constipation. Then by a happy inspiration I was led to try the Postum Food Coffee. This was some months ago and I still use it. I am no longer nervous, nor do I suffer from the pains about the heart, while my 'blues' have left me and life is bright to me once more. I know that leaving off coffee and using Postum healed me, and I make it a rule to advise my patients to use it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

without—these are the fountains of joy and eternal youth.

Another element is, "Eschew evil," or, as the Greek expresses it, "Keep going away from evil." We tempt the devil when we expose ourselves to all the allurements of sin. Oh, I have no fear; a glass is no peril to me. A small sum from my employer will not be missed. Just this one lark, this good time, this indulgence will not hurt me! But evil begins by taking hold of us by little degrees. "Eschew evil." Be shy of it, shun it, flee from it, keep yourself clear of it if you would have long life and see good days.

And the best way to escape is, "Do good." A man must walk in the way of righteousness. Negative goodness is not enough. Active, practical, personal, unwearied continuance in well doing is a condition of long life and good days. He that does good to another does good to himself, will be protected from doing evil. He that does all the good he can, in all the ways he can, to all the people he can, at all the times he can, as long as ever he can—in whatever other arts he may be lacking, has learned the art of living. The luxury of doing good is the greatest of all luxuries; and when once people get a thorough taste of it they will never give it up. That life is long, blessed and well-lived which has a great purpose; and there can be no higher end than to go about doing good. It is the best life ever lived among men.

Finally, this art demands that we "seek peace and pursue it." To seek peace when it is lost, restore it when broken, pursue it when it seems flying away, is an essential part of all true living. "Blessed are the peacemakers" is a beatitude which has recently crowned this nation. Peace makes good days, and length of days. Peace with God, with your own soul, with your household, your neighbors, with all men, with your own heart, throws a perpetual glory over human life. The prescription for a long and happy life, then, is a very simple one. The art of living is a fine art very easily learned.

A United Church and a Believing World.

"Sunrise in the Sunrise Kingdom." James W. Jack masters the facts and figures relating to the evangelization of an important part of Africa and we have his "Daybreak in Livingstonia." James Stewart sweeps over the whole field and we have his "Dawn in the Dark Continent." John R. Mott seems to have left unnoticed no factor in the missionary problem. He sets the forces and resources of Christendom over against the stupendous task and challenges the church to "the evangelization of the world in this generation."

Time and again this convention should break out in thanksgiving—

> "For the city God is rearing,
> For the new earth now appearing,
> For the heavens above us clearing,
> And the song of victory."

Brethren, it is coming! The union of Christians is coming; the evangelization of the world is coming!

Will the Japanese Become a Christian Nation?

By William Elliott Griffis, D. D.,
Author of "The Mikado's Empire," Etc.

Discerning between the simple religion of Jesus and what state churches and popular tradition associate with it, we are not at all concerned with the question, "Will the Japanese 'adopt' Christianity?" The very worst thing that could happen to genuine religion would be for the emperor and his ministers to proclaim "Christianity" as the state religion. Ever since Pilate and Caiaphas planted the cross to kill a truth speaker, the world has had enough of that kind of business. Today in Russia, we have awful examples both of what a political religion is, and of the crimes of which a ruling class in a united state and church are capable. The union of church and state is a satanic device for shifting responsibility. When the state sheds blood in persecution and war, magistrates lay responsibility on "the church." The church as torturer and hangman points to "the state" as giving the order. It is a perpetual case of guilty Adam charging upon the helpmeet his own crime. One of the great, deep, underlying causes of the Russo-Japanese strife is the preaching of a crusade against the Japanese "pagans," and the procurator's hounding on the czar to "do God's will" in murderous war.

No, except to learn the difference between the divine simplicity of Jesus and later corruptions of the faith, we hope the Japanese

WILL NOT "ADOPT" CHRISTIANITY.

Nevertheless we trust they will receive and adapt the truth in Christ, which must needs come to them in this twentieth century through accidental channels. Then, further, may they become adepts in pure religion and undefiled.

This order of first adopting, then adapting, and finally becoming adepts is the order (not only in voweling and alliteration, but) of that New Testament arrangement of apostolic letters which tells of the growth of primitive Christian life among the "Romans," "Galatians" and "Ephesians." The order is first that of right doctrine and practical morals developing under the divine Spirit, not as a strange thing, but out of the national history, as seen in Paul's letter to the Romans; then of revolt against tradition and freedom in the liberty wherewith Christ makes free; and finally growth in knowledge of our Savior and in Christian graces of fruitful character. Happily, this has been, and is, the order of development in the nascent Christian nation of Japan.

An "adept" is one proficient with natural as well as acquired aptitude. When first coined, the word described a persevering student who had won "the great secret" (of the transformation of metals into gold and of the elixir of life, or the philosopher's stone). Is not the promise of the risen Christ for the Japanese also—"I will give him a white stone, and upon the stone a new name written which no one knoweth but he that received it"? In that promise is written the right philosophy of the future religion of Japan.

TRUE CHRISTIANITY IS FIRST of all a personal matter between the believer and his Savior.

In becoming Christians the Japanese will do what every Christian nation and civilization has already done. They will hear the message of Jesus, heed it, read it for themselves, and think it out. Then, expressing it in the forms of thought and life best suited to their inheritance and environment, their task and their calling will be to make it the vital and purifying spring of their civilization. Japanese "Christianity" will not be of the Greek, Roman, German, British or American type, nor of the Russo-Greek, Roman Catholic, or state church Protestant order. It will grow by the divine fructification out of their national history and development. "To every seed a body of its own." Let us see what this means.

We declare that the Japanese will be Christians, yet not after our sort. We ourselves, inheritors of the Græco-Roman culture, with an open Bible before and the Reformation behind us, are not Christians like the Russians, or southern Europeans. Holding with them much of the same historic heritage, we reject much of what they hold. So, also, the Japanese will follow us indeed, but only as we follow Christ.

It is a commonplace, both of Christian eloquence and of church history and propædeutics (or the preparation of the ancient world for Christianity) to show what God had done not only through Hebraism, but through Greek language and culture, and Roman law and government, for the reception and spread of the Gospel. It would be absurd then to neglect the (divine) preparation for the Gospel in Japan through the ages of culture, ethics, philosophy, and art in the Chinese world during centuries when our fathers, clothed in wolf and bear skins, were eating acorns in the forests. God has many ways of lifting up a race from savagery into civilization and Gospel light.

Critically perusing Japanese history, we behold these islanders, once the lowest of savages, gradually trained in manners, morals and deliverance from selfishness. We note an ever-deepening hunger for the infinite, and a desire to know God, even as the wrestling Jacob, the storm-confronted Elijah, the inquiring Job and the smitten Saul of Tarsus, desired to know him.

THE HISTORY OF THE JAPANESE SPIRIT is that of inquiry, of progress, of humility before the Eternal, of self-conquest, of desire for the best. Now, in this twentieth century, having adopted, adapted, and becoming adept in the very best of things mechanical, which the Occident could offer, can the Japanese in spiritual things be satisfied with anything less than Christ in truth? To answer that question in the affirmative would be to ignore their long and glorious story.

We must agree with Dr. W. G. Aston, the consummate scholar in Japanese literature, that "the previous religious history has prepared Japan for the acceptance of a higher form of faith. . . . But none of the three [Shinto, Buddhism, Confucianism] sufficed by itself to meet the heart, soul and mind want of the Japanese nation. . . . They have already accepted European philosophy and science. It is simply inconceivable that the Christian religion should not follow."

At the dawn of history we see the conquerors blending with the conquered, all holding one simple rudimentary form of theology; for this is exactly what Shinto means. Just as theos originally meant what a "heathen" means by the word "god," but being infused with truth theos became in European language the highest word for Jehovah in the Old, and God in the New Testament, so Admiral Togo's Ten-yu (Grace of Heaven) will become "Abba Father."

Shinto taught reverence for the Divine Powers which created and govern the universe and man. Despise it we may, even laugh at it, with contempt that we may imagine to be Christian, but the student of religions, and especially that in the Old Testament, will see how the Divine Father trains his children. He is patient because he is eternal. Not in a day, but through the ages, he leads men up from merely animal life into thought, devotion and communion with him—as they are able to bear it. Shinto today, though next to nothing as a formal, visible system, is, on its nobler side, as influential on the daily life of the Japanese as is the atmosphere upon our own feelings and health. Though seemingly invisible, it contains within itself the principle of all things.

WE CAN NOT AFFORD TO DESTROY Shinto, but Christ's gospel will fulfill it.

Buddhism, coming to a land and people living in barbaric simplicity, possessing only rudimentary virtues, without codes of ethics, formal ritual or high ideals of holiness or humanity, did a wonderful work. With writings and symbols, patient teaching and many a rare instance of self-sacrifice and beautiful example, its missionaries opened roads, drained swamps, healed disease and developed food supplies, thus doing something besides preaching. After a thousand years of work, Buddhism has taught the Japanese gentleness, kindness and detachment from worldly things, while rich in comfort and consolation for the people. Nevertheless, like Shinto, besides many a shadow and defect, it could not satisfy the intellect of the nation's most earnest thinkers. Though the people's friend, scholars disdained it.

Confucianism came in to furnish ideals for the state, for society, and for the individual, inculcating a high code of morals, providing also what every orderly thinker must have, a comparatively rational system of philosophy. It trained the Japanese gentlemen.

In this article we are not pointing out all the dark shadows in Japan's ethnic faith, nor the abominable results which follow, when any one or all of these systems are made substitutes for the whole truth. No more than the pretexts and excuses of the covetous business man or the secret fraternity devotee among us, may the Japanese excuse himself from personal religion or holy living, because he is Shintoist, Buddhist, or Confucian, or from the logical alternative of seeking the highest truth. Today in Japan, as in other lands, men hide "behind the trees of the garden," or stop their ears, or retreat to caves of philosophy and science so-called, so as not to hear the voice of God and conscience, but there as here this is vanity. Yet steadily and surely the Japanese seekers after God discern that in Jesus Christ are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

Christianity, without destroying, is fulfilling in a higher school of truth the preparatory training given lower down during the ages. Even before foreign missionaries came to Japan, Bible Christianity had a subterranean history and some martyrs. Now there are many more than a hundred thousand Christians enrolled in the churches. The signs of promise, forecasting the ultimate triumph of Christ in Japan, are visible on all sides.

THE CASTING OFF OF EUROPEAN-MADE CREEDS, or rather the desire for a simpler Christianity, instead of being a dangerous, is a good, sign. The strenuous effort for self-support and independence of foreign boards or corporations augurs well for the future. Already Buddhism is heavily discounted because the priests raised the cry for war against Russia, because, said they, "The Russians are Christians and the Japanese are Buddhists"—which the government and intelligent classes denounced and silenced. The Mikado has already decorated three American missionaries, Verbeck, Hepburn and Harris; given $5,000 out of his own purse to Y. M. C. A. work in Manchuria and as much more to Christian orphanages; sent Dr. DeForest as his guest and at the imperial expense to visit the camps of his soldiers, and thus clearly recognized the good done to his people by Christians. It takes a long time for "the heathen" to understand either metaphysical and sectarian "Christianity," or the sort which drunken sailors or ungodly men and women from "Christian" countries bring to Japan. Yet while the Japanese are puzzled at thorn grapes or thistle figs, they know the fruits of the genuine Christ life at once.

"What hath God wrought!" When I first stepped upon Japanese soil I saw the name of Yasu (Jesus) outlawed in the government edicts, and found that it was popularly synonymous with demons and sorcery. There was no Christian church, and but half a dozen hidden Bible Christians. Some Roman Catholics, in the red clothes of the criminal, roped together, were being led as banished prisoners to mountain crater-prisons. Today freedom of conscience is the law; missionaries' lives are in no danger; the churches are counted by hundreds, and besides an enrollment steadily approaching 200,000, there are as many more who are influenced by Christian ideas and customs. The whole trend of the national literature, thought and life is towards that "one flock, one Shepherd," by which Jesus described himself and his people.

Yes, the Japanese will become a Christian nation. I read in the Bible (Isaiah 9:7, last clause) in their own tongue the promise, "Bangun no Iehoba no nesshin kore wo nashi tamobeshi."

The Illinois Christian Missionary Convention

Decatur is a fine convention city. No place in Illinois is quite so accessible to the large body of our people. To see and enjoy a series of services in the magnificent new church is worth something of a trip. The hospitality and generous treatment by the Disciples in Decatur is excelled by no people. F. W. Burnham, the pastor, and his talented wife are royal entertainers. He is a general in the management of a great convention. Gratitude is due and was well expressed for the generous treatment which we all received. Under such circumstances it was easy to have a great convention, which we did. The large auditorium was constantly crowded and other available space occupied. The many apartments in the church gave ample opportunities for the good work of committees, for social purposes and for the representatives of our publication houses. The splendid program had been carefully prepared and was carried out with few exceptions.

CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.

We always expect good things from our sisters and they never disappoint us.

The president, Miss Annie E. Davidson, who was still in California, was greatly missed. But Miss Lura V. Thompson, the state secretary and organizer, is equal to any emergency and had a general supervision of all the work.

The opening address by H. G. Williamson, the missionary to Porto Rico, was thoroughly enjoyed, as was his second address the following day, on that beautiful but strange land. He presents it as an open field, with opportunities far more than we can occupy. Indeed I think I never attended a convention in which throughout, was so manifested the wonderful possibilities open to us. Oh, for the men and money to extend the kingdom of God to the ends of the earth!

Mrs. Geo. Agnew, of Chicago, presided over the morning session on Tuesday, and Mrs. G. W. Buckner, of Macomb, in the afternoon.

The Young People's Work, under the efficient management of Miss Irene Ridgely, of Eureka, has steadily grown and prospered. But she has just resigned this service to become Mrs. B. H. Sealock and to preside over the parsonage at Polo.

Miss Clara D. Griffin, of Carthage, who succeeds her as superintendent of Young People's Work, read the report and awarded the banner to the Junior Society at Rock Island, which had raised for missions $2.61 per member, with Jacksonville a close second. The summary of the report showed 107 mission bands and Juniors, with 2,801 members; "Junior Builders" taken, 970; amount contributed to the C. W. B. M., $892.70. The great needs in this department are efficient local superintendents, and closer insight and interest by the auxiliaries.

The report of the organizer, Miss Thompson, who succeeded Miss Annie M. Hale, when the latter resigned to become Mrs. C. E. Evans, was an excellent paper. The summary shows that in the eight districts, there are 177 auxiliaries with 3,996 members, who contributed for state development $1,719 03 and to the general treasury, $10,470.58, making the past the banner year for the C. W. B. M. The church at Paris has the largest number of members—135—who take 110 copies of the Tidings. Twenty-six auxiliaries were on the roll of honor and forty-four missed it by one point. The fourth district has the largest number of members—798—with the fifth a close second with 788. The second district has the largest number of auxiliaries in proportion to the number of churches. For the most part the district secretaries remain the same as last year. Miss Annie E. Davidson is still to be president and the other state officers were re-elected. Mrs. Crawford gave a fine summary of the state funds, showing a good balance on hand. The ladies publish a quarterly that is very helpful in their work. Their motto for the year is, "Workers together with God." They propose to push the building institutes, to increase the special offerings to $3,600, or if possible, to average one dollar per member, encourage the forming of local unions, the printing of auxiliary programs, more careful reporting and special effort to increase the number of auxiliaries in the state. The work of C.C. Smith in the state was spoken of in highest praise.

THE ILLINOIS STATE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Tuesday evening Bro. George A. Campbell, of Chicago, president of the society, delivered the annual address. It was a strong appeal to loyalty to Christ as Lord of all. It was a great address, putting the keynote of the convention at exactly the right pitch.

S. S. Jones, of Danville, had charge of the music, aided by Guy B. Williamson, a splendid choir and the fine new pipe-organ. This part of the service was a great factor in the success and pleasure of the convention.

After the appointment of committees, C. A. Burton delivered an eloquent address on, "The Place of State Missions." The convention sermon, supposed to be the great sermon of the convention, was delivered by S. E. Fisher, Champaign. His theme was, "Primacy in the Kingdom." He reasoned that primacy consists, 1. In the apprehension of the truth, the Christ, the gospel. 2. In being possessed of a great spirit, possessing a great spirit. 3. In being of service. It was a great theme, handled in a masterful way, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

The business sessions had much to do with figures which stood for a hard but perhaps the most successful year's work in the history of the society. After all the tabulating possible, the greater part remains untold. The secretary, J. Fred Jones, read the report of the board, giving in detail the various items too numerous to repeat here. It is very difficult to get at the facts, as only 246 churches out of 810 reported at all. These showed a total membership of 43,340, with 4,412 additions during the year. It is supposed that during the year there were in all the churches at least 7,456 additions and a total net gain of 4,603. The society aided seventy churches, organized ten churches and re-organized eight. Sixty-two men were employed by the board, who labored 1,644 days. The society raised in all ways $11,336.44. There are three living link churches paying $200 each, Bloomington, Second church, Central at Peoria, Central at Decatur. Our total membership in the state seems to be about 91,509. There has been about $100,000 spent erecting and repairing buildings. Thirty-nine parsonages have been built at a cost of $73,150. Through the generous will of Mr. Thomas E. Bondurant, of De Land, the society expects to receive about $75,000, to be added to its permanent fund, which now amounts, according to the report of P. Whitmer, of Bloomington, to $24,134.42. Suitable resolutions concerning Mr. Bondurant's liberal offering were passed.

The report of the treasurer, J. P. Darst, of Peoria, accorded with the secretary's report with the addition of the report on the students' aid fund. There had been loaned to students in Eureka college $465 from this fund, which has blessed so many young men in their struggle for an education. Any young man properly endorsed and with proper security, preparing for the ministry, can borrow of this fund.

There was an attendance from outside of Decatur of about 400, one hundred and seventeen of whom were preachers.

G. W. Buckner, of Macomb, gave a fine address on "Practical Christian Union." He is an able speaker and gave a great summary of opportunities to manifest the union spirit, as well as encouraging signs of the growth of union sentiment. He also pointed out misconceptions and false views concerning the ultimate union of God's people.

A. McLean, of Cincinnati, gave a delightful address on "The Grace of Giving." He is always heard gladly and with profit.

The next convention goes to Paris the first week in September, 1906.

F. W. Burnham was chosen president; Finis Idleman, vice-president; M. L. Pontius and J. P. Givins, recording secretaries. Brief changes were made in the constitution to make it articulate better with the law and particular conditions.

The obituary committee had an unusually long list of the departed. This is the touching part of our great conventions. Blessed is the memory of the faithful departed.

THE ILLINOIS CHRISTIAN EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

Mrs. S. J. Crawford, of Eureka, president of the association, presided over the business session. She introduced the session with a brief history and purpose of the association. It has been organized about eight years and has brought into the college treasury some $15,000. The constitution states the purpose to be to "secure the co-operation of the Disciples of Christ in Illinois in the enlargement and maintenance of Eureka college, by disseminating a knowledge of its work and needs throughout the state, by increasing the attendance and by providing financial support." The payment of one dollar annually constitutes a regular member. Twenty-five dollars makes a life membership. The latter has been recently begun and but 23 are life members, while in the regular membership there are 2,000.

The treasurer, Miss Clara L. Davidson, was absent in California, but her report for 11 months, read by the secretary, showed that from membership dues she had received $1,474; life memberships, $105; Coleman fund, $825, Calendar improvement fund, $5,126.07; Education day, $304.46; otherwise, $227.28; Total $8,086.81. It is expected that a complete report for the year will be printed soon and, with the auditor's report, will be sent to any desiring a copy.

Field Secretary J. G. Waggoner made his report, showing that he had visited 154 churches, delivered 71 addresses, secured 171 new names to the I. C. E. A., received in cash and pledges $7,484.40. The beautiful souvenir calendar had been well appreciated and widely purchased. A part of the edition is yet on hand. High appreciation of the donors was expressed and gratitude to our good Father for his care. The efforts to have "Education day" observed resulted in about 50 churches observing the day, as many sermons delivered and $304 46 in cash received. It is hoped that a larger effort and more general observance will characterize the third Lord's day next January. The secretary pleads for a closer fellowship and more co-operation in building up Eureka College until it shall stand well in the front rank of the great educational institutions of the west; that there be a closer connection between the college and the people through literature supplied by the college and information supplied by the people. Aid for the college may be given by becoming either a life or regular member of the Educational Association, by paying to it cash, or making a pledge, an annuity, or by leaving a bequest in the will. The college will always be glad to get the names of young people going to college, or to have its friends speak a word of encouragement to attend Eureka College. Our great need of more preachers behooves us to use every available means to enlarge the college and its influence until this supply is fully met.

Finis Idleman spoke briefly of the loyalty of the ministry to this institution that has done such a great service for the churches and which is largely to furnish our successors and the men that are to carry the gospel to the ends of the earth. Mrs. G. W. Buckner, of Macomb, spoke briefly of what the women can do. These talks were brief, to the point, and highly enjoyed. The evening session was presided over by Pres. R. E. Hieronymus. Mrs. Crawford gave the first address, which was full of great truths and inspiration for still larger achievements. The address will probably be published, the subject being the "Purpose of the Christian College to Develop the Moral and Spiritual Nature and Powers as well as the Intellect."

W. F. Shaw, of Charleston, gave the final address of the evening on some of the "Problems" that confront us in our work of training our young people for larger service in the kingdom of God. It was a very strong address dealing with radically important questions.

Mrs. Crawford was re-elected president of the association; Mrs. H. N. Herrick, of Chicago, and Mrs. Ida M. Darst, of Peoria, vice presidents; Mrs. R. E. Conklin, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. A. McGuire, recording secretary; Miss Clara L. Davidson, treasurer, and Prof. Silas Jones, auditor. The association covets a generous co-operation that this year may be its greatest.

Old students of Eureka college, with their friends, about 75 in number, enjoyed a splendid banquet at the St. Nicholas Hotel Wednesday evening. We all regretted that the time was too short for speech-making. But the occasion was much enjoyed.

Marion Stevenson has been selected by the state board of missions as Sunday school evangelist. He is eminently fitted by scholarship, nature and ability for such an important field. He gave a masterly address on the mission of the Sunday school. The trustees have arranged for him to deliver a course of lectures in Eureka College during the winter. These will be of great value to all students who expect to be teachers in Sunday schools, preachers, or missionaries.

W. H. Harding, Blue Mound, gave a helpful address on "The Possibilities of the Village Church." O. C. Bolman, Mason City, discussed, in a very thoughtful address, "The Widening Influence of the Local Church." G. H. Brown, Lexington, spoke eloquently of the "Ripening Fields." The need of laborers was everywhere apparent.

Mr. W. H. Anderson, of Anti-Saloon League fame, gave a telling address on the liquor traffic and its ways, especially in its management of legislation. But he gave many examples of the growth of temperance sentiment and progress in legal enactments.

The Christian Endeavor Society, representing the state organization, held a short session. Its support has been given to the mission at Savanna, and doubtless it will continue its service in that direction. It expressed a desire for closer relationship with the state board and a purpose to crowd the work with more vigor. The new officers elected for the year are, Guy B. Williamson, Jacksonville, superintendent; F. A. Sword, Walnut, assistant superintendent; R. H. Newton, Normal, secretary and treasurer; Miss Griffin, Carthage, superintendent Juniors; H. H. Peters, Rossville, superintendent good citizenship.

Finally, but not least of interest, was the presence of Bro. Vernon Stauffer, of Angola, Ind. He gave two great addresses. The last was on "The Ideals of the Christian Pulpit." This he discussed in three sections:

I. The Preacher and Pastor in one light. 1. The over-sermonizer; 2. The excessive pastor. The best can only obtain by the proper proportion of these.

II. Self-effacement. 1. Mannerism; 2. Sensationalism. Both unworthy and permanent injury to the cause.

III. Consciousness of the Worth of Souls.

This sermon formed a fitting climax to a great convention, with a crowded house at the last session. I think we all went away after the "God be with you till we meet again," each determined to do a better and a more unselfish service for the Master than he had ever done before.

Eureka, Ill. J. G. WAGGONER.

A Last Appeal.

The American Christian Missionary Society makes this last appeal to a generous and loyal brotherhood. We are within $8,000 of the $100,000 mark. The year closing has excelled all other records in work accomplished in the field and in the office.

Vast plans necessitated by pressing conditions demand a vaster income. The time is passed when we can think of doing anything more than an elemental work upon an income of less than $100,000. To-day we face this dilemma: We must retire from fields entered in a small way, confess defeat in strategic points seized, permit other religious bodies to pre-empt territory and seize what we have built; or we must place in the hands of our acting board a fund adequate to the maintenance of our present lines, and sufficient for the conduct of an aggressive campaign. The latter policy is the only winning one. To-day we need $100,000. We ask our loyal brotherhood to heed an appeal for this amount. A close intimacy with the field, covering a period of ten years, forces upon us the necessity of laying the burden of Home Missions upon the hearts of the brotherhood. We appeal to the generous givers. We appeal to those who have not yet known the joy of sacrificial giving. We appeal to preachers, to church officers, to churches, to Sunday schools, to all, everywhere, who love the Lord Jesus and his glorious gospel, to come up to the help of the Lord—to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Send in an offering before September 30, that we may sweep victoriously over the line, set a new mark for our forward going, and enter with thanksgiving upon a new era of home missionary victories. Shall our appeal be in vain?

Faithfully your servant,
BENJ. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec'y.

The Church Extension Plea.

There remains yet one Sunday in September that our stronger churches should use to good advantage in raising large offerings for Church Extension. Most of the money must come from our older or stronger churches. This does not mean that the smaller churches shall not help. All the churches should have part in this work of housing our worthy homeless brethren. Last year at least 2,000 churches had no fellowship in this good work and all of the 2,000 believe in missionary work. Why this neglect of so important a work? for it is simply a neglect. The work is so necessary and the plan so excellent that no worthy soul can refuse it aid except for the reason that lack of knowledge creates a lack of interest and therefore the offering in September, appointed by the brotherhood, goes by default.

Let us make a record this fall. Remit promptly to G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo.

The Benevolent Association Gets $2,700.

I am happy to report that since our last communication we have issued annuity bond No. 99 to Bro. L. Gill, of California, for $500; bond No. 100 to Mary Tufts, of Missouri, for $200; bond No. 101 to Dr. D. M. Martin, of Missouri, for $2,000, and bond No. 102 to Mrs. Mary P. Fuller, of California, for $500. These annuity bonds are constantly and rapidly growing in popular favor with our people because they are most excellent investments and at the same time most approved ways of helping the advancement of the kingdom of the Lord and his work. We will greatly appreciate having you investigate this system and commend it to your friend, if it meets with your approval.

Nearly $250,000!

The receipts of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society from October 1, 1904, to September 16, 1905, amount to $236,952.76. This is $13,047.24 short of the $250,000, with only two weeks to go on. Let the friends bestir themselves at once. No failure now. Victory in sight! Offerings must reach the office of the Foreign Society not later than five o'clock, September 30, to be credited on this year's receipts.

Our Budget

—One long pull and a pull all together, and our Missionary Societies will raise the needed money.

—The "Christian Church Pavilion," which our brotherhood erected at the World's Fair, has been removed and re-erected, and was to have been dedicated on Lord's day, September 17, as the church home of the Disciples at Old Orchard, St. Louis. But rains interfered, and the interesting event was postponed.

—Baxter Waters begins his work at Duluth October 8.

—There will soon be a new church at Norcatur, Kan.

—Harry Minnick has begun his work at Van Wert, O.

—A new church has just been dedicated at Blackburn, Okla.

—An addition is being made to our church at Cortland, Ill.

—Orilas G. White will supply at Huntington, W. Va., until January 1.

—C. D. Purlee has successfully begun his work at Siloam Springs, Ark.

—A. L. Chapman has taken up the work at the First Church, Seattle, Wash.

—The ministers of Davenport, Ia., have elected A. Martin as their president.

—J. M. Booce will preach for churches in the neighborhood of Pittsfield, Ill.

—A. T. Lane will take charge of the work at Thorntown, Ind., October 1.

—John Williams has become pastor of the church at Collingwood, Ont., Canada.

—D. W. Arnold has just held a very successful meeting at Tranter's Creek, Tenn.

—O. P. Spiegel is to work with the church at Savannah, Ga., during October.

—Brethren at Egypt, Ga., had an acre of land donated as a site for a new building.

—E. S. Bledsoe leaves Winnsboro and Sulphur Springs, Tex., to preach at Italy, Texas.

—George Darsie has begun his work at Akron, O., under the most favorable conditions.

—A building at Plymouth, Ind., where N. H. Shepherd is minister, has just been dedicated.

—Newell L. Simms, of Danville, Ind., will begin his work at Carthage, Mo., on October 1.

—The board of trustees of the church at Hoisington, Kansas, have decided to build a parsonage.

—B. L. Wray, late of Lanark, Ill., is now in charge of the work at Budd Park, Kansas City.

—W. H. Book has taken up the work of the pastorate at the Tabernacle Church, Martinsville, Va.

—There is to be a protracted meeting at Naylor, Mo., and a church rally is planned to precede it on October 19, 20.

—Pastors of Chicago and vicinity are to hold a union meeting on September 25, in the interest of the Anti-saloon League.

—The church at Macon, Mo., will not let H. R. Trickett resign, but have given him a vacation until the first of January.

—"THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grows better all the time. I am delighted with it." MORGAN MORGANS.

—T. L. Noblett has taken up his work in connection with the Southwestern State Normal School at Weatherford, Okla., and in the absence of the pastor of our church, E. R. Clarkson, he occupied the pulpit the last two Lord's days.

—The Fifth District (Ohio) Missionary Convention will be held on September 25, 26 at Blanchester, where we have a new church.

—Charles Forster has resigned at West Pawlet, Vermont, to attend Union Theological Seminary, having received a Merit Scholarship there.

—Sarah Johnson, one of the charter members at New Holland, O., and a faithful mother in Israel, recently passed away, in her eighty-first year.

—H. M. Barnett has begun his work with the Forrest Avenue Church, Kansas City, Mo., and had a fine audience and three additions at the first service.

—Cephas Shelburne has begun his fourth year with the church at Huntington, Ind., of whose rapid progress we have more than once recently made mention.

—The church at North Fairfield, O., of which Hugh Wayt is minister, has increased its offerings for missions until it averages nearly $5 per member.

—There is a Chinese school in the Jackson Boulevard Church, Chicago, and a Christian Endeavor Society has been organized, all members taking part.

—October 2-5 is the date for the Tennessee Christian Missionary Convention at Harriman. Charles E. Colston is the chairman of the Entertainment Committee.

—George A. Campbell has resigned at Austin, Chicago, to accept a call to the church at North Tonawanda, N. Y., but an effort is being made to keep him in Chicago.

—The First Church at Tonawanda, N. Y., has just put out a little leaflet, under the good title of "Progress," in which is found the local news of the church work.

—"The Bible and the University" was the subject of an address given by J. W. Lowber at the Central Christian Church, Austin, Tex., on the occasion of the opening of the State University.

—Dr. W. T. Moore is to give his four lectures, which constitute a fresh statement of the plea of the Disciples, before the Kansas State Convention, which meets at Eldora, September 18-21.

—Prof. Herbert Martin, who took the Ph. D. degree this spring at Yale, is visiting his relatives in Boston. He is to lecture in the training schools in New York City during the coming school year.

—T. E. Winter, who recently resigned at Greenwich, O., in order to take a course of study at the Berkeley Bible Seminary, has accepted a call to serve the churches at Irvington and Warm Springs while studying in the seminary.

—Albyn Esson, after four years with the Rodney Avenue Church, at Portland, Ore., goes to Silverton, where a new building is contemplated. "I consider THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a very excellent paper," he writes.

—A. E. Dubber has left Ft. Collins, Col., and begun work for the Tabernacle Church, Ft. Worth, Tex., with the understanding that the call is for a period of many years. There was one confession on the first day of his ministry.

—T. J. Head, lately one of the state evangelists of Missouri, has been visiting his old home and his parents, who have both passed their seventieth year. Brother Head held a meeting at Alpha, Ky., where over thirty-four years ago, he took upon himself the name of Christian, under the preaching of Elder F. C. Shearer. He will attend the Kentucky state meeting at Maysville.

—A farewell service to J. L. Garvin, who has gone to New York for further study, was held at Youngstown, O., September 10, and a welcome tendered to J. R. Ewers, of Chicago, who takes up the work. Both ministers preached sermons on this occasion.

—H. F. Burns and wife have been most heartily received by the church at Peoria, Ill. On the occasion of the welcome the mortgage for the last indebtedness on the church was burned. C. H. Marsh, who has been associate pastor, has gone to California.

—The work at Evansville, Ind., where H. W. Laye is minister, seems to be in a flourishing condition, judging by the report that the audiences are large on all occasions. There are $1,800 in bank for an addition to the church, which will be built this fall.

—Prof. G. P. Coler, of our Bible Chair at Ann Arbor, finds himself unable to take up the work this fall, and has started for Colorado, where he will spend three months in trying to regain his health. William M. Forrest will take charge of Professor Coler's work in the meantime.

—J. Murray Taylor has resigned at H Street, Washington, D. C., and is open to engage in evangelistic work. His time for November is already bespoken, but he can engage in meetings during October and December. His address is 475 F Street S. W., Washington, D. C.

—"I am one of those unfortunate persons who could not attend the San Francisco Convention, but next to the joy of making the trip itself is the pleasure of reading the description in the 'Editor's Easy Chair,' which I have been, with increasing rapture."
Indianapolis, Ind. AUSTIN HUNTER.

—W. W. Wharton has resigned his pastorate at Winchester, Ill., to take effect November 1. He will hold some meetings before locating again, and has December open for engagements. The Winchester church is in fine condition, and its membership has increased until it now numbers five hundred.

—The next banquet of the Chicago Disciples' Social Union will be held in the dining hall of the university the first week in October. It will take the form of a special college gathering, the presidents and representatives of several of these having been invited to be present.

—Dr. Willett has just begun as regular supply of the First Christian Church, Chicago. R. F. Handley, of Aurora, has been engaged as one of the ministers, and an effort will be made to secure a suitable lot and erect a church building.

—We are glad to learn from D. B. Titus, pastor at Lexington, Neb., that twenty members of his church have just adopted the tithe system. They represent twelve families, including one elder and five deacons. Joel Brown, of Des Moines, will hold a meeting for this church in November.

—It was a recommendation of the Kansas City Convention that we earnestly strive to complete $500,000 for the Church Extension Fund by the close of 1905. We are $42,000 short of that amount, and we trust every church will make earnest efforts to do its part during this month toward completing the half million.

—The students attending the University of Michigan during the current year will be gladly welcomed at the Bible Chair building, 444 South State Street, or at the Christian Church, on South University Avenue. The latter will be open every night during the first week of college for social intercourse and to welcome new students.

—The new Park Street Church, Kalamazoo, Mich., has just been dedicated by L. L. Carpenter. It has a seating capacity of 430. The cost was about $11,000, and towards the $7,600 still unpaid $4,700 were raised by pledges on the occasion of the dedication. H. H. Halley, the present minister, has been with the congregation about six years.

—J. S. Hughes writes: "I have just read with great pleasure the Editor's reply to Brother Braden's questions in The Christian-Evangelist of August 10. I am compelled to say how delighted I am with the calm, clear statement. I fully approve his words, and thank him for doing so good a service to the brotherhood. I have been standing there for many years, or trying to, and my study of John's Revelation and Gospel completed and confirmed me."

—The National Benevolent Association has just decided to make Baldwin, Ga., the focus of its work in the southeast. There are calls for homes at other places, but this benevolent work, like all our other interests, can only be prosecuted as means will permit. We have every reason to believe that the work at Baldwin will be blessed of God and be a credit to the association.

—In another column we print a comparative statement of the Church Extension receipts for the first thirteen days of September, as compared with the same period last year, and we regret to note that there is a slight falling off. This will not do! No loans have been granted by the Church Extension Board for two months, because of the lack of funds. The preachers and the churches must see to it that this work shall not be hindered.

—An enthusiastic reader writes: "As I read The Christian-Evangelist each week I feel like asking, why should any of our people be content with some of the papers they are reading, when they can have such a splendid paper?" We must confess that we have often felt the same way, but have been too modest to say it. There is no accounting for tastes, but the kind of religious journal one likes is a very true measure of what manner of man he is.

—E. B. Barnes has resigned at Noblesville, Ind., and will enter the evangelistic field. During his stay at Noblesville, of almost four years, missionary offerings have been doubled, and since January of the present year there have been more than sixty additions to the church and seventy-five added in meetings held by Brother Barnes elsewhere. He invites correspondence with churches wanting meetings, and may be addressed Box 611, Noblesville, Ind.

—N. S. Haynes has made a practice of preaching one Lord's day every year at the Englewood church, Chicago, since his ministry there closed. C. G. Kindred, the present minister of the church, suggested that this year Brother Haynes' visit be marked by a memento of some kind, seeing that the church had acquired a handsome new home. W. P. Keeler writes that this suggestion took the form of a gift of a handsome edition of the American Revised Bible.

—F. M. Rains, secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, writes: "This week's Christian-Evangelist is simply splendid, and has a great amount of convention news. I think it is the best number of The Christian-Evangelist I have ever seen. You have certainly put a lot of hard and effective work on this number, and I congratulate you."

—Richard B. Moore and wife passed through St. Louis last week on their way to Indianapolis. Professor Moore, who is a son of Dr. W. T. Moore and a brother of the assistant editor, has for the past six years been a member of the faculty of the University of Missouri, from which he resigned to take the chair of chemistry at Butler College. Mr. Moore has had the very best European and American training, having been a student under Professor Ramsay, among other teachers.

—Herbert Yeuell is doing fine work in the evangelistic field. He has gathered crowds at the meeting in Bristol, Va., though such attractions as Sam Jones, Richard Hobson and others were engaged in a Chautauqua at the same time. C. B. Richards, pastor at Petersburg, Va., writing in high praise of Brother Yeuell's recent meeting there, says there were eleven additions on the Lord's day, large audiences and all expenses of the large tabernacle paid, with something over. He will now continue as pastor.

—W. E. M. Hackleman conducted the music in eight meetings since the St. Louis convention, in which there were over six hundred accessions—four of which were in his home state, Muncie, Lafayette, Evansville and Terre Haute; two in Ohio, Bellefontaine and Central, Columbus; one in Tennessee, Clarksville; and one in Mississippi, Aberdeen. He conducted the music at Bethany Park and has been engaged for the position for next year. He will assist J. L. Hill at Central, Cincinnati, O., and James Small, at Broadway, Lexington, Ky., in October and November, respectively.

—Louis S. Cupp has accepted a call to the Hyde Park Church, Kansas City, Mo., to succeed R. H. Fife. It will be remembered that a handsome new stone church was recently completed at Hyde Park. Brother Cupp has been with the Platte City church almost four years, during which time it has had nearly two hundred additions. He will enter upon his new work early in October. He leaves his present charge with many sincere regrets, for they have stood by him loyally and generously.

—We have received the following items about the Church Extension offering: New Salem, Ind., Frank A. Thomas, pastor, raised $90, as against $93.25 last year; Higginsville, Mo., J. H. Coil, pastor, raised $29 for an apportionment of $20; Winchester, Ky., Cecil J. Armstrong, pastor, raised $200, or $50 more than last year. This church has contributed $1,450 to missions this year, or $200 in advance of its offering for the same period last year. The church at Bloomfield, W. Va., raised over $40; W. G. Walters is minister.

—Announcement is made of a Conference on Religious Education to be held at the University of Illinois, at Urbana, on October 19. There will be two sessions, and the theme is religious education in state universities. The first topic suggested for discussion is one in which we, as a people who have started Bible chairs at universities, are vitally interested. It is: "Within the limits set by our separation of church and state, what religious education may be undertaken by state universities?" A number of other topics which hinge on this first one are also suggested. We trust that the conference may be largely attended and that some pronounced stand may be taken in favor of the recognition by universities of work done in Biblical and religious subjects.

—D. A. Wickizer is now located in his new field of labor at Kirksville, Mo., a town where constant improvements are being made. He writes that our brethren there talk of the students and their responsibility to them as if the church existed for the sole sake of the students, which is certainly a very commendable interest. Brother Wickizer would be glad to hear from parents or friends who know of students who ought to be identified with the work of the Christian church. He will be glad to take such interest in them as he can. He may be addressed at 711 East Harrison Street.

—There will be a new building at Ironton, O., where there is a faithful little band of brethren. The old building and lot, which are in the business part of the city, were sold and a fine new lot purchased, on which a modern brick structure, trimmed in rock-faced brick and terra cotta, will be erected. Walter S. Willis, the minister, writes us that only those who know this field can understand the faith and determination manifested by these brethren in undertaking such a building, and they crave the prayers and sympathy of all for their success.

—"Years ago, when Hollywood, now a beautiful suburb of Los Angeles, was a quiet country neighborhood, our zealous brother, B. F. Coulter," writes John C. Hay, minister of our church at Hollywood, "preached a series of sermons in a schoolhouse and organized a band of Disciples. M. L. Yeager served as pastor free of charge for a long time, and T. D. Garvin held special meetings." Brother Hay was called two years ago, and the house was removed to another site and a parsonage built. The membership, we are glad to know, is steadily growing, the church out of debt and all the work prospering.

—The San Jose "Daily Mercury" prints a picture and a lengthy sketch of J. V. Coombs, who has just begun work with our church in that beautiful little California city, from which we learn that Brother Coombs has crossed our continent four times, having lectured in every state and territory in the union and spoken to about twenty-five hundred different audiences. He is best known, however, as an evangelist rather than as a lecturer. He has a large congregation and a good spirit among the people where he has begun work, and, speaking of his new charge, he says: "I expect to see the house crowded and the cause grow strong in this city."

—P. H. Jameson sends us a little pamphlet which was evidently intended to be circulated at the Bethany Assembly. It has reference to the work of Butler College. We regret that we have not space at this time to publish the pamphlet, which gives a brief account of the fine work accomplished by Butler College, and explains the necessity for its friends and the brethren of Indiana to make an earnest effort to put it on a sound financial basis. This college has turned out some of our foremost men, and has at present a faculty second to none, in point of ability, of any of our colleges. Owing to certain policies of the past, the funds of the college are considerably diminished. Better endowment is absolutely necessary. Joseph I. Irwin has offered $100,000 if $150,000 more can be raised. Such an endowment will place the college upon a firm basis for the present and near future. If this endowment can not be raised, the college, with the present resources, according to Brother Jameson, can not survive more than two years, which would be a disgrace to our brotherhood. The institution has been made to depend upon our church for its chief support. The amount needed seems to us very small, in view of the strength of our cause in Indiana and the wealth in our brotherhood there. The institution is an institution for the whole of the state, and it is not fair to look to Marion County alone for its support. Brother Jameson has been a member of the Christian Church for more than sixty years, and, besides former interests, has now pledged $2,500 toward this needed endowment of Butler. That shows how much he believes in this movement.

Indiana S. S. Convention.

The Indiana Christian Sunday-school Association will hold their Annual State Sunday-school Institute at Greenfield, October 17, 18, 19. A splendid program has been prepared, and the church at Greenfield extends a hearty welcome to all who will attend. The sessions will be devoted to Sunday-school work and methods. Begin at once to make your arrangements to be present. E. B. Scofield, Pres.

New Missionaries for China.

At the regular meeting of the executive committee of the Foreign Society, September 8, Dr. Paul Wakefield and, wife of Springfield, Ill., were appointed missionaries to China, to go out in September, 1906. Dr. Wakefield is a son of Prof. E. B. Wakefield, of Hiram College. Mrs. Wakefield is a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lindsey, of Springfield, Ill., well known to a wide circle of church workers in that and other states. It has been the purpose for many years of these young people to devote their lives to the work in the regions beyond.

Indiana's Educational Society.

At a recent meeting at Bethany Park, representatives of Butler College, in conjunction with the State Ministerial Association, organized an Indiana Christian Educational Society, for the purpose of unifying the educational sentiment in the state in favor of Butler College. William J. Russell, pastor of the First Christian church at Frankfort, Ind., was made president, and T. W. Grafton, pastor of the Christian church at Anderson, was made vice-president. A secretary will be announced later, and work for the institution will be commenced at once.

St. Francois County Co-operation.

In response to a call from the Christian church at Farmington, Mo., five congregations sent delegates to meet with them to organize a Christian Church Co-operation for St. Francois County. The object of this organization is to carry on more aggressive and thorough work and assist all congregations of the Christian church to regular preaching and pastoral care. The following officers were elected: George B. Gale, president, Judge G. O. Nations, vice-president, J. E. Cover, treasurer, and Edward Owers, secretary. The three meetings held during the day were very inspiring and helpful. Under this organization the work in the county has taken on new life and vigor.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Ohio.

What satisfaction in knowing that what you write is read! It may be positively affirmed that the Ohio letter is read. The proof is at hand, in black and white. Some weeks ago as an item of news several churches were named in Ohio as being without pastors. Before that letter had been seen in print by the writer of it, letters began to pour in asking about those churches. For a week they continued to come. From north, south, east and west, yea beyond the borders of the United States, they came. This shows three things: First, The Christian-Evangelist is widely read by our best preachers. Second, these good preachers read the Ohio letter. Third, a host of good preachers would like an Ohio pulpit.

Ohio can furnish the latest sensation to that part of our press that delights to hit Catholicism. One of our best known preachers was married Wednesday, September 13, by a priest. Isn't that enough for a long editorial or a hair pulling sermon? The preacher in question was our State Sunday-school man, C. A. Kleeberger. He was married in Columbus, O., on the above named date to Mrs. Stevenson. But the now Mrs. Kleeberger happens to be a sister of Walter Scott Priest, pastor of the Central church in Columbus. It was W. S. Priest who performed the ceremony. The Ohio letter man is spiritual adviser of C. A. Kleeberger, he being a member of the Painesville church. Most hearty congratulations are here extended. The bride and groom will spend a week of the honeymoon in Painesville, and then take up their abode in Columbus.

M. J. Grable has accepted a call to Steubenville. He has been at Dunham Avenue, Cleveland, about ten years. It will be hard to sever the ties at Dunham Avenue. Cleveland loses the best preacher among the Disciples who were first called Christians at Antioch. In fact it may be doubted if there is any better year-in-and-year-out preacher in the whole city of Cleveland. Steubenville is to be most heartily congratulated.

Walter Mansell will go to Fourth Avenue in Columbus. He has been for some six or eight years at Salem. He surely steps into the opportunity of a life. May his ministry be long and signally blessed at Fourth Avenue.

A. C. Gray went from Mt. Healthy to Ann Arbor, Mich. We are sorry he left Ohio, but Michigan has gained a strong man who will do them all good. H. C. Runyan, of Latonia, Ky., has succeeded Brother Gray at Mt. Healthy.

Ira H. Durfee is holding his second meeting at Mill Creek in Union county. A year ago he had a fine meeting in this old historic church with over 40 additions. A. Skidmore has paved the way for another good meeting. T. E. Winter has left Greenwich for the Pacific coast. He was very highly esteemed by the whole community, and they pleaded to have him remain. But he has gone that he may take some work in the school at Berkeley. A very impressive installation service was held at Painesville on Wednesday night, Sept. 6, when C. A. Freer was formally installed as minister of the church. J. E. Lynn, of Warren, preached a very appropriate and helpful sermon. Robert Moffett gave the charge to the preacher as only he could do such a thing. S. H. Bartlett gave the charge to the church, which was of a very practical nature. J. C. B. Stivers, A. J. Sever and George A. Lord also had parts in the program. Would not such services help to impress the dignity of a union of preacher and people if more universally observed?

Those of us who stayed at home rejoice in the good things read of the San Francisco convention. We are all, from this region, going to Buffalo next year. "Put me off at Buffalo" will again be the cry.

A good osteopathic practitioner who is a Disciple of Christ can be put in touch with a fine opening by addressing the undersigned.

The Ohio campaign is getting pretty hot just now. The flocking to Mr. Pattison becomes more and more universal and bold, while the machine becomes more desperate to find something with which to stem the tide and defend Mr. Herrick. The Republicans of any moral standing who are going to support Herrick are so ashamed of it that they say nothing while every day adds some prominent and lifelong Republican who comes out boldly for Mr. Pattison. The speaking campaign will begin next week and then there will be more fun and more excitement. Keep your eye on Ohio.

A note was made in the last letter of the coming of R. W. Abberley to Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, but for some reason it did not get into print. Here is a hearty welcome, friend Richard, and may you live and die in Ohio. C. A. Freer.

Painesville, O.

Oregon.

Our slogan—"Turner, 1906, with 1,500 souls for Christ and every obligation fully met."

Do you ask how? Here is the answer in a few words: 1. One conversion for every six Disciples and an average of 50 cents from every Disciple in the state. 2. Make this work a personal matter and join in heartily for the sake of Christ, his church and lost souls. 3. See to it that your congregation stands first in the average gifts of its membership for state work on November 5.

The outlook for the work is good and the way is now clear, as the churches have already sent in their offering for Church Extension. Then with the benediction of our great international convention resting upon us, let us for the next three months, give ourselves heart and hand and pocketbook to "Oregon for Christ."

I have just completed a visit with the churches along the Southern Pacific in southern Oregon, and am much pleased with the condition of the work there. Brother Bower is just beginning his work with the church in Grant's Pass. The members are very hopeful and happy in having such helpers as Brother and Sister Bower. The Medford church is "looking for a man." This is a promising field for one who is willing to work for Christ and lost souls. Central Point will likely co-operate with Medford. The churches in Roseburg and Ashland are doing noble work under the leadership of Brothers Ritchey and Mellinger. Drain and Myrtle Creek are being supplied from the Eugene Divinity School by Brothers Horn and Ware. These places are doing good work. They will all send an offering for our state work.

The five counties of southwestern Oregon are to hold a joint convention October 3 and 4. This is a wise move for our work in that section.

Now, to those churches wanting meetings and not able to pay from $50 to $100 per week for evangelistic service, I take pleasure in announcing that any one of the following named "pastor evangelists" may be had for one meeting, viz.: J. S. McCallum, J. F. Ghormley, Geo. C. Ritchey, C. F. Swander, Albyn Esson, J. W. Jenkins, E. S. Muckley, J. J. Evans, Clark Bower and perhaps others. These men are willing to leave their work in order to help our weaker churches and the O. C. M. C. Write to them for terms and let me know that you are planning to use one of them for a meeting. By this plan you are both helping yourselves and the fields more needy than your own, since a part and in most cases all of the proceeds of these meetings will be put into the Oregon missionary work. Here is an opportunity. Can not several of our small or even larger churches make use of it?

The next three weeks will be spent with the churches in northwestern Oregon and the next three with those of the northeastern part. So far as possible, it is the plan of the acting board of the O. C. M. C. to have the corresponding secretary to visit every congregation in Oregon between now and our Turner convention. This I shall be glad to do, the Lord willing.

F. E. Billington,
Cor. Sec. O. C. M. C.

Church Extension Receipts.

The following is a comparative statement of Church Extension receipts for the first 13 days of September, 1904, and 1905:

	1904	1905	LOSS
From churches,	$1,474.48	$1,371.06	$103.42
From individuals,	233.08	115.50	117.58
From annuities,	300.00	500.00	200.00
Totals, . . .	$2,007.56	$1,987.56
Loss, ...			$21.00

* Means gain.

Contributing churches, 1904, . .	150
" " 1905, . .	160
Gain, ...	10

The Church Extension receipts for the first 13 days of September as compared with last year show a falling behind of $21. There was a gain of 10 in the number of contributing churches but a loss of $103.42 from churches and $117.58 from individuals. There was a gain of $200 on annuities. Reports from many parts of the country show that there were heavy rains on the first two Sundays.

The Board of Church Extension hopes that the churches will not allow the bad weather early in the month to impair what must be the best September offering in our history if we are to reach the half million.

No loans have been granted at our last two meetings, because of lack of funds and none will be granted for some time to come unless the offerings are very liberal.

All remittances should be sent to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Building, Kansas City, Mo.

People's Forum.

Editor Christian-Evangelist:—I have never presumed to write a line for publication in any of our religious journals, though I have labored in the cause since 1901. But I can't resist an impulse to say at least one amen. Brother Garrison, in "The Easy Chair," says: "As one looks down, as we did, from the heights of Fort Douglas on the city of the plain"—Salt Lake City—"with its temple, its tabernacle, its endowment house, and beyond the dead sea of Salt Lake, glistening in the evening sunlight, he can but wonder what is to be the future of a system so foreign to our American ideas, and what the future of a state and city which seem to be so completely under the inflence of this politico-religious power. And yet"—these words ought to be printed in capitals—"faith in God and in the omnipotence of truth will not allow us to doubt that Mormonism, like every system built on falsehood or distorted and perverted truth, must pass away."

The faith of this, the optimism that will not allow us to doubt God or the omnipotence of his truth, is akin to that of John in Rev. 11:15: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Brother Garrison's is one great voice, the reports of small and great revivals are the sounds of another multitude of voices, the unspoken faith and prayers of thousands of others are yet more voices; yea verily "there were great voices saying, The kingdoms shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." And the inspiration of it all is, that faith that will not allow us to doubt God, or the omnipotence of his truth. Keep this faith alive. Keep alive faith in the omnipotence of truth and God, and verily visions shall give place to reality and the "King of Glory" shall come in to reign for ever and ever. "Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus." H. S. Mobley.

Wanted—A singer who has a stereopticon outfit. Desired for a meeting during the month of October. Address C. E. Dunkleberger, Flat River, Mo.

Claris Yeuell closes his engagement at Amboy, Minn., shortly and can be had for another field. Salary $800 to $1,000.

J. D. Lawrence, Lahoma, Okla., wishes to hold a meeting for a country church in Missouri with view of locating.

A church wanting the services of a middle-aged married minister, who has made a personal tour of Bible lands, may address N. B. M., P. O. Box 131, Tallula, Ill.

A brother who is a barber can buy a first class shop at Smithville, Tex. Town of 3,000. For particulars write E. J. Bradley.

Wanted—A first class choir leader and soloist to help in a meeting to begin about October 22. Address A. B. Elliott, Vinton, Ia.

Wanted—A Christian physician to take up a good practice at Cleo, Okla., at once, C. J. Chastain.

Owing to the death of one of the doctors in West Pawlet, Vermont, there is a splendid opening for a Christian doctor, preferably a Disciple. West Pawlet is a beautiful New England village, population about a thousand, and the center of a prosperous farming community. Chas. Forster would be pleased to correspond with any doctor with a view to locating here. He would also like to hear from some one with regard to taking up the ministry of our West Pawlet church; one who could locate here about November. The church is small, but in splendid condition. There is a parsonage next to the church. The salary is not large, and a man with much of a family could not manage here.

The church at Lawrence, Kan., is without a pastor. Address W. H. Smith, 442 Lake Street.

Pastors or evangelists desiring a soloist or chorus leader may address Mrs. Minnie Duck, Salem, Ohio.

Wanted—A singer for a meeting beginning Oct. 5, at Linneus, Mo. Address J. J. Limerick, Carrollton, Mo.

Convention Notes and Sayings.

"'America for Americans' must be changed to 'America for the world.'"—J. H. O. Smith.

"Chistian Science will fail. When the anesthetic has relieved the victim the awakening will be followed by nausea."—J. H. O. Smith.

"The attack upon the pocket-book must be as vigorous as the assault upon Port Arthur."—J. H. O. Smith.

"I want to quote one passage of scripture, 'The glory of a woman is her hair.' If anyone has not combed her hair this morning she need not exhibit it," when hinting to the ladies to remove their hats. —A. McLean.

"I wonder which is the greatest heterodoxy—baptism or missions. I don't know, do you?" So said F. M. Rains in one of his talks, and he told of a church that gave $8 for missions for every dollar it spent on itself, and "it wasn't baptized, either."

"We need more power in the powerhouse. We old fellows are pretty nearly worn out. Brother Corey is not an associate secretary, nor an assistant secretary—he's a secretary."—F. M. Rains.

REPORT TO THE PEOPLE

"How are you coming on," a prominent man enquires about the movement for Industrial Peace.

It's not exactly an easy job to stop strikes, insure steady work in the factories or prevent interference with electric and railway transportation, but a practical working plan has been discovered and is now being applied in town after town.

Yes it works, and works in a sturdy, dependable and result-producing way.

The actual operation is worth more than a hay wagon full of theories. Step by step the conditions were met and the problems solved. The labor unions assumed the form of trusts for the sale of labor. They seek better conditions for workmen but are generally managed by men for personal money-getting and these men hold their power by forcing up wages as high as the public will stand. That in a way is right enough, but the methods are oppressive.

They use persuasion, threats, intimidation, assaults, violence and various means to force workmen to join the trust, for large membership means power and large incomes to the manipulators. Then when these trusts became powerful enough the common people were treated to a most extraordinary display of oppression and tyranny.

Industries have been stopped, causing loss of literally hundreds of millions of dollars to owners, workpeople and the community. Property has been burned, blown up and wrecked in other ways. Tens of thousands of American citizens have been assaulted and hundreds have been murdered by these labor trusts in their bloodthirsty efforts to force all the rest of humanity to implicitly obey their "orders."

These outrages have been from 10 to 100 times the volume of the overt acts toward the Negro, that brought on the Civil war. We spent money enough to almost bankrupt the nation and the precious lives of fathers, brothers, sons and husbands enough to people it in that struggle to avenge the wrongs and insure the liberty of the black man. But the white slave of the labor trust—what about him? What about the losses, abuse, tyranny, assaults and murders? What about the thousands of decent white men and women, tied hand and foot, unable to work, move or act, except by contribution to and with consent of the trust? Human liberty and constitutional rights of an American citizen are denied them. It got so bad people were afraid to openly protest against the tyrannies becuse of the "black hand" style of far-reaching acts that made life a misery or wiped out the individual altogether.

Then it dawned on some of us that the people—the 780 out of every 800—were not members of the labor trust but really had to bear the oppression of the minority and be ruled by them. There are only about 20 union members in every 800 citizens. But the compact organization of the few made it possible for the labor trust, in many cases, to force their tyranny on the unorganized majority. The next natural thought was organize the people for their own protection.

That was an inspired thought.

So to put it into practical operation a big convention in Chicago two years ago formed the Citizens Industrial Association of America. It progressed slowly for, however badly hurt, people do not quickly understand practical reforms. But one after another towns organized associations for protection and found they got it. In July, this year, the National Association headquarters was moved to New York and the work has been growing rapidly. Many more organizers are needed that the operations be rapidly extended. But any town or city can set up a good practical Association by some one man who has the interest of his town at heart, calling a few property owners together. Elect temporary officers, send to the National Association for constitution, by-laws and detailed instructions, then have a larger meeting and permanently organize. Select a good working official who can interest others and build up the Association. The cost is practically nothing if the active man will give his time, although it has been found best to pay a salaried man who will do things. Every merchant becomes interested because he prospers best when the factories are going. Every clerk, doctor, lawyer, manufacturer, teamster and independent workman likewise. Even the thrifty, law-abiding union men will help in enforcing industrial peace and maintaining the law if they can be assured freedom from union punishment, and the Citizens Association can in a practical way insure that. How do we prevent strikes?

Each local Citizens Association is thoroughly in earnest in demanding that no strikes occur, but all differences be placed before the local "Industrial Jury," made up of equal numbers of workmen and employers. The findings are made public and thus the voice of the people is expressed, carrying with it public opinion, that greatest of all powers in this country.

Does it work?

You should see the results. Do the working people want steady work and steady wages? Do the merchants, clerks, lawyers and teamsters as well as other citizens? Do the manufacturers appreciate steady peace? Do the railroad owners care to have each town on the line humming along day by day and the railroad employees living in satisfied peace? Is it worth while for people in a community to enjoy a steady flow of prosperity in place of the badly broken condition of industrial warfare now and then fixed on many communities? To produce effective work the National Association must have financial means to carry the clerical force and employ a small army of competent organizers in the field. Some prominent men, keen to detect the practical workings, have contributed liberally. Manufacturers can afford to contribute from $100.00 to $10,000.00 each. "A strike is as bad as a fire," and this is simply a very easy and certain form of strike insurance. Merchants can well afford to expend $5.00 to $25.00 a year towards the work. Philanthropic people with a motive for helping their fellows can invest their "public good" funds in no more practical way and the working man and common citizen of small means who feels a desire to do his little share towards a great national movement for industrial peace, can send $1.00, fifty cents of which makes him a member at large of the National Citizens Industrial Association and the other fifty cents pays for the "Square Deal," the monthly magazine devoted to the work. The Square Deal tells in plain words what a square deal is and applies that principle to everything it prints. Each month the current questions of the day are treated and commented on, analyzed and clarified so that the "Common Man" may get facts! facts!! facts!!!

The rank mental poison spread among workmen and the public generally by the yellow journal and the violent labor papers, seems to rot the mind of the steady reader until it has about as much capacity to think sanely as a worn out rubber shoe. Anarchy and lawbreakng is being taught by these riot breeding papers to such an extent that any thoughtful man would be startled to know the facts. The condition of unrest, is cultivated by the yellow and labor papers, constantly teaching the wage earner to hate every man who owns a house or has saved a dollar. The outbursts of rioting and violent talk against police protection, the civil courts and all officers and laws that exist for the protection of the common people, shows plainly the tendency towards Socialism and Anarchy which will grow like weeds in an uncared-for garden. Men who have regard for the sacred mantle of liberty fought for, won, and handed down to us, are patriots enough to stand together and save this fair America from the chaos hinted at by the lawbreakers. But they can not give force to their views acting as individuals. Organization must meet present organization with superior force. When the citizens are organized they do the work and insure industrial peace. It is the business of the National Citizens Association to organize local Associations in every community. Experience has taught the way and the results show how practical the methods are. Are you a patriot? Do you believe in steady industry? Do you want the common people to have the organization and power to rule, notwithstanding the "orders" and manipulations of the labor trust or any other trust? Do you believe in maintaining the law and insuring industrial peace? If so, be you merchant, workman, clerk, lawyer, teamster or railroad president, join the Citizens Industrial Association. It costs you fifty cents to be a member at large and fifty cents for the monthly publication the "Square Deal," which keeps you alive as to facts. Send $1.00 bill in envelope, it's safe, almost without fail. If you have any doubt send money order. Do your little share and if your further interests are worth insuring, send in addition a properly computed sum for the work. If you are big enough mentally to build a big business, you have mental calibre sufficient to tell you what to do.

Will the money be honestly handled? The Association put the writer at the wheel to steer the ship and I am "most always around" and do not hesitate to give my personal guarantee, that when the finance committee make the semi-annual inspection, we will, like Uncle Abe Lincoln when he kept post-office up at Salem, have properly receipted bills and the balance of the money to a cent, "in the sock." I receive no salary or other compensation and expect none. Now, then, the practical working machinery for industrial peace is placed before you. Some good men are furnishing fuel to run it moderately. By liberal support it can be made a national power for general peace.

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

[Telegram.]

Little Rock, Ark., Sept. 17.—Great interest in Fife-McKinney meeting; seventy-one in nineteen days; twenty-one to-day.—J. N. Jessup.

[Telegram.]

Unionport, O., Sept. 18.—Our meeting with Clarence Mitchell and Hume Sisters continues. Sixty to date—fifty baptisms. Many men and heads of families. This church has been without a preacher for nearly two years.—Peter Hubler, Elder.

ARKANSAS.

Amity, Aug. 28.—A meeting of sixteen days closed last night at Bethsaida; twenty-nine additions—twenty-four by confession and baptism and five restored.—C. A. Allhands, minister.

ARIZONA.

Bisbee, Sept. 11.—Four additions the last three Lord's days. September 3 was my initial Sunday. The Sunday-school has grown fifty per cent within two weeks and work looks hopeful.—Daniel Trundle.

CALIFORNIA.

Eureka, Sept. 8.—One addition last Lord's day by confession. He was one of Roosevelt's rough riders. The great convention has proven a great help to us.—I. H. Teel.

Pasadena, Sept. 4.—Yesterday we had five added; two confessions.—Sumner T. Martin.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, Sept. 11.—Present at preachers' meeting to-day: F. D. Power, E. B. Bagby, J. Murray Taylor, J. E. Stuart, W. T. Laprade, Walter F. Smith, R. R. Heicke, and the writer. Additions reported: Ninth Street (E. B. Bagby), six by letter; Fifteenth Street (J. E. Stuart), two by baptism and one by letter; Whitney Avenue (Walter F. Smith), three by statement and one from denomination. Total, 13—11 by letter or statement and two by baptism. E. B. Bagby reports also about 25 additions, almost all by confession, in a meeting he held a few weeks ago. J. Murray Taylor and writer, who had attended the San Francisco convention, each gave a report of that gathering.—Claude C. Jones, secretary.

FLORIDA.

St. Cloud, Sept. 12.—Six confessions at regular service last night.—J. T. Reaves, pastor.

ILLINOIS.

Moweaqua, Sept. 4.—Evangelists H. A. Davis and C. H. Hoggatt were with us three weeks in what has proven to be one of the best meetings ever held by the church in this community. The audiences were large and at several of the services hundreds were turned away. There were 42 added, almost all by primary obedience. A number came from the religious bodies. The general effect of the meeting upon the church is of the best.—A. R. Spicer, pastor.

Joliet.—Two additions at First Christian church by letter since last report.—Ben N. Mitchell.

Concord, Sept. 12.—Recently visited the following places in our N. B. A. work: Macomb—Church in fine growing shape. Lomax—Brother Arthur, one of our most capable men, will soon outgrow this field. Dallas City—Work here prospers, of course, for McKim takes the lead. Roseville treated us royally, giving two services into our charge. People just awakening to importance of our work.—Guy L. Zerby.

West Salem, Sept. 12.—After closing our meeting at Marion, on Monday night, I preached Lord's day and had six more additions—one from the New Lights and five confessions, which increases report to forty confessions and six otherwise.—G. W. Tate.

INDIANA.

Connersville, Sept. 11.—We have just closed a two weeks' meeting at Owingsville, Ky., which resulted in 38 additions—28 by baptism, nine by statement and one reclaimed. The saloons were voted out of the town and county. Robt. M. Campbell, a grandson of Alexander Campbell, is the popular minister of this congregation.—J. J. Taylor, evangelist.

Peru, Sept. 13.—There were four baptisms at the close of the evening services.—J. L. Thompson.

Fillmore, Sept. 11.—Murray and St. John closed a two weeks' meeting; twenty-four additions, all baptisms.—Le Roy St. John, Terre Haute, Ind.

IOWA.

Braddyville, Sept. 11—Meeting fifteen days old. Fifteen accessions; eleven confessions. G. A. Butler, Mound City, Mo., singer, D. W. L. Dunlavey, pastor.—E. W. Bowers.

Eldon, Sept. 11.—Our meeting at Eldon closed September 11 with thirty-two additions—twenty-two by obedience and nine by statement, one reclaimed and the church strengthened. Lee Baron did the preaching.—S. K. Coats, pastor.

KANSAS.

Frankfort, Sept. 12.—Have closed a fine meeting. We had neither house nor organization. I preached in the park. A reunion stopped us for three days, then the rain hindered for a week, but we have an organization now of 54 members who engaged L. W. Myers as minister. We raised $1,300 in ten minutes the last night toward a house. Have bought a fine lot. We rejoice.—E. W. Brickert, evangelist.

LeRoy, Sept. 7.—The "Martin family" meeting closed September 3, with eighty additions. Thirty-six young men made the good confession.—D. MacFarlane, minister.

Hoisington, Sept. 14.—One by letter and three by baptism.—F. M. McHale.

KENTUCKY.

Kirksville, Sept. 11—We have just closed a two weeks' meeting, with forty-two additions—twenty-seven by confession and fifteen by statement and letter. Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, assisted in the meeting.—W. B. Blakemore.

Stanford, Sept. 13.—We closed a very good meeting of eighteen days' duration, in which eighteen were added by confession and baptism and three by letter. Leonard Daugherty was our song leader. The writer has now been here a little more than eight months and the work moves on encouragingly. I am in a meeting this week at Goshen church.—L. M. Omer.

Alpha, Sept. 14.—I have just closed a few days' meeting at the "Morrison Chapel" in Wayne county, with three additions by primary obedience and the church greatly revived.—T. J. Head.

MARYLAND.

Baltimore, Sept. 4.—We recently held a meeting at Piedmont church for which Jas. W. Goss ministered, his old home being in that neighborhood. The church has not had a regular pastor for a long time and the people had become cold and in-

Minden Mines, Sept. 15.—I close meeting to-night. Fifty-six additions to date. About fifty conversions. My son's meeting near Joplin with about thirty added.—SIMPSON ELY.

Laddonia, Sept. 15.—A short meeting at New Bloomfield gave us two conversions, and, while we have had many times that number in other meetings, we consider it one of our best meetings for the benefit of the church. We had no outside help.—J. D. GREER.

Ash Grove, Sept. 13.—Fourteen additions to our congregation—twelve by confession and baptism—since Wm. Mundy began here July 1, at regular services.—J. W. S.

Dearborn, Sept. 11.—I am in my third year at this place, also third year at Bethel, second year at Wallace and first year at DeKalb. During my ministry there have been 86 added to these churches. We have observed missions and sent our offerings. We are having additions at regular meetings and are planning for a protracted series. We begin a meeting at DeKalb, October 17, and at Bethel, November 6. Dearborn and Wallace have not set the time yet.—R. E. CALLITHAN.

Dr. Moore on "The Holy Spirit."

To do this book justice would require more space than I can command at this time. The whole subject involved in the title page would require a very careful treatment. In order to meet all the conditions of the case a very large volume would be necessary. But Dr. Garrison has not attempted much more than a discussion of the practical phases of his subject, such as "The Function of the Spirit in Conversion," "Relation of the Holy Spirit to Christians," "Symbols and Metaphors of the Holy Spirit," "Spiritual Gifts," "Christian Union and the Holy Spirit," etc. It is a pleasure to follow the author through these important themes. He has for the most part treated them with clear insight and a reverent spirit. He has evidently had in view the upbuilding of Christians in faith, hope and love. The book must therefore be regarded from the point of view of the author. He has not attempted to deal with some important matters connected with the Holy Spirit's office and work. Candor compels me to say that I cannot quite agree with every position taken in the book, but the reverent and sweet spirit compels me to silence, even where I might desire to speak. However, it is possible that the desire for brevity has sometimes left the treatment somewhat obscure where a fuller statement of the case might modify what seems to be the author's views.

However, the book is so helpful in stimulating the spiritual growth that I prefer not to unfavorably criticise it in any respect. It is a book of the kind of which we cannot have too many in our literature. Its emphasis on the spiritual side of redemption is precisely what is needed among our people. W. T. MOORE.

CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.—Rom. 6.

Baptism into Christ. Verse 3. Baptism is the initiatory ordinance of Christianity. It rests upon the authority of Jesus Christ, is to be administered in his name, and brings us into new and vital relations with him (Matt. 28:18-20; Acts 10:48; Gal. 3:27). How sacred then ought this ordinance to be, in the estimation of all who believe in Jesus Christ! And with what solemn purpose ought it to be received by the convert! Is it not possible that the thousands of sinful and indifferent church members who are such a heavy burden upon our congregations, and the other thousands who wickedly hold aloof from all fellowship with their brethren in the communities where they are living, never realized the meaning of their baptism at all, and should not have made a Christian profession, which they have so long dishonored?

Baptism represents our death to sin. Verses 1-4. The one who is "in Christ" can not consistently live as do those who are out of Christ. To continue the daily practice of sin, when one has professed to become a follower of the Sinless One, is grossly inconsistent. Our very baptism, being a visible burial and resurrection, gives the lie to our unworthy lives. It is to be regretted that so large a portion of the Church of Christ has changed this ordinance until it no longer signifies what the divine will intended in its institution. The baptism of unconscious babes can not truly represent the spiritual union with Christ that the ordinance was intended to set forth, and the sprinkling of a few drops of water upon the head can not be called, by any stretch of imagination, a burial and resurrection. Hence the justification of the persistent testimony of Baptists and Disciples to the immersion of believers as the only possible way of complying with the Savior's command.

Christian baptism must be followed by a Christian life. Verses 4-6. As sin before reigned in our mortal bodies, so Christ is now to be king over all our conduct. The members of our bodies are to serve the ends of holiness, for in our baptism we were, as it were, raised from the dead, and the old life has forever been abandoned. Verses 10-13. To willingly walk in the way of evil after we have been baptized is to betray the insincerity of our profession, and put to shame the name of our Lord. Verses 19-21. It will not suffice to say, "Lord, Lord!" and do not the things he says. Not that baptism so completely transforms the character as to make sin impossible, even to the most sincere believer. There yet remains for the true follower of the Master the throne of grace, which he needs to seek daily in humble repentance and confession. See 1 John 1:6-10. But his life is a daily growth in grace and truth, and while he may not reach sinless perfection in this world, he is ever approaching nearer to it. Baptism marks a real and permanent change in him.

Thus followed, Christian baptism is a pledge of eternal life. Verses 22, 23. As our baptism sets forth our own death to sin and revival to a new life of righteousness, so also it represents the death of our Saviour for us, and his burial and resurrection on our behalf. It becomes a symbol of our supreme hope that because he lives, we shall live also. And, as we are but once baptized, it suggests, likewise, that the death and resurrection of our Lord delivered us once for all from the power of sin and death, and gave us the firm assurance of the life that never ends.

THE JOYS OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP. —I Thess. 5:5-15; Luke 12:8.

For the Leader.

There is a tendency in these last times that gives a large place to individuality. The individual is exalted. He feels that he, of himself, is sufficient for the struggles of life. The old idea of learning how to be ruled as well as to rule is not at a premium. The modern idea is to rule. Now, along with this comes a disregard for outside help, and, when we get the result in a religious sense, it means a disregard for church membership. It is not thought of as a necessary thing to these individualists. It may rob the individual of some rights. It may reflect upon the dignity of self to divide the rule with other selves. Then, the need of the help of the church is not felt. It is looked upon as an extra thing. Again, some regard it as a relic of the past. They connect it with the age of superstition and illiteracy. They think of it as no longer justified in view of enlightened conditions. The doctrine of individualism is, like any other good doctrine, all right until it is carried too far. And when it begins to militate against the church it is being carried too far, and is becoming a delusion and a snare.

For the Members.

1. The church is ordained of God. Hence it must be for a purpose. We can justify all the things of nature if we have the ability. There is a philosophy of all things. We may not be able to expound it, but it is there nevertheless. We may say, without hesitation, when we consider a fact, There is a reason for this. So in things religious. There is a reason, though we may not always know it. Nor is it necessary for us to know the philosophy in order to profit by it. One of the great facts is the church organized in the providence of God. Without an investigation we may be sure it exists for the good of man, and hence its joy.

2. The church furnishes something for one to do. This is one reason it brings with it joy. We are happiest when giving vent to pent-up energy. We were made for service. The church exists as a means to service. Happiness is a thing that can not be found if sought directly, but if one goes on according to the Master's direction living for the good of others, serving his day, he finds the greatest joy. The church affords opportunity for this kind of service. Church membership brings joy because it provides for service. It is a life based upon the nature of man. Man is not an exception to the rule of ceaseless activity in nature. That which provides for a normal control of his energy makes him happy. Herein is the philosophy of church membership.

3. There is another way in which church membership brings joy: It restricts us. That is, it holds us back from that activity that would be hurtful. It is of the nature of a conscience. It is like a governor on a piece of machinery. It is like a mother's hand guiding from behind the little feet across the rude bridge of life, or along the highway being trod by untried feet and unsteady limbs. We fail to appreciate the principle of restriction in nature, and especially in society, as much as we do the principle of liberty. Yet without the one the other would be the ruin of a well ordered world. One is just as necessary as the other. The banks of the river are restriction. The onward rush of the waters is liberty. There is no conflict here. The two are parts of the same plan. So in church membership: There is a restriction that makes possible the beauties of the Christian life, the ideal life. The one who fights church membership on the ground that it restricts his life is fighting the only possibility of his rise to the level of the highest and best and happiest life.

A LOVELY COMPLEXION

New York Lady Proves That Every Woman May Have it by Using Cuticura Soap.

Mrs. R. Reichenberg, wife of the well-known jeweler of 146 Fulton St., New York: "I had a friend who was justly proud of her complexion. When asked what gave her such a brilliant and lovely complexion, she replied, 'A healthy woman can be sure of a fine skin if she will do as I do, use plenty of Cuticura Soap and water.' She insisted that I follow her example, which I did with speedy conviction. I find that Cuticura Soap keeps the skin soft, white and clear, and prevents redness and roughness."

DANIEL AND BELSHAZZAR.—Dan. 5:17-30.

Memory Verses, 29, 30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The face of the Lord is against them that do evil.—Psa. 34:16.

The period of the captivity was drawing toward its close. The great Babylonian king, Nebuchadrezzar, after a reign of forty-three years, had been succeeded by Evil-Merodach, whose reign was short and probably weak. It was he who softened the rigors of the captivity, at least so far as the royal prisoner was concerned, by releasing Jehoiakim from prison and giving him an allowance. He in turn was succeeded by a usurper, Nergalsharuzur (or Neriglissar). His was a short and turbulent reign, his infant son's was shorter still, and then Nabonidus was put upon the throne. Preferring to devote his time to religious exercises and antiquarian research, he left the reins of government in the hands of his son, Belshazzar.

The power of the new empire of Persia was rapidly rising and there was need of wise and energetic measures for defense. Instead of that, while Nabonidus wandered about his country searching for ancient gods whose cults he could revive and whose temples he could rebuild, his son gave himself over apparently to feasting and carousing. It was on such an occasion that the handwriting is said to have appeared upon the wall, and for its interpretation Daniel was summoned.

Daniel appears in the light of a man possessed of occult knowledge. The queen classes him as the best of all the soothsayers, magicians and astrologers. Daniel made no effort to play the part of a skillful magician, but delivered the Lord's message of warning with force and dignity.

The details of the story need not be dwelt upon at length. Its historicity is not perfectly clear to all minds, but its kernel is obvious. It is the warning that comes to the man or the nation which, in the pride of its strength, presumes to neglect the law of God and turn from his will. The warning had come first to Nebuchadrezzar and he had been humbled and then restored. But the lesson was not learned. Nothing less than the destruction of the empire would suffice.

The instrument was ready. The rising power of Cyrus, king of Persia, was soon to overthrow Babylon and bring the restoration of Judah from captivity.

Nowhere in the Old Testament is there a series of stories illustrating more beautifully the strength of purity and the weakness of wickedness than these stories of Daniel. These are hero tales of moral victory. We are not told that Daniel was a man of physical prowess. He did no deeds of physical strength and courage, such as all peoples love to associate with their heroes. Yet he became pre-eminently the favorite hero of the Jews of the later age, who were fired by the stories of his exploits to meet heroically the perils of their own time. Surely whatever can so stir men to heroic action in the high plane of morals and religion, has a perpetual value to all who believe in the triumph of the spiritual forces that make for righteousness.

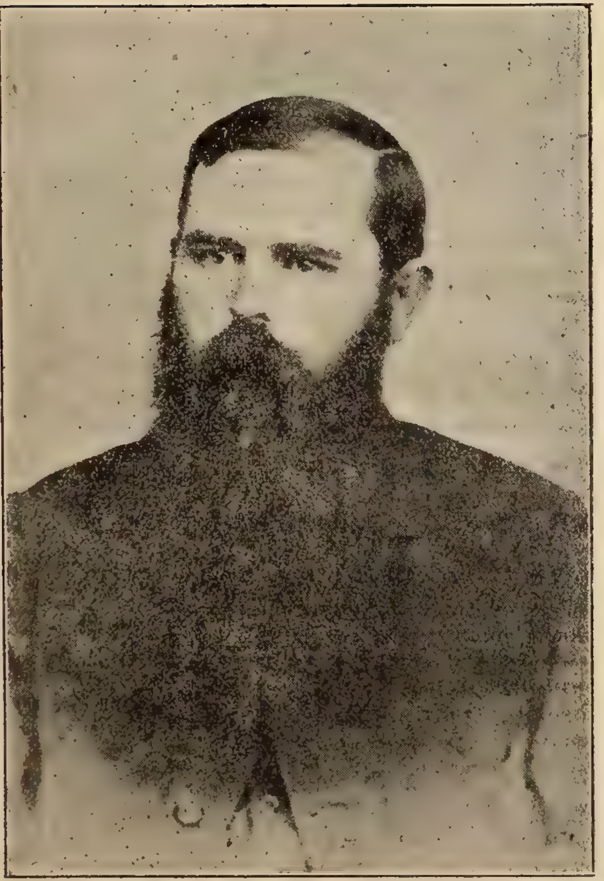
ENGLISH WALNUTS
AN EXCELLENT, SAFE INVESTMENT.



J. H. RIVES, Vice-President.

Do you want a safe investment—one that is not only safe, but will earn you a large per cent? It is an investment in land and water—26,628 acres of land near San Diego, Cal.

Of this, 16,628 acres are rich Mesa land, good for grape-growing, wheat and barley raising and cattle ranches, worth $25 an acre.

Ten thousand acres is rich valley land, suitable for English Walnut culture, and is now being sold in ten-acre ranches for above purposes at $150 an acre.

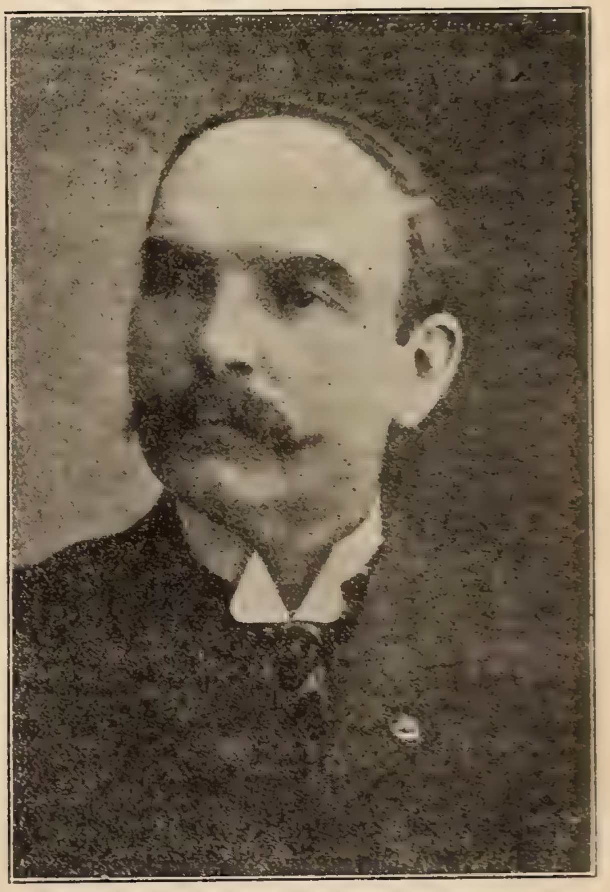
Within twenty-two miles of the best harbor on the Pacific Coast, and one of the finest resorts in the world, "Coronado Beach."

We are incorporated for only 720 shares at $100 per share, and the land is worth double that price as it now stands.

The natural growth of the surrounding country will pay a handsome profit in itself, but adding our development of the land, it will pay a far larger profit—at least $200 a year for six years.

This is not a stock deal; the 720 shares own the ranches and each share gets its proportion of the profits.

We have 150 shares not yet subscribed for at $100 per share. Write at once for descriptive matter. Do it now. You may be too late. Principal office, San Diego, Cal.



W. A. WIGHT, Secretary.

For convenience we have opened a temporary office in Salt Lake City, Utah, where all communications should be addressed.

ADAMS.

Gavin R. Adams was born December 4, 1840, and died at Taylorville, Ill., August 18, 1905, the funeral being at the Christian church, conducted by W. W. Weeden, of Marion, Ill. Brother Adams was one of our deacons and was a cultured Christian gentleman. He leaves a wife, one daughter, five brothers and two sisters. L. MOORE.

BRITTEN.

J. A. Britten, of Elvins, Mo., departed this life August 3, 1905. He was an exemplary young man, possessed with an excellent Christian character, and up to the day of his death a faithful member of the church at Elvins. About two years ago he met with a serious accident while working in the mine. Despite all his suffering he patiently and uncomplainingly endured his affliction during his eighteen months' stay in the hospital. Having a desire to see his home once more, he left for Syenite, when his condition became worse, and he died. Brother Britten was born April 28, 1877. He united with the Christian Church in the early days of his boyhood. He will be greatly missed, especially by his beloved aunt, Sister Flora O'Bannon.

J. G. M. LUTTENBERGER.

COVERT.

John King, only child of Dr. and Mrs. J. K. Covert, died at Neodesha, Kan., August 2, 1905.

MOYER.

Sol Moyer died at his home in Barry, Ill., August 15, at the age of sixty-five years, five months and twenty two days. He leaves a wife, five sons and four daughters. He became a Christian November 1894, at Eldora, Ill., and has lived a faithful Christian life. The funeral was conducted by J. D. Dabney, of Pittsburg, Pa.

RICHARDS.

On Wednesday afternoon, July 19, 1905, Samuel Richards suddenly expired at his home in Newton, Iowa, where he had resided since July, 1869. Soon after the noonday meal he walked out of doors and around the house. He returned immediately and lay down upon the couch, where his daughter found him dead a few moments later. He passed away without a struggle; his heart simply stopped beating, and he was at rest. A few years ago he made arrangements with the writer to preach his funeral sermon when the time came; but this was impossible because of my absence in Colorado. Just as dear to his heart for such a service as this was Dr. I. N. McCash, who was called for the service on Saturday afternoon of July 22. His interest was so great in all temperance work that the call of Brother McCash was even more fitting than the older arrangement.

Brother Richards was born August 20, 18'8, in Stark County, Ohio. At the time of his death he was almost eighty-seven years old. In spite of the train of sad misfortunes that followed him, he was very optimistic and happy in his temperament.

Shortly after coming to Newton he lost a part of his right hand in a planing mill which he had recently built; in 1875 his good wife bade adieu to this world; about ten years ago the two sons who were taking the business responsibilities from off his shoulders, died, leaving him with his daughter Mary to look after the business of a prosperous flouring mill. Of his six children but two are still living. His son, William E., is living in Toledo, Ohio, where he is in charge of the engineering department of the Toledo Railway & Light Company. Two years ago, while on a visit in Toledo, he superintended the construction of two houses about a half mile distant from the home of his son, and in the enthusiasm of building these places, one of which was to be a present to this son, he walked to and fro rather than ride upon the street-car, and so overtaxed his strength that one foot was attacked by an incurable trouble, which resulted in an amputation of the right limb on September 4, 1904. With a determination and heroism characteristic of the man, he had recently secured a cork foot, and was once more making his way about the house and striving to regain strength sufficient to go down town.

In a sketch written by himself he states that at the age of eighteen he left the farm without money and without education, to make his way in the world. In spite of his lack of training in the schools, he became one of the best informed men of his generation. He was a great reader of books, magazines, religious and other papers. These sources served him in place of schools and colleges. It is not strange, therefore, that he was very much interested in reading matter for young people, and that he was one of the prime movers when the public library was established in Newton. Towards this commendable enterprise he donated $2,000. The writer had a good deal of correspondence with him, and assisted in selecting three distinct groups of books which he was anxious for his townsmen to read. In the Richards Collection a visitor to-day would find the strongest volumes on Christian evidences; another group presenting the plea of the Disciples, and another composed of the best works upon alcohol and temperance. He not only placed these books in the library, but was constantly busy calling attention to this section of the library and getting the books into circulation. The enthusiasm of his later years was thus utilized.

His benevolence also showed itself in the line of church building. In his autobiographical sketch I find that he was baptized in 1856 by P. K. Dible, and that he was one of twenty-eight persons at that time organized into a congregation. For five years he was one of the elders of this little band, and did all in his power to increase its strength and usefulness. We next find him in the oil fields of Virginia, where there was no church or Sunday-school. Under his leadership a Sunday-school was organized, a house was built to shelter it, and a strong church was the outcome of these efforts. In 1869, when he came to Newton, one of the great needs sorely felt was that of a new church house. He was one of the most enthusiastic in this enterprise. He was among the most liberal givers, if not the most liberal, and handled all the funds which went into the building. Only a few years ago, while on a visit in California, he found a struggling band striving to build a house. His money and his enthusiasm in this case also proved the turning point upon which success hinged. His spirit was as commendable as that of the synagogue builder mentioned in the Gospel of Luke.

Mention this paper.

He was very much interested in colleges of the Bible and in the young men who were preparing themselves in these schools for the ministry. During my long connection with Oskaloosa College in various capacities I visited him frequently in the interests of the school, and very rarely came away without help. Later, in my connection with Drake University, he received me cordially and liberally. Of course such a man would be interested in helping the poor and needy. One of his town papers speaks as follows: "In all his relations of life he was a man who endeared himself to those who knew him best. His charities were many, but known to few. The number of sacks of flour received by the poor of the city at his hands, often secretly left, was many. As a father he was kind and considerate; as a neighbor, ever ready to lend a helping hand in time of need; as a friend, tried, true and reliable; as a citizen, active and progressive." Another of the papers speaks as follows: "His great, tender heart was always ready to respond to any worthy cause needing his financial assistance, or to the unfortunate in generously supplying their wants." This is but a poor and fragmentary record of a full half century of Christian life and service.

I knew him long and well, and I thank God for the confidence and love which he bestowed upon me. The ties which bound us together were like those which bind father and son. Out of the depths of my heart I shall always think of him in these lines:

"Life's race well run,
Life's work well done,
Life's crown well won."

For his son and daughter and for his friends and neighbors who knew and loved him, I would utter the God-given benediction:

"The Lord bless thee, and keep thee—
The Lord make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee;
The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace."

"The Voices of God."

BY WILLIAM THOMAS LAPRADE.

In the wide expanse of sea,
Father, thou dost speak to me,
And I hear thy voice again
In the patter of the rain.
Birds and insects when they sing
Say thou art in everything.

I can learn thy boundless love
'Neath the shadow of a grove;
I can feel thy matchless power
In the awful midnight hour,
See the glory of thine eyes
When I watch the sun arise.

By a tender blossom rare
I am taught thy loving care.
All the universe will say,
If I turn whatever way:
"Let whatever will befall,
Father, thou art all in all."

A Man's Son—A Story of Fatherhood.

"Love . . . . hopeth all things."—Paul.

BY MARJORIE SUTHERLAND.

The surgeon stood by the window and looked out into the clear sky. His hands were thrust into his trousers pockets and his gray hair stood up obstinately over his massive head. He looked at the stars and then off at the lights in the distance, and shrugged his shoulders frequently.

People always noticed the surgeon's shoulders; they were peculiar, quite unlike other shoulders, but those who knew him never attempted to explain why—one might as well have tried to explain why the man himself was different. He seemed to be restless, and his eyes wandered from the sky to the distant glare of the town and then to the little bronze clock on the mantel.

The man's eyes were wonderfully dark, and keen in their scrutiny of things. His chin was almost brutal in its strength, not quite—yet almost; there was something about the eyes that saved it, and one was always disappointed until the compensation was discovered; and then, one knew why he was superior to other men. It was a grave face, and one that people feared, trusted and hated and, in the end, worshiped.

An electric lamp with a green shade stood on a little round table near the door. A pencil and a card were there also, and beside them a tiny glass of white violets. At the foot of the bed—it was a single brass bed—stood a larger table with a white covering, and upon it in careful order were laid the delicate, shining pieces of steel that had lately left the hands of the master.

In a chair not far from the surgeon sat another man. His shoulders were stooped and his hair looked very white and there were many lines in his face. It seemed to grow older as he waited there. He leaned his head upon his hands and gazed first at the surgeon and then at the bed, and then at the clock; but always his eyes returned to the gigantic figure standing indifferently there by the window.

Once a woman clad in white came into the room, and deftly placed the polished instruments in a black case, and wrote something down on the card. The little clock had a surprisingly loud tick, and finally the surgeon turned as if irritated and motioned to the woman and she took it away. Then he walked across the room several times. The other man looked up, startled at the noise, but the surgeon paid no attention to him, and even raised a window with not a little disturbance. He came nearer the bed, and looked intently at the figure there. He leaned over, and drew back the eyelids with his fingers. The man in the chair groaned, and squirmed in an agony of fear and begged him "to be more careful." The surgeon smiled pityingly and told him that he was just like a woman, but the next time he rolled them back very gently and moved the head a trifle to one side. There were white bandages about the head, and in one place a lock of silky black hair had escaped and lay there over the forehead. The face was flushed, and the side that was turned toward the man was almost beautiful in its outline, at least that was what he thought, for it was his son.

The surgeon stood for some time near the bed, then he drew a chair near the father's and sat down. Once the nurse came in, and smoothed out the counterpane, and looked at the card, but the surgeon told her that they did not want her and she vanished noiselessly.

"Doctor," the father began in a low voice, "you will tell me just how things are?" The other did not answer immediately.

"I cannot tell—exactly. Not for a while yet. It all looks very favorable now, but sometimes things turn up unexpectedly."

"You have had just such cases before?" asked the father innocently. The surgeon sighed. "Yes, I have had them. Street accidents, mostly. People lose their heads so often, no wonder they get them broken."

"If there should be any change either way, you will tell me, Doctor?"

"Yes." The surgeon looked at the man closely, trying to fathom the wonderful thing that was ever a puzzle to him.

"Why do you look at me so hard?" questioned the man.

"Oh! I don't know. I was just wondering why you stayed here. There is no use in it, you know, and you look as if you needed a little sleep. Let me see, when were you asleep last?"

"I don't remember," replied the father, his lips twitching, "yesterday, perhaps. I can not remember anything that has happened since he was hurt. I left my busines to the four winds of heaven. I do not care anything about it," he added recklessly.

"But you ought to take some rest," continued the surgeon absently.

"I cannot," was the reply.

"Why?"

"Oh! I do not know why, only I cannot rest until I know about him."

"Tell me if there are not pains like knife thrusts going up and down your back and neck?" demanded the surgeon.

"Yes—that is—there were—I can not feel them now."

"He would never know whether you remained or not and we could take care of him."

"Oh, yes," returned the father exasperated, "but think; suppose it were your boy. Could you rest?"

"I can not tell," the other replied, "I think that I could. I would be idiotic if I did not."

"You would have waited if it had been

HAY-FEVER
—AND—
ASTHMA can be CURED.
Mr. W. H. Kelley, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay-Fever and Asthma by Himalya, after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. [illegible], 128 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 15th, Doctors did me no good, but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist, of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya, as it cured me of Hay-Fever and Asthma, and have never had any return of the disease.
Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-Fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-Fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. your son. The waiting and the fatigue are nothing compared with the knowing how things will turn out. I am sorry, Doctor, you have missed a good deal."

"Perhaps my hair would have been as white and my face as seamed as yours if my child had lived," said the surgeon abruptly.

"Do not say that, Doctor. He is just a boy, and he never knew a mother, and I have tried to be both, and I am afraid that I have made many blunders."

The bent shoulders shook with sobs, but the surgeon said something very emphatically under his breath, and walked toward the bed, and placed his face close to the one on the pillow; he listened a moment, then went to the table and turned the light so that it shone on the face, and returned to his seat. The father's head was bowed. He had not seen.

After a moment the surgeon began, "That was a beastly bad mix-up that the boy got into. How did it happen, anyway?"

The father looked up at him. "No one seems to know, exactly. He had been up to the country club all day, and they had started home in the evening. The night was beautiful, and the horses were fresh, and—perhaps—perhaps—he was not quite himself—he was just twenty last week, and those with him were much older."

"But you were a man at twenty," interrupted the Doctor. "Yes," was the reply, "but he seems very different, so young, you know. From what I can learn, one of the men wagered him that he would beat him into town, and that was the way it went. He had the best horse in the crowd, and he always loved a race."

"I have heard that he was a good patron," the surgeon remarked bluntly. "Did the horse die?"

"Yes, that is—I had them shoot it, it was hurt so badly."

"It must have been a valuable beast."

"Yes—rather—I refused a small fortune for it last week. It was his horse, and he did not want it sold."

"It is a pity to lose such a beautiful animal," continued the surgeon. "You will look some time before you will find its equal." The father looked bewildered.

"I had not thought of that," he said at last, "I am afraid that he will be disappointed when he knows about the horse. My, but they did look beautiful together! He rode perfectly."

"Yes," answered the surgeon, "two of my assistants have work tomorrow at the hospital on people that he ran into. One of them is a child, the other is an old man." The father winced, but offered no reply.

"I dropped in to see them before I came up here. The older one will be lame the rest of his days; it remains to be seen what they can do for the child."

The father took a note-book from his pocket and opened it. "If you will just give me the name of the hospital and the doctors," he said.

The surgeon smiled bitterly as he gave them. "I imagine that it was rather an expensive race," he commented.

The father flushed, his shoulders straightened. "He was nothing but a boy," he replied doggedly. "If any were at fault, they were the men with him. I have been anxious about him; he was rather fond of pleasure, but he was nothing but a boy."

The form on the bed stirred and a low groan escaped the lips. The father started up, alarmed, but the other man did not so much as turn his head. At last he rose and walked toward the window.

"Why, I have been here two good hours," he murmured as if to himself. "I'll be going out as a night nurse yet. I don't suppose that any of the youngsters could come up to this."

"I know, Doctor, that you do not usually work and watch as you have done tonight, but at such a time a man wants the hand of a master. I knew, I was quite sure, that you would come, although a good many said that you would not. I knew that you would not refuse when the life of a man's son hung in the balance."

"I am due in a few hours to perform a mighty ticklish bit of work at Montreal before a lot of men, scientific men mostly."

"Is tomorrow the day?" asked the father, awed.

"That's what they say," returned the surgeon, glancing at a newspaper on the floor. "I notice that they have it all pictured out there. They certainly have a marvelous imagination."

"And tomorrow is the day at Montreal?" asked the father still bewildered.

"Yes."

"And I thought," the old man added apologetically, "I thought that you did not understand about the boy." The doctor looked puzzled. "I thought that you had forgotten what a son could mean to a man," he explained.

There was a moan from the bed. The surgeon came nearer and searched the drawn, white face of the father. "Tell me," he demanded abruptly, "tell me if you are not sorry that he did not die twenty years ago, when mine did? Tell me if you are not sorry for the pain and travail and the death that he has caused?"

The other man stared. "Sorry?" he asked hoarsely; "why, I would bear it all a hundred times if I knew that he would rise as sane and well and beautiful as he was twenty-four hours ago."

"A hundred times?" repeated the surgeon absently.

"A thousand times, if necessary!" the other replied, biting his lips.

"Good Lord, but a man can be a fool!" muttered the surgeon, turning away. Then he bent over the bed and listened as before. The father sat quite still. His head dropped upon his arm, and in a moment he was sleeping heavily. The surgeon walked away from the bed, but he did not take his eyes for one instant from the bandaged head. The eyelids of the son trembled, then opened wide, to behold first the bent form in the chair; and only a surgeon's eyes could have seen that the lashes were quite wet. He had heard; and as the surgeon neared the doorway, there was upon his face the indescribable smile of a craftsman who is satisfied with his work.—The Congregationalist and Christian World.

For the Little Ones

To Keep Their Digestion Perfect Nothing is so Safe and Pleasant as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets

Thousands of men and women have found Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets the safest and most reliable preparation for any form of indigestion or stomach trouble.

Thousands of people who are not sick, but are well and wish to keep well, take Stuart's Tablets after every meal to insure perfect digestion and avoid trouble.

But it is not generally known that the Tablets are just as good and wholesome for little folks as for their elders.

Little children who are pale, thin and have no appetite, or do not grow or thrive, should use the Tablets after eating and will derive great benefit from them.

Mrs. G. A. Crotsley, 538 Washington St., Hoboken, New Jersey, writes: "Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets just fill the bill for children as well as for older folks. I've had the best of luck with them. My three-year-old girl takes them as readily as candy. I have only to say 'Tablets' and she drops everything else and runs for them."

A Buffalo mother, a short time ago, who despaired of the life of her babe, was so delighted with the results from giving the child these Tablets that she went before the notary public of Erie Co., N. Y., and made the following affidavit:

Gentlemen: Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets were recommended to me for my two-months-old baby, which was sick and puny and the doctor said was suffering from indigestion. I took the child to the hospital, but there found no relief. A friend mentioned the Stuart Tablets and I procured a box from my druggist and used only the large sweet lozenges in the box and was delighted to find they were just the thing for my baby. I feel justified in saying that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets saved my child's life.

Mrs. W. T. Dethlope.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of April, 1897.

Henry Karis,
Notary Public in and for Erie Co., N.Y.

For babies, no matter how young or delicate, the tablets will accomplish wonders in increasing flesh, appetite and growth. Use only the large sweet tablets in every box. Full-sized boxes are sold by all druggists for 50 cents, and no parent should neglect the use of this safe remedy for all stomach and bowel troubles if the child is ailing in any way regarding its food or assimilation.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been known for years as the best preparation for all stomach troubles whether in adults or infants.

Three Men Who Said, "I Will!"

BY JOHN T. FARIS.

There is a tonic for young men and women who are hungering for an education, but are discouraged by difficulties, in the little volume recently published, entitled, "Tuskegee and Its People," edited by Booker T. Washington.

A man who is now principal of a large school in Mississippi tells of such poverty in his boyhood home that one roasted potato was frequently his only noon-day lunch at school—when he was able to get to school. At other times he had to content himself with a few persimmons or nuts gathered in the forest. Many a day he was entirely without food.

He could bear the hunger for food, but the hunger for an education was not to be borne. Having heard of Tuskegee and the opportunities offered there, he worked for six months and thus secured eight dollars and an outfit of clothing—including his first underclothes, starched shirts and collars. Vowing that he would educate himself or die in the attempt he found his way to the college town. For one year he worked every day and studied in the night school. His work was driving a mule team. As he drove he studied his books.

At the end of the first year he had saved one hundred dollars—enough to permit his entrance to the day school. But just then he fell ill—and his savings were exhausted before he was well again. Nothing daunted, he set to work once more, and continued his studies at night. Again he was ready to enter the day school, when his father died and it became necessary for him to return home in order to care for his mother and other members of the family. His only inheritance was a large debt. In three years this was paid, and the way was open to return to school. For a year all went well. Then a younger brother came, who needed help. A little later a sister entered. Practically her entire support devolved upon him. Discouraged, he thought of giving up under his heavy burden. But he gritted his teeth and made ends meet by startling economies. Once he was compelled to glue patches on trousers which were so worn that thread would not hold. He persisted, however, and won his diploma.

A seventeen-year-old boy, while waiting to weigh his load of cotton on the public scales, heard Tuskegee mentioned. That moment he determined to enter school. At night, when he told of his purpose at home, he was informed that, owing to crop failures, his father was $500 in debt. Thereupon he proposed to take charge of the farm for one year and pay off the debt if he could go to school as a reward. The proposition was accepted and the debt was paid. Then, by making baskets, he laid by $16 for expenses. Thirteen months from the date of the overheard conversation at the cotton scales he was enrolled a student.

In November, 1900, three men sailed from New York for Africa under the direction of the German government. They are now at work developing a cotton plant which will thrive under African conditions of soil and climate. One of the three men, as a boy, had longed for an education. When he was eighteen he had made little progress. Then he resolved to push his way to college in spite of all hindrances. The first year's work, instead of providing funds, left him in debt. A second year he chopped wood and saved $50. Half of this he sent home. With the rest he bought clothing and books, and entered Tuskegee. His life there was a continual struggle with poverty. In his senior year he was a contestant for an oratory prize of $25. As he stood on the platform, delivering his oration, he was conscious that the socks he wore were without feet and that his shoes had just been mended with thread blackened with soot. He won the prize and bought new socks and shoes.

One of these men, through all the years of his course, urged himself on by the thought: "If somebody else can, I can!" There is inspiration in those words and in the simple record of the deeds inspired by them.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week with the Woodneys.

THE FIFTH NIGHT.

When Worth Acre put away in his desk the picture of "Clarabella St. Clair," he blew out the lamp, for it was still light outdoors. Arthur Lowell watched the large, honest face, the massive form, the free and easy movements of the strong limbs. He felt that in narrating the story of "Clarabella St. Clair," the blacksmith had been revealing some of those hidden recesses of the heart to which the broad glare of publicity is never admitted. Arthur, too, had his trouble, and the other's confidence and friendship urged him to speak out. "Mr. Acre," he said abruptly, "I'm in trouble."

"Surely," said Worth, nodding; "who isn't?" This seemed unanswerable, and Arthur was checked. He did not want to tell his secret, but finding that he was sinking back into his hiding place, he exclaimed desperately, "I've done wrong, Mr. Acre, and I want your advice!"

Worth perceived that the little musician was greatly agitated, and that he spoke with an effort; that his face was crimsoned with shame, and that his eyes sought the floor. He endeavored to reassure his guest. "All right, my boy, let's fix it up. What is it?"

"This morning when I left here to go to Mr. Woodney's for breakfast," began Arthur in a stammering voice, "nobody was up."

"That was certainly wrong," responded the other cheerily, "but no fault of yours. Did you get them up?"

"Mr. Acre, I saw an old rooster scratching up the grass we had set out yesterday—so much trouble, you know—and time—and everybody so kind, helping us and advising us how to do it."

"But why did they advise you to scratch it up?" demanded Worth, astonished. "I should think it would be the last thing you'd want to do."

"Oh, no, sir, it was the rooster that scratched it up."

"What rooster?" inquired Worth.

"When I went there this morning, I found a rooster right in the middle of the grass, scratching as hard as he could. I don't know what rooster, but it was a big white one. I grabbed up a clod and threw at him."

"To be sure," said the blacksmith, nodding approval. "A rooster naturally suggests a clod."

"I hit him, Mr. Acre, although I never do hit what I throw at, and the clod seemed soft and crumbly, too. Anyway, it knocked him over, and I ran up, and he was dead."

"You'd better not have thrown at him, after all," remarked Worth thoughtfully.

"I wish I hadn't!" cried Arthur, clasping his hands.

"A blow is like an unkind word," the other moralized; "you never can know how bad it'll hurt. Still, almost anybody would have thrown at the rooster."

"Would you have thrown at it, Mr. Acre?"

"I think I should merely have shooed at him," replied the blacksmith, "but I'm not sure what I'd have done in the moment of temptation." He chuckled.

"Then when I saw he was dead," continued Arthur, "I thought he'd better be buried—it wouldn't do to leave him lying in the yard. So I went to Miss Polly Day's to borrow their spade. I knocked, but they couldn't hear me, they were so busy. Anyway, I saw their spade in the yard, and I got it and buried the rooster under the sidewalk, where it wouldn't be in the way. Then I took back the spade, but still they didn't see me, and the Woodneys didn't look out the window."

"Well, my lad, I don't see anything wrong in all this. You should have put a wisp of that grass over the poor fellow's grave to indicate how he came by his glorious death. After all we mustn't blame him. You know, as a rule, soldiers don't gain glory by fighting on their own premises, but in scratching up the grass in other people's yards, so to speak."

"When I went, at last, to the house," continued Arthur, who was very solemn in spite of the other's good humor, "I didn't tell them anything about it."

"Oh!" said Worth Acre, his smile vanishing.

"So nobody knows but you and me," added Arthur.

"Didn't they notice the grass?" asked Worth.

"Yes, and I told them I saw a rooster scratching in it, and I was just going to say that I had killed it. But somehow, I didn't. I don't know why. And old Mrs. Woodney said she wished I'd knocked it over. But I didn't say anything, and after letting that chance slip, there wasn't any way to tell about it."

"You should have made a way," returned Worth.

"I know it; and I've been miserable ever since—every single minute! I was never so unhappy before. I feel like I can't stand it any longer and—and I want to go right this minute and do something to make it all right. I'd work as hard as ever I could to pay for that rooster, if I only knew who owned it."

"You'll find out soon enough who owns it, I dare say," remarked Worth dryly. "Well, in the morning we'll talk about it."

"I don't want to wait till morning," pleaded Arthur. "I couldn't sleep a minute. Oh, Mr. Acre, I just can't stand it any longer!"

"And what do you want to do, Arthur?"

"I'll go to Mr. Woodney's and tell them, and then maybe they can find out whose rooster it is. It isn't dark yet and—and—I guess they haven't come back from supper, but I'll wait at the house."

"I thought you wanted my advice," observed Worth, smiling.

"Yes, sir. Wouldn't you advise me to do that?"

"Now, see here, my lad, the wrong in the whole thing was hiding what you had done. That made your deed a crime. If people weren't always hiding up their actions, the world wouldn't be so full of pit-falls. Now the rooster's dead, and deserves to be, and its owner can't object, seeing how it came by its fate. When you confess that you killed him you'll simply be making public an act which in itself was not criminal. And as you are now anxious to tell everybody about it, it'll be no punishment to you to make a clean breast of it. Yet you have done wrong, and you ought to be punished, and if you will consent, I'll devise your punishment."

"Yes," said Arthur abjectly, "I know I deserve punishment, and that the Woodneys won't even give me an unkind glance; so you'd better punish me yourself."

"Good!" cried Worth, rising promptly. He went to his desk, opened a little lower compartment and took out his big brass cornet. "Come, my lad," he said, going out into the court. He threw open the gates which had been closed ever since Arthur and His Majesty had put the house in a state of siege. The blacksmith walked briskly along the sidewalk and the youth followed, much depressed. They passed the cottage of the Misses Day, and as they came to the corner of the Woodney yard, the blacksmith suddenly stopped and began to laugh. Arthur, startled by a sound so foreign to his own feelings, raised his head and discovered two forms halfway past the Enderthorpe premises. They were Mace Woodney and a tall, handsome young man of nineteen or twenty. Mace was so fine in her pretty batiste and white hat, and looked so unaccountably grown up, that Arthur scarcely knew her; the young man was a stranger to him. But he knew the white cock which swung from the end of a long stick hanging over the young man's shoulder. Mace was walking well in advance, laughingly remonstrating, while the young man was humming a dirge through his nose.

"Here!" called Worth Acre. "You bring back that rooster this minute! We need him!"

"Who killed cock robin?" demanded Ed Woodney with pretended fierceness, as he carried back the corpse.

"I did," said Arthur.

"But it was with a clod," Worth Acre added.

"I crave an introduction," said Ed Woodney.

"Cousin Ed," interposed Mace, "this is Arthur Lowell, our musician. He is staying with us. It's a partnership affair with Mr. Acre," and she smiled at Worth.

"I am glad to meet you now," said Ed, gravely shaking the other's hand, "before the Winterfields find you!"

"If the Winterfields make trouble," said Worth, "we'll sue them for the grass that was scratched up." Then, before Arthur could say a word, the blacksmith told all about the morning's tragedy. "But why didn't you tell us?" asked Mace in surprise. Her nature was so open, she could not understand his concealment.

"Never mind that," interposed Worth, "he knows it was wrong, and he has agreed to be punished for it. I'm glad you two are here to witness his punishment, because it will be all the harder for him, and he'll feel the better for it. Now, Ed, just lay the rooster on the sidewalk, and, Arthur, run get your fiddle from Mr. Woodney's barn, and bring it here." Arthur, considerably mystified as to how he could be punished through the medium of his beloved violin, hurried to fetch it. Ed deposited the stick with its lugubrious burden upon the walk, then turned to Mace. "Seats for the ladies!" he exclaimed, patting the broad, flat plank that surmounted the Enderthorpe fence.

"I don't think I can get up there," said Mace.

"Oh, yes you can," said Ed, dusting the plank daintily with his handkerchief. "Now, stand with your back to the fence, and jump up when I count three. Put your hands on mine and I'll see that you light." He counted three and Mace "lit." Then Ed climbed up beside her, drew his knees up in order to brace his feet on a lower plank, and waited for Arthur.

"Don't be hard on him, Mr. Acre," said Mace. "He's dreadfully sensitive—you can't know how sensitive he is. But I'll never think quite the same of him any more, after his secret!"

"Don't say that!" urged Worth Acre. "You know you're not perfect, Mace."

"I would never have done that!" cried Mace scornfully. "Why, he acted as if he thought he was a robber. If he'd told about it, nobody would have thought anything of it. I can't bear that kind of a person!"

"Oh, come, cousin," said Ed, "you don't want a fellow to do all his meanness out in the open, you know; it would be a bad example for other people."

"They mustn't do meanness, then!" returned Mace. Arthur came with his violin. "Now, my lad," said Worth Acre, "stand at his head, and I'll stand at his tail. Give us 'Yankee Doodle' good and plenty."

Arthur paled and reddened. "Mr. Acre, I never play those tunes—don't you remember?"

"I won't ask you to play them any oftener than you kill roosters," responded Worth, inflexibly.

"Oh!" said Arthur. "I understand. But really I don't know 'Yankee Doodle.' I wish I did."

"I'll show you," cried Worth, putting his horn to his lips. "Now listen. Ta-ta-ta-ta, that's the beginning. You repeat your first note, then blow one higher and then come one still better. Now, my lad, be a good American and give us 'Yankee Doodle.'"

Arthur stared helplessly at his violin.

"Give me that thing!" cried Worth, "and I'll show you what I mean."

"Mr. Acre," called Ed, "did you ever play on a violin before?"

"Never did," said Worth, tucking his horn under his arm, "but the principle of music is the same on any instrument."

"But why punish Mace and me?" remonstrated Ed. "We haven't been killing chickens. Have him play something he knows already."

"Well, my lad," said Worth, handing back the violin which he had been thumping aimlessly, "do you know something you think I'd like, and that you naturally despise to play? Now I'll trust your honor that it's something you despise—something it will punish you to play."

"Mr. Acre," said Ed," "if you join in with your horn, it's bound to punish him."

"I mean to join in," returned Worth with dignity. "Now, Arthur, I trust to your honor."

Mace sniffed. It was far from her intention that Arthur should observe her, but he did, and his cheeks burned. "His honor!" thought Mace contemptuously. Arthur thought to himself, "She will never respect me!" He drooped his head. "Mr. Acre," he said in a low voice, "I do know one—one of that kind—it's called," he paused, then spoke the name all in a breath, as if it sickened him, "'The Devil's Dream.'"

Ed Woodney shouted. Worth shook his head. "I don't know it. I suppose mother wouldn't let it be played on the place when she was alive, and I've been a church-goer ever since. Well, I'll join in with you. Pshaw! I can do just as well whether I've heard a tune or not. Now, my lad! Here we go. One—two—three!"

The Cradle Roll, needs seeing after in a nice way and we have just the things you need for its successsful prosecution. Order samples.

The first edition of "The Holy Spirit," by J. H. Garrison, is nearly exhausted and another must soon be on the way. The price is $1.00.

The Subscription Department reports having made the largest gains in 1905 of any year in the history of the Company, The Christian-Evangelist now being at "high water mark" in its circulation.

Of the American Standard improvements there is no end, and now we have an excellent New Testament in divinity circuit, full leather, at 75 cents. It is one of the prettiest, handiest and most convenient books.

Now that the forces are taking up their work after a pleasant vacation, do not forget the Home Department, so important and helpful, and do not forget that we have everything needful to make it a success. You can have all the samples by asking.

This fall will see many "Rallies" in our schools, and for these we have prepared some handsome rally souvenirs at $1.50 per hundred, postpaid, but the supply is very limited and we advise early orders, for you may call to mind how many were disappointed last year.

Do you wonder what number they are singing now, when you come into church a little tardy some Sunday? We have prepared a hymn register for all the hymns of any one service to be put before the congregation, so that without embarrassment any one can turn to the number and join in this delightful feature of the worship. Write us.

"The Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, is meeting with no more cordial reception than we expected, but the commendations coming in are somewhat more enthusiastic; all knowing the author would expect a fine list of eloquent discourses, and they are not disappointed. The book is listed at the popular price of $1.00, postpaid.

The little booklet used in drilling Juniors in Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies by H. F. Davis in his work in Missouri is now ready, with an exact reproduction of the chart used in his work and we are putting it on the market at five cents each, or 50 cents per dozen, postpaid. Order one, and you will order more for drill work in your school and for interesting your societies.

The abridged edition of "Gloria in Excelsis" in boards is put on the market at 55 cents postpaid, or by the dozen, $5.00, not prepaid, and by the hundred, $40, not prepaid. The cloth abridged is 65 cents prepaid or $6.50 per dozen not prepaid, or $50 per hundred not prepaid. The abridged in leather back is 80 cents each, postpaid, by the dozen, $8.00 not prepaid, and by the hundred, $65 not prepaid. The abridged has 400 pages, the responsive readings, and is a first-class book with fewer songs.

Have you been keeping in touch with our new song books? Gloria in Excelsis is par excellence, but among the cheaper books, Praises to the Prince; Popular Hymns No. 2; Living Praise; Silver and Gold; Gospel Call No. 1 or No. 2, are each 25 cents prepaid, in limp or boards; $2.00 per dozen, not prepaid, or $15 per hundred, not prepaid. What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Japanese Protests.

The more the Japanese think about the peace terms, the more they disapprove of them. The riots in Tokio during the week following the announcement of the terms showed the intensity of popular feeling but exhibited no intelligent grasp of the situation. More recently the protest has taken a more reasonable and less violent form. Petitions have begun to pour in urging the Mikado to reject the treaty. The direct appeal to the throne is practiced by the Japanese only in matters which are conceived to be of the utmost urgency and many of the petitions represent the sentiments of the more thoughtful class. One of them came from a group of professors in the University of Tokio. We still believe that the treaty will without doubt be ratified by both parties and that Japan will gain vastly more by accepting it than she possibly could by standing out for more favorable terms. But if the Mikado's foremost advisers, who sanctioned the terms of the peace as negotiated, appreciated the humanitarian argument in favor of peace and weighed also the value of the reputation for magnanimity which Japan would gain in the eyes of the world, it is scarcely to be expected that the general public, or even all of the university professors, would place the same valuation upon these intangible advantages. The man in the street—whether it is a street in Tokio or a street in New York—wants to enjoy the spoils when his side wins. He wants to see his enemy humiliated as well as defeated. This is not an admirable trait, but it is practically universal in unregenerate humanity. We would all like to have an opportunity to reason with the Japanese and show them how much better it will be for them to accept the treaty than to hold out for better terms. Most likely we could not convince a single one of them who was not already convinced, but in the nature of the case we are in a position to estimate the matter more intelligently than they can. A recently published report indicates that Vladivostok, instead of being the strongest Russian position in the east, was probably the weakest. The publication purports to give the substance of the report of a Russian general who was sent to inspect the fortress at Vladivostok and who declared that he found an amazing lack of discipline, insomuch that the equipment, which in itself was excellent, would have been practically useless in resisting an attack. This report, indicating what might have happened if the contest had been prolonged a little longer, will not make the Japanese feel any happier in the acceptance of the terms of peace.

Peaceable Separation.

Sweden and Norway have peaceably agreed to a division of the dual kingdom. For several weeks the delegates appointed to represent the two countries have been in session at Karlstad, Sweden, discussing the terms upon which a dissolution could be effected. The attitude which the Norwegian Storthing had assumed made it certain that nothing short of complete separation would be accepted by Norway. It was only a question of conditions. The Swedish ministry had shown a willingness to grant separation if proper terms could be agreed upon, but the terms which were at first suggested were not acceptable to the more radical of the Norwegian separatists. The delegates who were appointed to confer and draft a protocol covering the ground of the conditions of separation represented, on the Swedish side, the dominant element in the government, but on the Norwegian side the more moderate element. It is practically certain, therefore, that the protocol will be acceptable to Sweden, but it is entirely conceivable that the Norwegian representatives may not be able to command a majority in support of the terms which they have accepted. The chief points to be determined were the fortification of the frontier, the control of commerce and waterways between the two countries, and the concessions to be made to the nomadic Lapps who migrate at certain seasons from one country to the other. The terms of the protocol have not yet been given out but will be published this week. The republican party in Norway, after a little show of strength, has virtually collapsed, partly as the result of pressure from without and partly from sheer lack of vitality within. The government will continue to be a monarchy and it is now in the market for a good serviceable king of amiable disposition and fair executive ability, good family connections but not too closely allied with any of the great groups of monarchs among whom rivalries exist. The Bernadottes have been thoroughly canvassed but it is believed that King Oscar will not allow any member of his family to accept the throne of a country which has virtually dethroned him—at least not without more urging than he is likely to get. Prince Charles of Denmark and Prince George of Greece (who is also a Dane by descent) are the most prominent candidates.

Resistance in Finland.

Finland, with all the oppression to which she has been subjected, has remained remarkably peaceful, but there is evidence that the party which favors resistance to the tyrannies of Russia is gaining strength and confidence. Two weeks ago a great assembly which was convened in Helsingfors to consider and advocate the establishment of a constitution for Finland—or the re-establishment of the old one—was dispersed by the Russian authorities. The mention of a constitution in Finland is always embarrassing to the Russian officials, for Finland has a very excellent written constitution which every Russian czar for the past century has sworn to support and which every one of them, including Nicholas II., has grossly violated. With the dispersion of this congress of constitutionalists went a general order for the strict enforcement of the regulations of 1900 against the unauthorized meetings. Measures are being taken, however, by the constitutionalists to hold a series of meetings in all parts of the country in defiance of this order. It remains to be seen what will happen. The discovery of the secret importation of large quantities of arms into Finland a few months ago has put the imperial authorities on their guard against an uprising. The thing most to be feared is that a comparatively small group of violent enthusiasts will, by some outbreak, give the Russian government a plausible excuse for taking the final measures for crushing out the life of Finland. It is impossible to believe that there is any considerable number of active revolutionists of the violent type in Finland, but a few may make a disturbance out of all proportion to their numbers and furnish an excuse for the most extreme measures.

The Cuban Election.

The preliminary election for the choice of officials for the general election in the fall in Cuba gave occasion for some rather startling disturbances. The first clash came at Cienfuegos. It was noised abroad that the Liberal party was preparing a dynamite plot and the police made an effort to search the apartments of a prominent member of the Cuban congress. The Liberals resisted the police, who were considered as the representatives of their political opponents, the Moderate or government party. In the melee which ensued several persons were killed, including the congressman and the chief of police. Subsequent search of the premises showed that the rumor regarding concealed arms and dynamite was well founded. Bombs were found in the Liberal headquarters in other towns also. The election occurred on Saturday and passed off without serious disturbance. It resulted in a victory for the government. The election had a special interest for Americans, since the Platt Amendment was directly involved in it. The Liberals were making the repeal of the provisions of this amendment a part of their program. It was inevitable that there should be a party of hotheads. Cuba has still a good many things to learn about government. She has no heritage of Anglo Saxon traditions of justice and self government. Consequently, in times of sudden stress her electoral machinery is apt to fail of its purpose, and things go very much as they sometimes do in Colorado and Philadelphia and St. Louis, and other places which are imperfectly democratic in their mode of government. It is truly unfortunate that Cuba should so far forget her high ideals as to mix violence with her elections. But there is no reason why we should become discouraged with our protege. There are some things which even we have not yet learned about government. They are doing very well and will succeed in making a free government in spite of their foolish patriots.

Campaign Contributions.

John A. McCall, president of the New York Life Insurance Company, on the witness stand in the legislative insurance investigation, made some interesting statements about the matter of campaign contributions. Most notable was his assertion that friends of Judge Parker besieged the company and himself with requests for contributions to the Democratic campaign fund in 1904, and that Judge Parker, when chairman of the state Democratic committee several years ago, was a zealous solicitor of money from all sources. "If he would show up his books," said Mr. McCall, "it would give you a fit. He never rejected a dollar in the world." This statement by itself is not so startling, but it gathers a certain melancholy interest when compared with the position assumed by Judge Parker in his eleventh hour attack on President Roosevelt in the matter of campaign funds. There is, of course, the possibility that Mr. McCall's statement may not be an undistorted reflection of the facts. Mr. Taggart, chairman of the Democratic national committee, asserts that this is the case so far as the campaign of 1904 was concerned. He leaves Judge Parker to defend himself with regard to earlier state campaigns, but the judge has not yet spoken on this point, though he confirms Mr. Taggart's denial regarding the campaign of 1904. Mr. McCall realizes and admits that the managers of an insurance company lay themselves open to criticism in making a contribution to a political campaign fund, and that as a rule it should not be done. In this case he justifies the New York Life's contribution to the Republican treasury on the ground that it was for the defense of the gold standard, the maintenance of which he deemed essential to the protection of the interests of the policy holders.

Dispensary Troubles.

It is perhaps not surprising that a graft-scandal has come to light in connection with the South Carolina dispensary system of controlling the liquor business. Common observation has taught us the intimate connection which commonly exists between the whisky trade and disreputable politics. For fourteen years South Carolina has enjoyed the benefits and suffered the evils of the so-called dispensary system, under which saloons under private ownership are abolished and liquor is sold by salaried government agents. The alleged advantages of the plan are that it assures the sale of purer liquor than that ordinarily obtainable; that it places the sale in the hands of salesmen whose emolument is definitely fixed, and who have therefore nothing to gain by encouraging the sale of their wares; that it obviates the treating evil by forbidding drinking on the premises; that it takes the saloon out of politics, and that the profits go to the school fund. The validity of these claims has been much discussed. Some excellent temperance people believe in the plan; more do not. A newspaper discussion of the merits of the system has recently been carried on in the "Charleston News and Courier" by Senator Tillman, its chief supporter in the state, and George B. Cromer, a Prohibitionist. But the present point is that it has come to light that the administration of the plan has been so crooked as—well, as one would expect it to be. If the system prevents the dispenser from getting a profit from his sales other than his fixed salary, it does not so affect the manufacturer and the wholesaler. They, as before, live by doing business, and the more business they do the better they can live. In a large number of cases it has become evident that dispensary agents were receiving bonuses and bribes from the large dealers in return for favors in the choice of goods and in pushing the sales. More than that, the appointing power has been corrupted and positions on the dispensary force have been bought and sold for good round sums—a fact which also goes to show that the places probably had a pecuniary value not represented by the salaries attached to them. We all know how hard it is to keep graft out of politics. We have good reason to believe that the temptations to graft increase with the increasing volume of financial and business operations which are performed under political control. When the business happens to be the liquor business, for which all forms of corruption seem to have a natural affinity, how could we expect that graft would be absent?

Too Much Publicity.

It is not a matter about which one cares to be unpleasantly critical, but we wish that Miss Roosevelt would go home and devote her time, during the remainder of her father's administration, to keeping out of the public eye. It is, to be sure, a somewhat rare good fortune for the White House to have a debutante, and it is a still more rare good fortune for a debutante to have a White House as a point of departure and return. But it is better that some of the opportunities afforded by this happy combination should be missed than that the public should be wearied. It is not her fault. So far as we know, she has conducted herself with propriety, decorum and grace on all occasions. But the occasions are too many and too public. We do not begrudge her the good time she has had on the present tour of the far east, nor the hundred thousand dollars worth of presents which she is said (probably in gross exaggeration) to have received from the Empress of China, the Emperor of Korea, the Mikado, and other oriental potentates. But we do not like the "American princess" idea, which her presence in that region at this particular time inevitably suggests. It might have been foreseen that a nation which ascribes the credit for a naval victory to the distinguished virtues of the Mikado's ancestors, would have strong enough ideas about heredity to receive the President's daughter as at least a semi-official representative of our government. It looks just a trifle like an effort to coin the President's vast and deserved popularity, which he has won by his official handling of the problems of the orient, into a petty and personal advantage for a member of the family. This may not be chivalrous. Indeed, we are pretty sure it is not. But it has been on our mind for some time to say it, and now we have said it.

Another Irrepressible Conflict.

The fight that is now on between civic righteousness and public plunder, between honesty and law-enforcement, on the one hand, and private and public graft on the other, is as irrepressible as that between freedom and slavery. If it were true that the union could not exist "half slave and half free," no less is it true that the nation and our republican form of government can not exist while its laws are enacted and enforced, and its policies shaped, to any considerable extent, by men of corrupt minds and dishonest practices. The antagonism is between fundamental principles, and must go on until the right is triumphant.

The revelations which have been made concerning the methods of certain colossal trusts that are fattening and growing to enormous dimensions at the expense of the people whom they systematically rob to fill their own coffers, have discouraged some good men, but the very fact that these corrupt practices are being uncovered to the public gaze as never before in our history is the surest evidence of a rising moral sentiment that will sweep them out of existence. The very first step in the correction of public abuses is to let in the light, and this is being done now in a way that sends terror to the hearts of the guilty and gives hope to honest men. The people know more about Standard Oil methods, about the Beef Trust, the management of our great insurance companies and frenzied finance in general than ever before, and this knowledge, rest assured, is the very club with which these abuses must be corrected.

Look at the disclosures of the methods of the great Life Insurance Companies which have been posing as conservators of the people's welfare! The money paid in by innocent and unsuspecting policy holders has been used to pay enormous salaries, to speculate in stocks, etc., and has gone to the enrichment of the few, with little or no regard to the sacred obligations they have assumed toward the public.

We have all felt that insurance in the Old Line companies was costing too much, but who of us had any conception of the enormous sums paid out to men who had no legal right to the salaries they received, and how the accumulated millions were being used for the enrichment of a coterie of men at the expense of those insured?

Think you this war is going to end with these revelations and a great deal of talk? Impossible! The people are aroused. Their eyes have been opened at last. They are waking as from a troubled sleep. At the head of the nation is a fearless executive who has no ambition but to serve the American. Many law-makers and law-enforcers from governors down to circuit attorneys have caught his spirit, and the battle must go on to the finish. Everywhere, among the nations, there is need for the militant spirit against iniquity. It is no time to cry, "Peace! peace!" while the nations are being undermined with corruption. It is an irrepressible conflict. With Markham we say:

Let trifling pipe be mute,
Fling by the languid lute.
Take down the trumpet
And confront the hour
And speak to toilworn nations
From a tower.
Take down the horn
Wherein the thunders sleep,
Blow battles into men,
Call down the fire,
The daring—the long purpose, the desire.
Descend with faith into the human deep.

The Wisconsin Convention.

The brethren in Wisconsin have just concluded the thirty-third annual convention of their state missionary society. It was held in the beautiful little city of Grand Rapids, on the Wisconsin River, over two hundred miles north of Chicago. The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist had the privilege this year, at the request of the State Board, of meeting with them and participating in their proceedings. The corresponding secretary, H. F. Barstow, has promised to give our readers a fuller report of the proceedings than we are able to do; but we record here a few facts and impressions, as this was our first visit to a convention of Wisconsin brethren.

The first interesting fact is that the church at Grand Rapids, which entertained the convention, has been in existence only since last May. Brother Eggert and wife, moving there from Illinois, some time before that, and finding no church of their choice, immediately set about the work of having one. In a little while, Bro. C. H. De Voe, evangelist, assisted by H. K. Shields, singer, was engaged to hold a meeting, which resulted in the organization of a church of over sixty members, in May last. Everyone speaks in high terms of the work of Brother De Voe as preacher, and Brother Shields as singer. This good work, it should be said, was accomplished under the auspices of the State Missionary Society, assisted by the American Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The church has been greatly strengthened by the removal there, from Richland Center, of Brother and Sister Pease, in whose hospitable home, by the way, the Editor was entertained while in the city. The church has material in it that justifies the belief that it is to become one of our strong churches in that state. As Grand Rapids is a railroad center, a manufacturing city with magnificent water power, and has a population of 6,500, it was a fine piece of missionary work to plant the church there.

There were only forty or fifty delegates enrolled, outside of the city, but we are not yet strong in that state. The corresponding secretary's report showed that they had only 1,404 members in the state at the beginning of last year, but this number has been increased to over 1,700 during the year just closing. One of the most interesting things in Secretary Barstow's report was the remarkable movement among the Scandinavians of the state toward New Testament Christianity. Many of the Norwegians in the state, as a result of their own study of the Bible, are breaking away from the Lutheran Church, and have asked for baptism, and a simpler form of Christianity. Brother Stone and Brother Anderson, Norwegian brethren, have been doing some work among these people, and Brother Stone has had printed some tracts, in their language, setting forth the nature of our movement, and is circulating them among the Scandinavian population of the state. This movement needs intelligent guidance, and the State Board needs greater assistance from the outside to manage this work successfully. We should say Wisconsin offers, just now, a most promising field for aggressive mission work, and we hope our national boards will note this fact. The convention was presided over by Bro. J. C. Thurman, a railroad man of Green Bay, who, with his wife and daughters, is deeply interested in the work. From outside the state, there were present, also, George A. Campbell, of Chicago, representing the "Christian Century"; Sister Garst, of Des Moines, representing the Educational Society of Iowa; Sister Atwater, of Indianapolis, representing the C. W. B. M., and H. U. Dale, representing the Benevolent Association. These all rendered valuable service to the convention. The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist preached two sermons, one on foreign missions, at the request of President McLean, and the other of a more general character. The local church and community furnished good audiences, and the Methodist and Congregational churches were generously given to the use of the convention. All departments of the state work were well presented, as C. W. B. M., Christian Endeavor and Sunday school. We were delighted with the spirit and consecration of Brother Barstow, the corresponding secretary, and of all the ministers whom we met at the convention. Dinner and breakfast were served in the G. A. R. Hall, without money and without price, and lodging and breakfast on the same terms. Bro. C. W. Dean, of Colfax, Ill., is to be the pastor of the young church at Grand Rapids, and he was present, assisting in the convention, and was to make the closing address. He will begin his work in October, and the church is fortunate, we think, in securing him. It was our first extensive ride through the state, and we do not wonder that many people make it their summer resort. It abounds in beautiful lakes and fine scenery. It ought to abound in simple New Testament Christianity.

Notes and Comments

We are getting a little bit tired of hearing about boy preachers. We believe that a great deal of good was accomplished in what is known as the Welsh revival, but we doubt the wisdom of putting up a child of seven years to preach and another of five to tell why he is a Christian.

Shall Boss Cox become Senator Cox? If Ohio elects its Republican ticket, that is what the state may have to face.

The editor of a great metropolitan paper in the east, referring to the present political issue in Ohio, says: "Any party that arrays itself against the churches in these days will find itself in danger. It is better that the lesson be taught in 1905 than three years hence."

Every daily paper of any prominence in this country ought to have on its staff a religious editor—a man of wide knowledge and broad charity. Our newspaper men excel all others in their alertness, but the newspapers of America are very deficient in specialists. Here, for instance, is a paper talking about the new Methodist hymnal, and it tells us that John Wesley wrote most of the hymns, with Isaac Watts a close second. Charles Wesley is not even mentioned. Such is fame. The average city editor seems to think that his most inexperienced ten-dollar-a-week reporter, fresh from a high school, can handle the religious news, whereas there is no department on a daily paper that requires a wider general knowledge and a saner judgment than does that department which attempts to cover religious thought and activity.

The "Cincinnati Enquirer" is, of course, one of the most sensational of sensational papers, and has long been regarded as sacrilegious in its headlines. We regret to say it has some editor or writer on its staff that the good people of Cincinnati would be almost justified in taking out and putting into a duck pond. In a special plea for the canteen, and for drinking customs, it defends appetites which, it says, "have prevailed since Noah took whiskey into the ark." A duck pond is almost too good for a writer or an editor who can print such stuff!

In this very connection we quote Au Wing, a Chinaman, who, on being asked his opinion of the situation in the far east recently, said: "Russian officer and soldier—too canteen—velly much canteen. Japanese captain and men—no canteen about he—just like 'Melican soldier." We see that General Grant is making a plea for the restoration of the canteen, and to him, and all others who believe that the United States government should punish a man for permitting an Indian to get liquor, and then provide means for its soldiers to get the same intoxicating stuff and make it respectable for them to do it, we commend an editorial in the Toronto "Globe," entitled, "A Temperance Lecture." We can not quote the whole of this leading article, but we make an extract:

> The result of the battle in the Korean Straits is in reality the triumph of sober Japan over whiskey-soaked Russia. The lesson of the war is not for Russia alone. It is for every nation and for every individual who seeks stability and advancement. Great Britain's greatest danger today is the intemperance of the people. "Intemperance and progress do not go together. They are, as Sir Frederick Treves said the other day, hopelessly antagonistic. This eminent authority made the statement that alcoholic drink, even in small quantities, absorbs human energy and minimizes the effort of the individual. Russia has learned this truth, but at a terrible cost. Let Great Britain profit from that lesson before it is too late."

The great railroads of our country, while they have done many things that may be disapproved of in the course of their history, are yet light-bearers as well. Their strong stand for temperance is well known. Now we see it stated that the Pennsylvania Railroad officials have decided to stop the sale on their trains of novels which incite boys and youths to deeds of violence. The next thing to preventing the publication of vile literature is the prevention of its circulation.

Current Religious Thought.

An illustration of the terror under which Protestant Christians have lived in Russia was given by Baron Uiskiull, of Russia, at the Baptist World's Congress in session in London, says the "Northwestern Christian Advocate." "A sister came to me," said the baron, "and asked to be received into the Baptist community, as she wished to quit the Greek Orthodox Church. Now, until last Easter it was a crime to quit the orthodox fold. The person doing so was liable to imprisonment or exile, and the same punishment would fall on us if we baptized her. I decided to take the risk of baptizing her, but some of our brethren said, 'No, baron, it is too dangerous; leave the matter to us, we will make it!' So they asked the lady to walk in the evening by the seashore, and there would meet her a brother. To him she was to say, 'Are you Philippus?' He would answer, 'Yes,' and by that she would learn that he was authorized to perform the rite of baptism. But she would never know who baptized her, and if the police asked questions she could truthfully say, 'I heard no name but that of Philippus.'" Happily for the peace of dissenters and for the honor of Russia a more tolerant spirit now prevails. Russians may identify themselves with any church they choose.

A curious illustration of endeavoring to make a superstition seem reasonable and to draw a parallel where no parallel exists, says the "Western Christian Advocate," was exhibited by one of our Catholic exchanges lately. It speaks of the honor recently shown to the remains of John Paul Jones, and would have us believe that the Catholics hold their saints in a regard similar to that entertained by patriotic Americans for the brave sea captain. This illustration follows a bit of news concerning "the greatest and most authentic relic," as it is called, of the church—the true cross—the largest portion of which is preserved, so it is said, in the Church of the Holy Cross, at Rome. Each bishop has a portion of the true cross in his pectoral cross, and so scarce has this relic become that the late pope, in his letter to the church, asks them to will their pectoral crosses to their successors. We shall doubtless be put down as an unholy skeptic, a base unbeliever, for admitting that we do not conceive that one splinter of the true cross is now in existence in the world. And as for relics, they lend themselves too much to a superstitious veneration, whatever their apologists may say in their defense.

Pentwater Musings.

These are quiet, restful days here by the lakeside. All the other cottagers have folded their tents like the Arabs and silently stolen away. We are, for the time, monarchs of all we survey. Are we lonely? Not a bit of it! Why should one, especially two, have to be in a crowd to keep from feeling lonesome? It was an Irishman, of course, who said he "loiked to be alone, especially when his swateheart was with him"! We are quite of the Irishman's way of feeling. Coming from the crowds of the convention, the crowds on the trains, crowds at the hotels, crowds everywhere for a month, to the quiet of these hills, clothed with hemlocks and pines, and to the music of old Lake Michigan's waves, to dwell alone on this peaceful shore for a brief period, was the very medicine our weary bodies and spirits needed. Nor are we deprived of the enjoyment of social life because the other cottagers have all gone. We had a picnic the other day—just we two! We had never allowed a summer to pass without a picnic in the woods, and we determined that this should be no exception. Filling a basket with the best things the market afforded we repaired to one of the hill-tops of Garrison Park, overlooking the lake, and kindled a fire, made our coffee, spread our table, ate a bountiful repast, told stories. sang snatches of old songs, including, "When You and I were Young, Maggie," and so held the first picnic in Garrison Park! Lonesome? Not we!

It was the gifted Byron who loved nature in addition to some things he ought not to have loved, who wrote:

> "There is a pleasure in the pathless woods,
> There is music on the lonely shore;
> There is society where none intrudes,
> By the deep sea, its music and its roar."

Besides that sort of "society" and "music," which we enjoy here, there is a society of birds and squirrels, which seem strangely familiar and unafraid. How can we shoot the playful squirrels that chatter about our cottage as if we were on the best of terms? It would be like killing one's neighbors! As long as they trust us we will trust them, and even share our food with them. We would like to make a compact with all who are to build cottages in these beautiful grounds in the future not to disturb the squirrels that inhabit these trees. They will do us no harm, but will be an element of attraction. Besides the little red squirrel that makes its home in the ground, there is the large fox squirrel and the grey squirrel which make their home in these woods. Huckleberries still abound on these hills. We gathered a "mess" in a little while the other day. Wild grapes are now ripening. Perhaps we will have a wild grape pie, of boyhood fame, before we leave. Do you remember those wild grape pies and dumplings your mother used to make? Of course you do!

On examination we find evidence, backed up by a frank confession, that our little cottage—"The Pioneer"—though we left it securely locked, as we supposed, was inhabited during our absence in the west, the parties conveniently departing before our return. It apears that two distinguished ladies—one from Missouri and the other from Kentucky—tarrying for the month of August on this far shore, wandered one day into that earthly paradise known as "Garrison Park" and destined to become famous as an ideal summer resort. There they found an uninhabited cottage, humble, but comfortably furnished, with shade trees in front and the great lake stretching out before it. They straightway began to reason within themselves, saying, "Why should this cozy cottage remain unoccupied while its former occupants are absent, and we two lonely women have nowhere to lay our heads, except in a club house? Go to, now; we will go in and make ourselves at home, and trust our friendship with the owners to make it all right!" And they entered in and abode there until the end of their vacation, leaving it, however, in a condition so nearly like that in which they found it, as to create no suspicion of its occupancy. Knowing, however, that the facts would ultimately come out, one of the two wrote a full confession that they, like the hermit crab which, finding a shell unoccupied, walks in and takes possession, had appropriated our vacant cottage during our absence. Of course they were forgiven, especially as they found a letter inviting this depredation! One of them, however, became so enamored of the place that she nailed her card on a tree on the lot south of us, claiming option of the same, and the inscription on the card reads, "Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Moore, Columbia, Mo."; and her accomplice was Mrs. Luella W. St. Clair, of Lexington, Ky.—the presidents, respectively, of Christian College, Columbia, Mo., and Hamilton Female College, Lexington, Ky. "The Pioneer" feels itself honored in having sheltered two such noble women, and especially in that it is to have the Moores for its next-door neighbors.

The grocers of Pentwater decline to deliver their goods to our cottage, but we find it no hardship, in rowing over after the mail, to bring back such provision as meets our simple wants, for we are living the simple life. But do not imagine we are fasting. We are living well. The cost of a simple meal, we estimated the other day by the Pullman dining car scale of prices, with which we are most familiar, would have been $1.80, but it actually cost us less than 25 cents! But Nature, more generous than the grocers, continues to make the same daily exhibits of her wonderful combinations of clouds and sun and lake. Indeed, we had the richest exhibition of colors on the lake today that we remember ever having seen. A shower was approaching over the lake and the sun was only showing his face occasionally, when the whole vast extent of the lake took on the deepest shades of green and blue and orange, like a huge rainbow, or a vast ribbon of many colors. It was a great exhibition and that without any extra charge. The town of Pentwater is pricking up its ears, as if it heard something coming. Its great unfinished hotel, which has been voted to Prof. Washington Sherman, of Greenville, Ill., is being repaired and begins to look like business. A large new dock is going in on its front. Better boat facilities are being planned for. "Now is the time to subscribe."

A Morning Prayer

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

Father, hear us as we pray:
Grant thy blessing through this day;
Keep us in the path of right
By thine own unfailing light;
May our work be unto thee,
For thou dost our labors see;
When the evening shadows fall,
Grant us rest, thou Lord of all.

An Evening Prayer

BY THOMAS CURTIS CLARK.

Father, on thy name we call,
As the evening shadows fall;
Bless the labors of the day;
All before thy feet we lay.
Guard us through the dark of night;
Put all enemies to flight;
Call us by the morning ray
To our task—this, Lord, we pray.

My Church

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The vision goes back over three decades of history. A significant period necessarily that is in this age, either in the life of a man, or of a church. Our thirtieth anniversary has passed and we turn backward, and as we pitch our tent at the thirtieth milestone, raise our Ebenezer, and so link present deliverance with all the past, and testify again to the enduring faithfulness and goodness of a covenant-keeping God. Past mercies call for present thanksgiving. Our English word thankful is akin to the Anglo-Saxon "thinkful," for to be thankful is to be thoughtful of benefits received. The feast of weeks, of Tabernacles, Jacob's pillar, Joshua's twelve stones, like the stone raised by Samuel, the Lord's day, the Lord's supper, and the Lord's baptism all have this memorial meaning. In no respect do men feel this impulse of praise so mightily as when they contemplate their obligations for the Gospel of Christ, the church of Christ, the ordinances of Christ, the fellowship of the people of Christ, and the rewards of the kingdom of Christ. How can any man turn away from the fellowship of a true church of Christ to the fads and cults and false faiths of men, or the barren places, the desert and wilderness of the world!

And how high and holy the history of a church, dealing with deeper, mightier, vaster concerns than pertain to one age or generation, or to one planet, but touching in its last range all ages and all worlds. Chronicles like this can never be complete here, the scribe who keeps the record and the angel who posts the book of remembrance together must make up the history. In 1844 a few brethren holding the principles advocated by the Campbells met in Washington at the home of Dr. G. T. Barclay. In 1850 Alexander Campbell preached before both houses of congress and again in '56, and that year there is a formal statement of a church with 34 members. Some great souls were connected with it in this early period, Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Tingle, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hazard, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Summy, and Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah S. Black.

There is something pathetic about the peregrinations of these good people. If the church at war with evil is the church militant, and the church at rest and crowned, the church triumphant, this is the church itinerant. First it is the church in Dr. Barclay's house, then in Mr. Campbell's house, then in the medical college, then in Temperance Hall, then in the Corcoran Library, now in the City Hall and now in Matzerott Hall, today in old Trinity, and tomorrow in Shiloh meeting house, again at Mr. Campbell's house, and then again at the City Hall, till they finally pitched their tent on M street in '69; but even here they do not find rest; soon the little church is on wheels journeying to Vermont avenue in 1871. They are pilgrims and sojourners. They literally go into all the city and preach the Gospel to every creature.

F. D. POWER.

From '63 to '69 they met in the City Hall. Lincoln's friend, Ward Lamon, United States marshal of the District of Columbia, and Mrs. Lamon attended these services, and through Mr. Lamon they secured the use of the hall. Little was done during the stormy period of the war, but the little band was greatly strengthened by the coming of General Garfield, who, on entering congress, identified himself with them, shared their poverty and obscurity, their interests and labors, and often spoke in their meetings. In the midst of pressing, onerous and constant labors he always remembered his Lord in the simple supper and sought to spread his Gospel, and men might say of him as he said of Thomas, "His character was as grand and simple as a colossal pillar of chiseled granite." In '68 Henry T. Anderson became pastor of the little flock, and the movement took form which led to the purchase of the little frame chapel from the Methodists. This was occupied in '69, Isaac Everett preaching the dedicatory sermon, and the same year O. A. Bartholomew became pastor and continued for three years.

September 4, 1875, the present pastorate began. The history may be divided into three decades, the most important event in the first being the erection of our new house of worship; in the second, the establishment of the Ninth Street Church, and in the third the expansion and enlargement in the matter of missions. I found a little frame chapel and 150 souls. The site seemed almost in the suburbs. Iowa Circle was a common. No one thought it quite respectable to live beyond P street. I picked blackberries where I now live. We had 128,000 people in the District of Columbia, rotten wood pavements and mud, bobtail cars and seven-cent fares. It was in Grant's second administration.

The first year we organized a mission on the Bladensburg road, near the site of our present Thirty-fourth Street Church. We organized in 1878 an auxiliary to the C. W. B. M., which has given its thousands and organized a score of others. We organized in 1880 the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia, which has been instrumental in gathering in many hundreds of souls and building up churches in all our territory. We organized later the Bethany Beach institution, which promises to be the seaside summer resort for all our people. In 1880 the movement took shape for the building of the present house of worship. Mr. Garfield was elected, but before that the pastor had appeared before the G. C. M. C. at Louisville and urged the work. Then came the election and assassination, and all the sad experiences of that single summer in the history of the republic. President Garfield loved the church. He wrote me, as far back as '76, when his youngest child died:

> 1227 I St., Oct. 25, 1876.
> DEAR BROTHER POWER: Our precious little boy died at 9:30 this morning. We take him to Ohio for burial, starting by the 7:40 train this evening. We shall be glad to have you come and hold a brief service of reading and prayer at 6 o'clock. Please ask a few of our brethren and sisters to come with you. In the hope of the Gospel so precious in this affliction, I am,
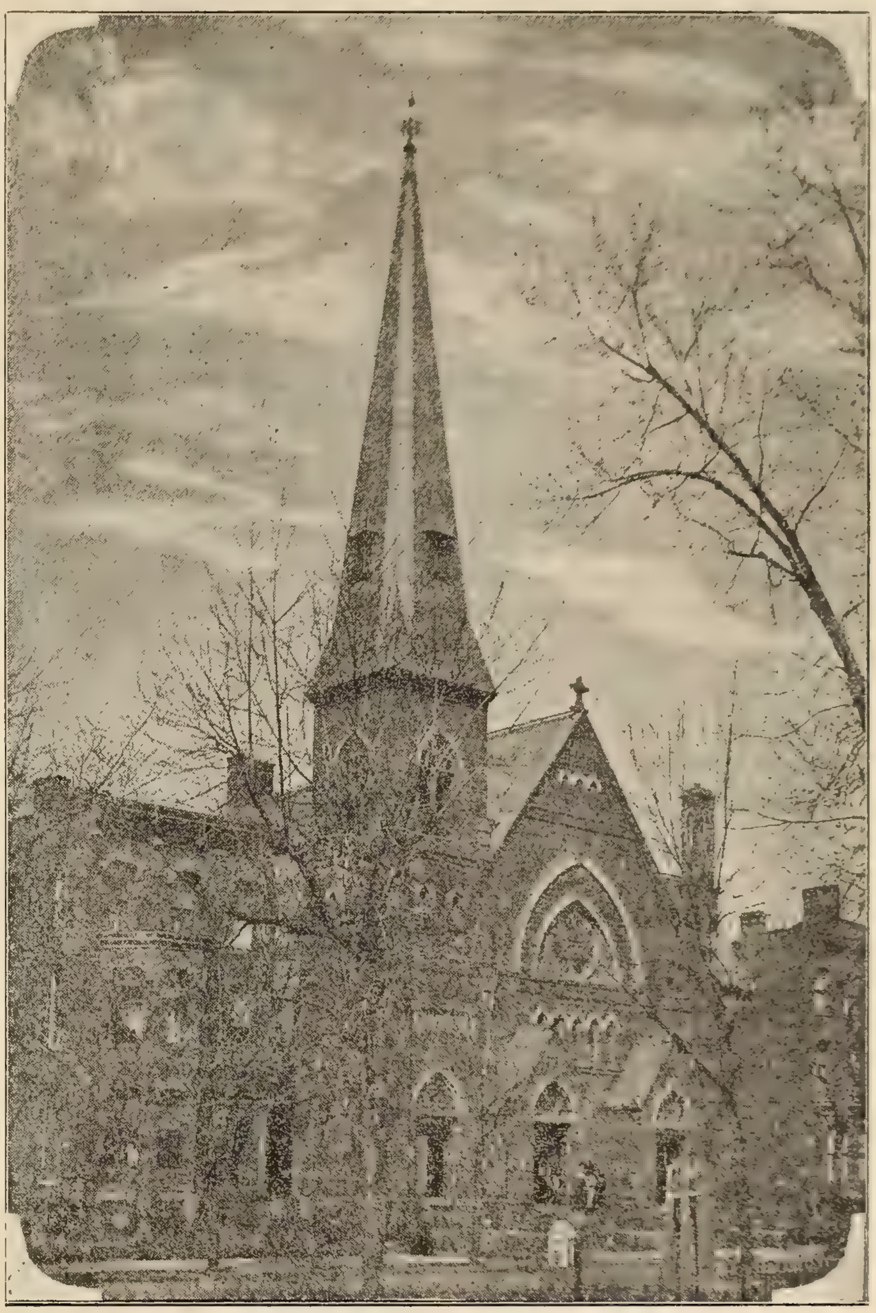
> Very truly yours,
> J. A. GARFIELD.

Again, when during the campaign I expressed the sympathy of the church with him, he answered me: "I am glad to know our brethren are feeling so kindly toward me, and especially to know that they are not moved by the assaults that are being made upon me."

Again, when I wrote, asking any suggestions in regard to the new house of worship, he replied: "I am glad to hear the work is to be undertaken, and beg leave to offer but one suggestion, and that is, that our brethren do not undertake to build too large a house. Let us keep within our means. and also avoid anything like ostentation, either in size or decoration. Let it be a neat, modest church of undersize, rather than oversize."

Again, when a noted political preacher wished to occupy the pulpit, and I asked his advice about inviting him, he said to me: "We don't want any political preaching in our little church. I am not there as President. I am there simply as a Disciple of Christ." And in the hour of pain, knowing of our constant prayer in his behalf, he was heard to say: "The dear little church on Vermont avenue; they have been carrying me as a great burden; when I get up they shall not regret it!" September 19 ended the nation's long vigil, and we held that service in the dome of the Capitol—the most impressive, I dare say, in the history of the country, with one living President, two ex-Presidents and two ex-Vice-Presidents, Supreme Court and diplomats, Senate and House, army and navy—a great host; and six of his brethren bore his body away from the scene of his toils and triumphs. January 20, 1884, we dedicated the new church, President Arthur and his cabinet and many prominent men of the nation being present. That ends the first decade. In 1890 we projected the Ninth Street Church. A mission had been opened where the National Library now stands, and then conducted in Odd Fellows' Hall S. E.; and then the chapel built at Ninth and D streets N. E., and we have a church there of 1,140, with a Sunday school of 800, the second largest in the city. Then comes last the decade of enlargement and expansion. Thirty years ago the little chapel and 150 souls; in 1905, 8 churches, 2,500 members and $150,000 worth of church property. To the Vermont Avenue Church 1,522 souls have been added: five preachers of the gospel have gone from us, 9,000 religious services have been held, the pastor has preached 5,000 sermons and made 50,000 calls, and $225,000 has been contributed to the Lord's work by people in very plain circumstances. So much for figures; but there are greater things than figures. Ebenezer: "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us." We may trust him for the untried future. Let us go on to perfection. Let us take others with us.



VERMONT AVENUE CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

FREDERICK D. POWER.

Many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who enjoy the writings of F. D. Power under "As Seen From the Dome" will doubtless be glad to know more of the personality of the man, and we think this occasion, when Brother Power, has. at our request, written about his thirtieth anniversary at the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, is an opportune time to present his photograph and pictures of the first church where he ministered at Washington and the present home of his ministry. One of the Washington papers describes him as "erect as a young soldier, bright of eye and ruddy of face, and with a head of silver hair that, so far from giving him the appearance of an aged man, heightens the youthful impression which his activity and vigor give."

"My wife says I should quit keeping anniversaries," says Brother Power. "It may be so. She feels it perhaps more than I do, as a little boy at the beach this summer handed me two peaches and said, 'Take one to your mudder.' It does no good to battle against the evidence. Anniversaries come, whether we keep them or not. Standing this summer in a group of curious Hoosiers, after having preached three sermons with the thermometer at 95, a typical specimen of Hoosierdom of the lank, lean, long-drawn-out variety that reminded one of an extension fire ladder, remarked: 'You stood up under it purty well today for one of your age.' 'How old do you take me to be?' asked one of the number. 'Wall,' said the Hoosier, eyeing me from top to bottom, 'he is just a leetle over seventy'!"

Brother Power is a Virginian, born in 1851, within a few miles of historic Yorktown. He was the second son of the nine children of Dr. Robert Henry Power, a well-known physician, who served in both houses of the state legislature. His mother, from whom he received his early education, was a teacher and a woman of exceptional culture and beautiful character. His home, at the age of ten years, when the civil war broke out, was in the track of the armies. As

The Transformation of Wealth*

A Study of the Business of Church Extension

By Robert Perry Shepherd

Tremendous strides are being made today toward practical agreement in the essentials of Christian faith. The next step will be to convert the church to the essentials of Christian practice. The supreme problem of Christian missions is to put that "go" back into the hearts of believers, to restore the sense of personal responsibility and personal obligation to the place where Christ left it.

Being living epistles of Christ to men, we are under obligation to expend upon ourselves whatever money is needful to make us and keep us at our highest effectiveness as message-bearers, and not one dollar more. Above this sum whatever remains is my stewardship for God. And I am shut up by creational necessity, in handling this stewardship, to this alternative. I may choose in love to invest his money for him, or, being full of fear and not of faith, I may hide it in a napkin and cover it with—dirt.

Had Jesus ignored this subject in his teachings we might be free to deal with it according to private and individual judgment. But it so happens that by far the larger portion of his recorded utterances deal directly with this matter of stewardship, with the privileges and obligations of citizenship in the heavenly kingdom he was about to set up upon the earth. When Christian people have finished discussing dogmas and polities, rites and ceremonies, we shall have time and inclination, perhaps, to give attention to Jesus' teaching concerning money investments.

He tells us to take our money and go and buy friends with it. But friendship, you say, is not a marketable commodity. Well, then, go not into the market place to find it, scan not the last quotations of the produce exchange to find the latest price of it. Stand not upon the streets and cry aloud for men to come and give you friendship in exchange for your cash. Offer to no man your dollar for a dollar's worth of friendship. Men may take your dollars, if you like, but they will give you back—scorn, contempt and emptiness.

Nay, rather than that hollow mockery, hear Christ. Emblazon this truth in your heart. Write it above the commonplace transactions of daily intercourse. Publish it to earth's remotest ends. Bury it in the heart of the church. Make it the chief trumpet tone in every missionary appeal and response. For this truth is embedded deep in the constitution of man and realized perfectly in the perfect man.

He may be my friend who helps me. He is my friend who helps me to help myself. He is most my friend who helps me to be helpful to others, who makes me a living exponent of the Gospel of mutual self-help, who shows me how to bear joyously my own burdens that I may the more surely bear others' burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.

Friends are not to be bought by the law of barter and sale. Cold cash contains no equivalent for a warm heart. But when money becomes an embodiment of life, of energy, of loving hope and sympathetic cheer, it may be transported where friends cry out in helplessness for help, it may be prayerfully expended there, its energies unloosed, its highest function discharged, its transformation become an accomplished fact, the wealth of earth transmuted into the unfading riches of eternity.

For the giving of such money is the proffer of friendship. The acceptance of it is friendship's glad response. And though the friends thus won and bound together in indissoluble ties may not see each other face to face on earth, the joy of precious fellowship in the realms now invisible shall be the more surpassing by reason of mutual conquests made in the here and now but disclosed and comprehended only over there.

In the light of this brief statement of an alchemy divine, we ought to be in better mood to weigh the spiritual significance of missionary work and to give a needed emphasis to a few plain facts.

Some of us are preachers. We give all our time to the Gospel ministry. We preach the glad tidings to the unsaved that they may believe into Christ. We aim to teach the Lord's disciples to observe all things whatsoever he commanded, to instruct them in the truth as it is in Jesus. If we shun to declare to Christians the whole counsel of God we be false leaders. If we claim the privileges of the public ministry we must meet its obligations faithfully lest as blind leaders of the blind we land both in the ditch.

Concerning missions in general, we preachers owe to them for whom and unto whom we minister to tell them with simple earnestness that our missionary offerings are our "go," and that this "go" may be as precise a measure of the obedient mind as is the quantity of water used in the act of baptism. We must say to them in language unmistakable that if we will be jealous for the integrity of the Great Commission we must be consistently jealous; that it not infrequently happens that those who are most delinquent in some command which they do not like are most inflexible and harshly critical concerning any apparent laxity in some command which they happen to like; that it is as disastrous for them who live within glass walls to hurl missiles from within as it is for stones to fall upon them from without; that our average last year of 64 cents per member for all missions, the work for which Jesus Christ gave his life on the tree of human shame, does not commend us as expert exponents of the mind of Christ.

Concerning our missionary societies we must tell them whom we bring into Christ that these are but the channels we have devised through which to pour the friendship fund of our combined energies. We tell these men, whom we appoint to be our eyes and our ears, our feet and our hands, to search the wilderness and city slums, the moral deserts and waste places of this our land and of all lands, to find for us where weakness lifts its plaintive wail, where misery sits in mourning, and soul anguish beats against the barriers of helplessness.

While they prosecute this search we who earn money will embody our energies, to the best of our ability, in the money we acquire. We will use whatever we need for our sustenance. We will use what we need in local helpfulness. And when they come back to us and tell us where we can advantageously make to ourselvs friends by means of our money, there will be no pleading and begging and pumping and agonizing needed to get the use of our money, for it is already consecrated cash. We shall be eager to "go," to release once again our energies, to uplift the fallen and the faint, to put a new song in their mouth, and to bid them hasten while they have yet an open door to make to them and us yet more friends who shall receive us into the timeless abodes.

We must show the church that no one of our missionary agencies is of transcendent importance. All of them are important. The success of any one of them depends upon the success of all the others. They are mutually necessary and interdependent.

To evangelize the home land and all lands; to educate the white and black and all between, both here and on alien shores; to heal the sick and cure the blind; to father the orphan and the lone; to minister with solicitous gratitude to the needs of them whose labors for others left no room for self-sought comfort; to exalt and maintain Christian culture and discipline, all this is the faith of Jesus Christ, the faith that works by love.

It is in such a setting of first principles and of missionary fundamentals that we wish to show cause why the business of Church Extension is worthy of wider recognition and of more generous support.

We are the home-maker of the brotherhood of Disciples of Christ. Our business is to supplement the efforts of small groups of our brothers and sisters who are trying to build a church home for themselves.

Were we unsocial nomads domestic ties would not engage us and we would need no church home. Settled society and the social instinct make both the family dwelling and the church home a necessity. Common enjoyment of the simple privileges of divine appointment, the need of mutual comfort and provocation to love and good works, and the inspiration of faithful hearts, should cause the church home to be ever beautiful, chaste and clean, in structure, in maintenance, and in its setting.

Settled society properly withholds confidence from that which seems transient and ephemeral, while the appearance of permanence begets assurance. Shabby and dismal exteriors speak of hopelessness within. The appearance of unsuccess invites oblivion. Men seek success and will investigate that which seems to be in the enjoyment of it.

A man may exist without a home. He may find provender here and there, and sleep in unsought places. He may wear his rags with cheerful unconcern and make his abode the boundless out-of-doors. But his manhood can never thus be full. He is dead, while yet he lives, to all the life which home and social ties beget. Homelessness and fruitlessness are inseparable companions.

A church can exist without a respectable church home, a building made progressively sacred by precious memories accumulating there. A church can sleep in tents and halls and doleful shacks. But the sense of sonship and of brotherhood can never thus be full. A homeless church is foredoomed to a losing struggle for existence.

But whisper to that church the hope of fixedness, of permanence, of home. Despondent fears flee speedily, lethargy is swallowed up in awakened energy. The hope of wider usefulness imparts new breath of life. The little group quickens to the sense of brotherhood, the energies of the mass thrill the part, the church responds to the call for effectiveness, and triumphant conquest is won from the maw of defeat.

This is no figment of poetic fancy. The history of our Church Extension work is a veritable drama of such spiritual quickening. During the seventeen years that this friendship trust fund of the brotherhood has been going out from Kansas City, the ideal has become a reality at least 900 times. Having helped these churches to acquire their homes of worship and work, 390 times the money has come back in full to be sent out to buy more friendships in the Lord. In 430 instances the loans have been paid back in part and what has been returned has been quickly sent forth on the same beneficent ministry.

A total fund of over $460,000 is now singing its happy way for us, a rondeau of helpful fellowship. This money has called into the Lord's work at least $1,380,000 additional, which might otherwise have been withheld from this glorious use.

We have been able to give help to less than half of the calls set before us. There are even now 600 opportunities awaiting your response. From the wakening south and the envigored north, from populous east and peopling west, from every hand the cry of homelessness is seeking to rouse them who abide at home, the unhelped are seeking help to become more helpful.

This is the one discordant note in what ought to be a perfect harmony of acclaim. So slow is our great brotherhood to strike hands heartily with these weaker places. Tardily and with evident reluctance to these funds come to strengthen feeble knees and lift up the hands that hang down.

Out of 11,260 congregations which we number only 1,269 had a part last year in this work of home-making. Out of $770,000 given for missions last year by 1,234,000 Disciples of Christ less than $69,000 was set apart to help the homeless to acquire homes. We could profitably use at this moment a fund of ten million. With such a sum to strengthen this right hand of our fellowship we could help to build one church home every working day of the year, comfort the hearts of multitudes of hungry saints, help to win other multitudes to the Lord's cause, stop many channels of appalling loss, and give new impetus and fervor to all our missions.

In our care of all investments made through us we must observe with scrupulous exactness the proprieties of business procedure. We must comply with the property laws of the different states. We must impose restrictions on those to whom we loan these friendship funds. And yet, although we insist on all the essentials of kindred commercial transactions, the churches are made to feel that the source of their help is not a board but a brotherhood, that their need is supplied not by a soulless and unfeeling money lender, but by brethren whose interests and theirs are identical, by friends whose hearts are moved with compassion to make their arms of strength the encircling help of a brother's weakness.

a youth he spent the winters in Richmond, as a page of the state senate; and when fifteen years of age he obeyed the gospel under the preaching of A. B. Walthall. In September of 1868 he entered Bethany College, to prepare for the ministry, spending three years there, and during vacations preaching in eastern Virginia, and for several months in 1870 serving the church at Washington, Pa., while still a student. Graduating in 1871, he was ordained at the Tidewater Convention, and took charge of Smyrna Church, King and Queen county; Jerusalem, King William county, and Olive Branch, James City county. These congregations were far apart, and the young theologue had to do a good deal of horseback riding; but he regarded the two years spent with these country churches as of the greatest value to him. In 1874 he accepted a call to the church at Charlottesville, Va., for the purpose of taking lectures at the university; but one Lord's day in each month was given to Gilboa. He married Miss Emily Alsop, of Fredericksburg, and was soon called to Bethany College as adjunct professor of ancient languages. For his duties as pastor he received $500 a year. In 1875 he was called to Washington, but first declined the invitation. It was after a personal visit by one of the elders of the church that he was induced to visit the brethren in the Capitol City, and the result was an engagement upon which he entered in September.

An Interior Unbelief

By William Durban

Here, in great, teeming, booming London, big questions have their origin. And on these questions controversies hum and buzz incessantly. One difficulty about these constant discussions is that they overlap. For instance, the higher critical problem is now complicated by another. The Anglican dignitaries, who have leisure for study in their deaneries and residentiary canonries, have been of late plunging with extraordinary ardour into the question whether they have any right at all to criticise the Bible. Now, a storm has broken out both at Westminster and St. Paul's, because this question again is being entangled with a third puzzle, in which some of the same clergymen are involved. Canon Hensley Henson, of Westminster, is at this moment fighting vigorously on two issues at once. This is not a little bewildering to interested lookers-on. I will explain; for the subjects are of supreme importance to Christians in all lands.

THE RIGHT TO CRITICISE.

Some organs of the daily press are bristling with letters from indignant Christian people, who declaim at the doubts cast by Canon Hensley Henson, the dean of Ripon, and other noted clergymen, on the supernatural elements in the Bible. These famous men are doubtless misunderstood. They are excellent Christian men, are fine scholars, are eminently devout, and are esteemed for the beauty of their lives and the charitable spirit they show. Canon Henson has done all in his power to display a sentiment of brotherhood toward Nonconformists. And Dean Fremantle is personally beloved by all who know him. I have the honor of his friendship. But these famous preachers and writers and some others like them are fearless in their expression of individual opinion. They therefore have given some staggering shocks, not only to narrow-minded or poorly-informed good people, but also to some of the evangelicals who are as scholarly and intelligent as themselves. For we must take care to note that, in these days of energetic thinking, effusive speaking and trenchant writing, the best representatives of all parties are coming into collision simply through intense anxiety for the truth. I have equal esteem and respect for Canon Hensley Henson, with whose critical position I can not manage to agree; for Dean Fremantle, whose liberalism I endorse to a greater extent, though not entirely; for Prebendary Webb-Peploe, of St. Paul's, whose sturdy Protestantism claims my unreserved admiration; and for Canon Scott Holland, whose High Church ceremonialism repels me. I have been able to grasp the fact that each of these leaders is fighting for what seems to him to be a noble ideal and that he is willingly incurring obloquy and reproach for its sake. Each is contending for his own individual right to criticise everything that is amenable to the operation of human reason, and which appeals to the conscience, including the Bible. But we are listening to a clamoring multitude who pour letters into the press contending, on the contrary, that the clergy have "no right to criticise the Bible." Every day the thought occurs to me that the Bible must be a very poor production if it will not bear criticism just as Homer, Virgil, Horace and Shakespeare have to endure it. While I think the destructives have destroyed themselves as we have quietly—many of us—looked on and waited, and while I consider that the extreme critics have committed critical suicide—for this is confessed in Germany itself—I am at the same time thankful for the process of criticism. Whatever we have had to give up is much more than compensated for by the everlasting confirmation of the validity of the Pentateuch and the historical books of the Old Testament.

SHOULD POLITICS BE TOUCHED BY CHRISTIAN CHURCHES?

While the questions pertaining to the mere fact of criticism are still being vehemently controverted, Sir Robert Anderson, Bishop Welldon, and others, hotly accusing the critics of profaning Moses and massacring Abraham, the whole subject of supernaturalism is being debated over again. It is singular to see whole columns daily occupied in morning papers by animated and elaborate letters on the miraculous. This shows how religious thought is coming to the front. It can give no pleasure to the infidel. Editors must be conscious that the public mind has now come to feel an absorbing interest in spiritual things. Is not this a marvelous sign of the day? I do not feel specially concerned by the talk about indifference, for the real indications are all the other way.

And now, in the third place, while the air resounds with the echoes of the dual debate on criticism and miracles, the two topics, separate in themselves, being mingled together, there comes in a third reverberation of opinion. I have sometimes listened to an organ or an orchestra performing a massive piece of music. During some mazy passages the original and initial "thema" seemed to be lost, but suddenly it began to sound forth down in the bass and then crept up into the tenor, then mounted to the alto, and finally soared triumphantly to the soprano. So the thematic strain was victorious and one's soul exulted in the majesty of the ascending subject of the composer's mind. So it is with truth. Here we have been listening to the confused jargon of theological debate, with Darwinism, Spencerism, Weismannism, Haeckelism and Wellhausenism all jumbled. But all at once we hear quietly sounding forth the low murmur of the protest of scholars like Sayce, Pinches, Budge,

GET POWER
The Supply Comes From Food.

If we get power from food, why not strive to get all the power we can. That is only possible by use of skilfully selected food that exactly fits the requirements of the body.

Poor fuel makes a poor fire and a poor fire is not a good steam producer.

"From not knowing how to select the right food to fit my needs, I suffered grievously for a long time from stomach troubles," writes a lady from a little town in Missouri.

"It seemed as if I would never be able to find out the sort of food that was best for me. Hardly anything that I could eat would stay on my stomach. Every attempt gave me heart-burn and filled my stomach with gas. I got thinner and thinner until I literally became a living skeleton and in time was compelled to keep to my bed.

"A few months ago I was persuaded to try Grape-Nuts food, and it had such good effect from the very beginning that I have kept up its use ever since. I was surprised at the ease with which I digested it. It proved to be just what I needed. All my unpleasant symptoms, the heart-burn, the inflated feeling which gave me so much pain disappeared. My weight gradually increased from 98 to 116 lbs, my figure rounded out, my strength came back, and I am now able to do my housework and enjoy it. The Grape-Nuts food did it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A ten days trial will show anyone some facts about food.

"There's a reason."

Petrie—all masters of Orientalism and explorers in the dust where sphinxes have sat and the old palaces of Assyrian, Babylonian, Egyptian, Persian, and Hittite kings have been buried. And that protest is prevailing. It is swelling into loud echoes. And the vindication of the prophets and the chroniclers is, I should say, complete after the marvelous discoveries of Bethel temples at Sinai last winter by Flinders Petrie.

But, while all these wondrous minglings and comminglings of clashing records and discussions press on our minds, up comes the new quarrel among the London divines and their friends, as to whether the Christian churches have any right to interfere in the realm of the political. It may be said that this is a very old question. But it has never been settled. Once more it is the famous Westminster Canon, the irrepressible Dr. Henson, who has burst into the arena with a combative proposition. He has sounded the signal for a tornado. He vehemently attacked Mr. Silvester Horne, pastor of Whitefield's tabernacle, because at the Sunday afternoon meeting of men a member of Parliament, a Radical, had been invited to speak and chose as his topic "How We Won East Finsbury." Canon Scott Holland rushed into print promptly to defend Mr. Horne and his Free Church, though the Canon is a high dignitary of St. Paul's, for he is the leader of the curious wing of the High Church Christian Socialists. This in itself serves to show how the lines are crossing, how we are all getting mixed up in an "olla podrida" of sentiment and opinion, but at the same time how very much more alive and alert is religious thought than in the days of our fathers, who thought that sound doctrine was everything, but never could define which doctrines were sound and which were unsound. The fact is that the Christian churches must take more note of politics than they have ever yet done if society is to be saved. The political parson is a blunderer, but so is the parson who declines to inculcate the necessity of political righteousness. Applied Christianity is one of the prime essentials of the hour. If all the Plymouth brethren and other sects which proclaim that Christians should abstain from exercising the practical privileges and responsibilities of the citizen and member of society were caught up to heaven tomorrow, the world would be absolutely ignorant that they had been among us. It cannot be the will of Christ that Christians should be thus ignored, for he and his disciples turned the world upside down. But such Christians as I have named would allow the devil very soon to turn it downside up again.

The Moral Content of Baptism.

By Rochester Irwin.

Has baptism a moral content? No, not when the external act alone is considered; for judged by the popular standard of morality, a person is neither better nor worse after baptism than he was before. He has done nothing which, in and of itself, could make the world happier or better. He has, perhaps, become more potentially moral because of the influence of the act upon him, objectifying, as it does, the fundamental facts of the Gospel; so, probably, have some who have witnessed the ceremony. But, as an act simply, it has no more moral content than the eating of the forbidden fruit by the first pair of human beings.

Had God said in Eden: "Thou shalt not kill," or had Peter said on Pentecost: "Repent and give alms," no person could fail to see the propriety and rightness of obeying the command. But what wrong could there be in eating of a tree that was "good for food, a delight to the eyes, and to be desired to make one wise"? or what good could accrue from being submerged and withdrawn from water? The moral content here is not so evident; I maintain, however, that it is of a higher degree than in the supposed cases. To illustrate my argument:

A certain king desiring to employ a servant who would implicitly obey him, regardless of the seeming uselessness and absurdity of the task, set two of the many applicants for positions in his service to filling a large basket with water which they were required to draw with buckets from a well. Of course the water ran out of the basket as quickly as it was poured in, leaving the task after an hour's labor apparently no nearer completion than at first. This was too much for one of the men, and he gave up the job, declaring that he would serve no man, be he king or what not, who would request him to do such unreasonable things. The other, however, persevered until all the water was drawn from the well. As he poured the last bucket of muddy water into the basket, he noticed something bright and sparkling fall in with the sediment from the bottom of the well. Behold, it was a diamond ring! He quickly ran with it to the king, who was much pleased to recover his ring, but more pleased to have discovered such a willing and obedient servant, to whom he at once gave an important position in his service.

And so, when the rite of baptism is faithfully observed by those who thus express an internal state of willingness to dispose themselves in trust and unquestioning obedience to the commands of the "King of kings," it becomes an exceedingly moral act. What, after all, determines what is moral and what is not? Is it not a judgment based on a generally accepted standard which, in its last analysis, ends in a dogmatism? And who could better dogmatize than he who could with perfect propriety speak as "One having authority"?

Baptism may be classed with the ultimate tests of morality; by which I mean those acts of surrender and loyalty which prove an unfaltering trust which is the legitimate product of a living faith. In a world where nothing can certainly be known to be good, true or enduring, except as judged by an infallible standard, and since no standard has ever transcended the revelation of truth made evident in Jesus Christ, it behooves him who would be regarded as moral in the eyes of the "Most High" to trust and obey as a little child the dictates of him who was "The Way, the Truth, and the Life."

"I would rather walk in the dark with God
Than by myself in the light."

AT THE PARSONAGE

Coffee Runs Riot No Longer.

"Wife and I had a serious time of it while we were coffee drinkers.

"She had gastritis, headaches, belching and would have periods of sickness while I secured a daily headache that became chronic.

"We naturally sought relief by drugs and without avail, for it is now plain enough that no drug will cure the diseases another drug, coffee sets up, particularly, so long as the drug which causes the trouble is continued.

"Finally we thought we would try leaving off coffee and using Postum. I noticed that my headaches disappeared like magic and my old 'trembly' nervousness left. One day wife said, 'Do you know my gastritis has gone?'

"One can hardly realize what Postum has done for us.

"Then we began to talk to others. Wife's father and mother were both coffee drinkers and sufferers. Their headaches left entirely, a short time after they changed the old coffee for Postum. I began to enquire among my parishioners and found to my astonishment that numbers of them use Postum in place of coffee. Many of the ministers who have visited our parsonage have become enthusiastic champions of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

—Plans are under way for a new building for the Boyle Heights Church, Los Angeles, where Walter L. Martin is the minister.

—The Sunday school offering for home missions is next in order. The Lord's day before Thanksgiving is the time for this offering.

—Z. T. Sweeney is to dedicate the new church at Murray, Ky., October 8. He has just dedicated a handsome new building at Canton, O.

—The Martin Family, evangelists, have been busy all summer. They have preached to great crowds, and have added hundreds to the churches.

—A. T. Campbell has left Toronto, Can., and will locate in the United States. The Monroe Street Church, at Chicago, has extended him a call.

—Our preacher at Salina, Kan., who is also the mayor of the city, is building his own house, working at the carpenter's trade during his vacation.

—The new property of our North Side Christian Church, Chicago, was dedicated on Lord's day. There was a special union service in the afternoon.

—Two young men from our Japanese mission at Los Angeles have gone to Lexington, Ky., to prepare themselves for the ministry in their own country.

—J. S. Bonham is already at work in his new field at Findlay, O. The Nineteenth District Convention will be held with the First Church, October 23, 24.

—A beautiful new church at Lucas, Tex., has just been dedicated by A. J. Bush and R. C. Horn. A meeting is being continued by Brother Bush.

—One of the Des Moines papers recently gave a whole page write-up of Drake University. Progress is being made with the Bible building at Drake.

—The Northeast Georgia District Convention meets at Loganville, October 9, and the Griffin District Convention at Ringgold, Catoosa county, October 18, 19.

—The Fourth District Convention of Ohio will be held at Coshocton, October 9 and 10. Entertainment will be furnished free. A good program has been arranged.

—A number of Catholics were among those who attended the course of lectures just delivered at Alma, Tex., by H. E. Luck, on "The Founding of Christianity."

—Harry G. Hill, secretary of the National Education Society, has decided to spend a month or two on the firing line. This notice ought to bring him many calls.

—E. M. Pardee and wife, who are now in this country, will not return to Porto Rico, on account of the climate. Brother Pardee expects to locate with some Iowa church.

—The Second Church, Johnstown, Pa., has not yet called a pastor. The members of the First Church are hopeful that their new building will be under roof by November 15.

—Thomas Martin has given notice to the church at Sandy Lake, Pa., that he will not be open for engagement next year, as he expects to spend the winter in evangelistic work.

—Robert E. Moss, of Maysville, Ky., has received a call from the church at Franklin, Ind., which has a membership of over nine hundred and a $35,000 building, erected a few years ago.

—T. J. Golightly has, at his request, been released from the church at Lebanon, Ky., to attend Yale Divinity School, where he has been granted a scholarship and advanced standing.

—Stephen J. Corey is on an extended trip, attending conventions and addressing churches in the interest of world-wide missions in Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Kansas and Missouri.

—Our people at Des Moines are bestirring themselves to prevent the establishment of a brewery in that city. I. N. McCash had an article published on this subject in a recent issue of the Des Moines "Daily News."

—A. H. Darnell, of Cisco, Tex., has accepted the work of district evangelist for the new district formed of East Blanco, Stephens, Shackelford, Callahan, Erath and Hood counties, Texas.

—J. L. Thompson, of Peru, Ind., has decided to accept a call extended to him by the Temple Church, Decatur, Ill., and he will begin his new work at the close of the Cincinnati meeting.

—Ward Russell reports that the church building begun last fall at Florence, Col., will be completed at no distant day. Brother Russell has just returned from a two months' trip in Europe.

—J. D. Forsyth has received a call from the church at Peru, Neb., and begins October 1. The State Normal is located at this place, and the change leaves a vacancy in the pastorate at Fredonia, Kan.

—D. A. Russell's severing his connection with the church at Red Bluff, Cal., to become the corresponding secretary of the state board, has led up to some very complimentary resolutions about himself and wife.

—P. C. MacFarlane, who was very much troubled with rheumatism during the convention, has left Alameda to find relief in some hot springs. His pulpit is being supplied by Professor Elston and Dean Van Kirk.

—There is to be a new church building at Oakland, Cal., where Brother Scoville's meeting resulted in 118 additions. On the following Lord's day after the close of the meeting $14,000 were pledged for a new church.

—F. E. Billington, the new corresponding secretary for Oregon, has entered upon his work with a great deal of energy, and if the brethren will rally around him our cause in that fine state will be greatly advanced.

—O. G. Hertzog, of Hiram, O., has been engaged by the Foreign Society to solicit special funds to aid our educational institutions in foreign lands. He will begin his new duties some time betwen this and January.

—W. H. Fields and wife have just been given a farewell reception by the church at Beaver, Pa., where they have labored faithfully since January, 1901. They leave to take up the work for the First Christian Church of Wheeling, W. Va.

—The New England convention will be held at Roxbury, Mass., September 28 to October 1, and a good program has been prepared. Any of our brethren in the neighborhood of Boston should make a point of going out to the St. James Street Church and encouraging those who are holding up our standard in the east.

BIBLE COLLEGE AT HOME.

If you can not go to college, the college can go to you. Let us send you our new illustrated catalogue. Write Chas. J. Burton, President Christian College, Oskaloosa, Ia.

—Charles T. Paul was to sail from Genoa, en route to China, via the North German Lloyd steamer on September 13. Brother Paul preached for our church in Liverpool when passing through that city.

—Bruce Brown advertises a series of sermons, and among them we note two contrasting religion as exemplified by Messrs. Rockefeller and Morgan, and as exemplified by Messrs. Bryan and Roosevelt.

—Percy G. Cross has resigned at Pine Bluff, Ark., the malarial climate of that neighborhood not suiting his wife. Over one hundred additions have been made to the church since Brother Cross took charge, in June, 1904.

—Ellsworth Farris, who was lately one of our missionaries on the Congo, has prepared two lectures about that country and his journey there. These are illustrated by stereopticon slides. Brother Farris is now associated with his father on the "Christian Courier," Dallas, Tex.

—Charles G. Stout, state evangelist of Iowa, who is in the midst of a meeting at Lohrville, says that the brethren there are talking of building, and the ladies have a lot paid for and pledges to the amount of over $1,300, which makes a good start for a building fund.

—There is a movement on foot to erect a building for our church at Bridgeport, Conn., where the need for a building is very great. The brethren are now meeting in an unused school house, permission for the use of which was granted by the board of education.

—We published in a recent issue something about the unique work of the Christian Temple at Baltimore, of which Peter Ainslee has charge. In a late issue of the "Baltimore News" there is more than half a column about this Bible school, which welcomes all denominations.

—One-half of the receipts from Boys' and Girls' Rally Day is returned to the state contributing for state work. This keeps state and national home missions in the hearts of the Sunday school children, and binds them into common interest.

—E. W. Darst reports that the simultaneous revival is taking deep root about San Francisco Bay. One new church will be organized as a result of the campaign, which the Bureau of Evangelism is supporting.

—Hugh T. Morrison has reached the end of his ten-thousand-mile journey, and may be addressed at 85 Abel Smith street, Wellington, New Zealand. We hope to find space for a letter from Brother Morrison at an early date.

—Harold E. Monser has decided that he can do more good in the evangelistic field, and is already at work at Heyworth, Ill. He will move to Champaign, Ill., in October. He reports that correspondence is going on with a man for Kewanee.

—The South District Convention of Missouri will meet at Nevada, October 3-5. H. James Crockett reports that all things are ready and a great meeting is expected. The Nevada church will entertain all visitors free, and churches should send delegates.

—We have received a copy of the resolutions of appreciation passed by our church at Ames, Ia., in respect to their pastor, F. D. Ferrall, who has accepted the work at Bloomfield, Ia. The resolutions speak highly of Brother and Sister Ferrall, both as workers and as exemplars of the Christian life.

—The Southeast Minnesota Convention will be held at Rochester, October 12-14. The prominent subject to be discussed is the question of evangelism, and at least nine addresses are to be given on different phases of revival work. This gathering ought to be productive of a great deal of good to the work in Minnesota.

—We clip the following from the "Christian Courier": "The editor of the 'Courier,' brown as a berry, returned Tuesday morning from California. He looks ten years younger, says he feels rejuvenated, and that he had a glorious time; but that grand old Texas looks 'mighty good' after all those rocks and canons."

—"Our work for the Master prospers in every way; our membership is united and enthusiastic." So writes E. Richard Edwards, of the First Christian Church, Bedford, Ind., which, by the way, is now in possession of a handsome pipe organ, the gift of the ladies, which was used for the first time on September 1.

—There have been 145 additions to the church at Shelbyville, Ind., since H. O. Pritchard entered upon the pastorate, January, 1904, and the number added during the present year is 61. Every department of the church is in good conditon. H. H. Harmon takes charge during Brother Pritchard's eight months' leave of absence for study at Yale.

—The Northwestern Iowa District Convention is being held this week at Sac City. Next week the Northeast will be held at Waterloo; the following week the Central at DeSoto, and the week after that the Southeast at Bloomfield. These conventions begin on the Tuesday night and close on the Thursday night, each week.

—William Baier, of Marcus, Ia., has just welcomed to his fellowship E. N. Spofford, of Champlain, Minn., who was formerly a professor in Parker College, and for the past eight years has been pastor of the Baptist church at Champlain. "He comes," says Brother Baier, "with a clean record and is a strong man."

—We have heard of one church which believes that there should be a Christian paper in every home providing a fund for this purpose by taking a certain portion from the offering each Lord's day morning, and charging it to the literature fund, which is then used to cover the cost of subscriptions for a religious newspaper to go to every home.

—The corner stone of the new Central Church of Christ, at Streator, Ill., was laid last Lord's day. James H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, delivered the address. The building is to be of brick and stone, and will cost about $13,000. We congratulate the pastor, Chas. Hougham, and congregation on the prospects of dedicating by January.

—W. W. Wharton and O. C. Bolman were at Hillsboro and Pana, Ill., September 11 and 12, encouraging the churches at those places, where the churches have been recently organized by the Fifth District Board, of which they are the officers. They report excellent progress, and believe we will soon have strong congregations at both places.

—"Our plea is fast getting a grip in this country, and the outlook for the new year is very bright, indeed." So writes F. Hooker Groom, of Weleetka, I. T., where we have the strongest church in the town. Brother Groom says that there are an unusually large number of home-seekers coming to that part of the country, and he believes that our brethren should visit his town before locating. He will be very glad to correspond with any who may desire information.

—The church at Dexter, Mo., has given R. H. Lampkin, of Wolcott, Ind., a unanimous call and raised $150 more for his salary than the church has ever paid before. In order to accommodate the growing needs of the work, it was voted last Lord's day to build a $1,000 annex to the church. R. Clyde Tucker, the church clerk, reports that the prospects for the future are very bright.

—J. J. Taylor, who has been holding a meeting in Owingsville, Ky., writes of one effect this had on the liquor interests. A town election was held the day before the meeting closed, and just as the polls opened a great choir assembled on the church steps, opposite one of the voting booths, and began to sing, "Stand up, stand up for Jesus!" The effect was marvelous, and the saloons were voted out of the town and county.

—We are glad to note the following in the "Bulletin" of the Christian church at Peoria, Ill.: "We have as our guest today Carey E. Morgan, father of our Bro. Walter Morgan, and pastor of our church in Paris, Ky. He is returning from a trip on the upper great lakes, and is being entertained at the home of his boyhood friend, A. J. Elliott. We are glad to welcome him." This indicates that Brother Morgan is much better, after some recent trials of the operating table.

—F. L. Van Voorhis reports that the building enterprise at Okmulgee, I. T., is on the way to success—that bids will soon

CHRISTIAN BELIEF INTERPRETED BY CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE

By CHARLES CUTHBERT HALL

President of Union Theological Seminary, New York

This interesting volume contains the "Barrows Lectures" delivered by President Hall in the leading cities of India and Japan, in connection with the lectureship founded by Mrs. Caroline E. Haskell.

In these days, when the momentous events in the Far East have quickened an interest in all things oriental, this thoughtful and earnest work should be welcomed by everyone who desires to go below the surface for an explanation of the message from the mysterious East for which all are waiting.

be advertised for, and one of the best houses in the territory will be erected. He recently preached at Checotah, where he found a splendid little band of Christians. At the opening of the new town of Hoffman our people got the promise of a building site for a church, and a meeting will be held a little later with the purpose of establishing a permanent work.

—The gift of $500, received from the Independence Avenue Christian Church, being part of the thank-offering made by that people at the time of the dedication of their new building, comes at a particularly opportune time to our National Benevolent Association, seeing that heavy appropriations have been made for the establishment of a new orphanage in St. Louis, in addition to the Old People's Home at Jacksonville, Ill., and the establishment of a new orphanage at Baldwin, Ga.

—Up to September 18 not a single member of either of our churches in New Orleans had had the fever. The Sunday morning services and the prayer meetings are well attended. Marcellus Ely, the pastor of one of the churches, has had his vacation period lengthened by reason of the disease, and he is evangelizing in Missouri. A church was organized in a country district, five miles from Joplin, with thirty-two members, and it will not be long, doubtless, until the brethren will have a house of their own.

—The eleventh anniversary of S. S. Jones as pastor of the Third Church at Danville, Ill., has just been celebrated, and from a report published in the "Daily Democrat" of that city we note that there have been 1,643 additions to the church during his pastorate, 885 of whom were from the world. Brother Jones was formerly pastor of the First Church, and for a few months supply pastor for the Second Church, finally organizing the congregation that has erected the handsome edifice in the north end of the city.

—M. D. Clubb writes in the "Pacific Christian" very enthusiastically of the visit of E. L. Powell to the church at Watsonville, Cal. Among other results of that visit was the raising of $1,500 in a few moments, after an address by Brother Powell at the opera house on behalf of the Y. M. C. A. Before he left the city the board of directors of the association presented Brother Powell with a solid gold watch fob as a slight token of appreciation of his service in behalf of the association.

—A. C. Smither reports the sailing on the steamship China of eleven of our missionaries for various stations in the foreign field. "As the steamer put out to sea the party was gathered on the deck, one of them holding up Old Glory, while back from over the water came those matchless words, 'My country, 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty.'" Brother Smither goes on to say that "no tears were shed, no hearts were bowed with grief; all was laughter and enthusiasm. Such is the spirit of our religion."

—Christian churches in Cincinnati and neighborhood are to begin a simultaneous evangelistic campaign on October 8. A corps of strong representative men will do the preaching. Any reader of The Christian-Evangelist who knows members of the Christian Church in Cincinnati who have not identified themselves with any of our churches there will do a good thing if they will send the names and addresses of such people to W. J. Wright, superintendent of evangelism, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O. A card written to the individual, urging attendance at the revival services, may stir in the hearts of these lax brethren fires that are smoldering.

—The Home Board is just now calling attention to Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, the day on which the schools are asked to make their offering for home missions. A charming exercise has been prepared for the help of such schools as take pride in making their day of offering a day of festal privilege. We are anxious that all schools should be enrolled in this class of doers, for certainly no field appeals more directly or more strongly to the enthusiastic missionary heart than the field of our own country. We should, by all means, have five thousand schools observing the day this year.

—The good work goes steadily forward at the University Church, Des Moines. Brother Medbury took but two weeks' vacation, even depriving himself of the pleasure of attending the national convention. Audiences were uniformly large during the heated term, and not a service was missed. Considerably over three hundred have been added since January 1, and in full view of its uniform growth and progress it is safe to say that this great church was never before so thoroughly animated with a spirit of devotion to the wonderful work to which the Lord has called it, in a position of such commanding influence.

—J. P. Allison's resignation at Bellaire, O., has been accepted, though with regret. He leaves about November 1, having been with the Bellaire church since January, 1905. He has done a good work, and Brother C. M. Rodefer, a member of the board of deacons, believes that the harvest to be gathered by his successor will be a plenteous one. Letters addressed to the church clerk will reach the committee on pulpit supply. Brother Rodefer writes: "In the change that Brother Allison is about to make he will be benefited in many ways, and not the least to be considered among the inducements was a marked increase in salary. Thus we like to see our young men in the ministry grow and be sought after. As he enters his new field in Cleveland, he goes followed by our prayers and hopes for every possible success. That the Dunham Avenue Church has a good man we know, and our hopes are that together they may do much for the Master's work."

—At the farewell reception given to Brother B. Q. Denham and wife, by the members of the Fifty-sixth Street Church, New York, there was a representative gathering. After an hour of social intercourse a program was rendered, and in the course of it some resolutions eulogistic of Brother Denham's work, and expressing the regret of the congregation at the severance of their relationship with him and his wife, were passed. Under his ministrations the membership has increased and the auxiliaries have received a new impulse. At a church meeting held in the latter part of June he was requested, unanimously, to withdraw his resignation, which he had tendered some time before; but business enterprises into which he had entered would not permit him to do this. Mr. Denham, in response to the resolutions and the speeches supporting them, referred to his six years' work and the difficulty confronting a minister in New York City, where a high degree of pulpit ability is required, and at the same time the people expect a great deal of church visiting. At the close of the reception Elder Robert Christie presented to Brother Denham a very handsome silver loving-cup on behalf of the church. Brother Denham goes to Florida to engage in orange culture.

—A year ago there was a debt of $2,000 on the Christian church at Greencastle, Ind. C. W. Cauble, the energetic pastor, has seen not only the necessity of clearing off this debt, but of putting some improvements on the church building. It is pleasant for us to note that not only has the debt been wiped out, but $1,600 has been spent on the church, and it has just been reopened, free of all incumbrance. The interior of the building has been somewhat remodeled, and it is in better shape every way for an aggressive work, which we are sure Brother Cauble will conduct. Having been one of "The Christian-Evan-

A Poem in Stone

The Finest Church in the Brotherhood

The dream of our pastor has been realized at last in what might very appropriately be called "a poem in stone"—the Independence Boulevard Christian Church building, Kansas City, Mo. No attempt can be made here to relate what victories have entered into this greatest one of the west in the shape of a congregation of Christians and their church building. It would take a philosophical Christian historian to perfect such a statement. The sage of Concord, Mass., once said, "All foregone days of virtue work their health into this day." There was an old Latin motto which is certainly true: "One day is pushed forward by another," and Coleridge, said, "In to-day already walks to-morrow." We may well remark, therefore, that in our dedication day all the past history of the Christian Church of Kansas City and of Missouri was walking. In recording church progress we must not only take into account the machinery now at work but we must remember that the spirit of all past progress is gathered up within it and is potent upon it. Christian forces, like those of nature, work cumulatively.

GEORGE H. COMBS.

The list of names that ought to be mentioned in connection with such a work as that culminating in the present plant on Independence Boulevard would be too long to print in the pages of any newspaper. Some require special mention, as will be accorded by all fair-minded people. Years ago, when T. P. Haley came to Kansas City, he found a growing city and like a wise man he planned for the future. To him should be accorded the credit of creating the spirit which to-day prevails in our Kansas City churches—that of unitedly going into new parts of the city to establish churches. As soon as the First church grew to fair proportions another was started on the West Side. This one co-operated with the First in organizing a third, now Forrest Avenue, on the South Side. These three started the Sixth and Prospect on the East Side, now Independence Boulevard Church. This spirit of unity and co-operation has continued until now we have thirteen well-housed and well-equipped congregations in Kansas City, practically out of debt for their buildings, all self-supporting and paying ministers for full time, with a resident membership of over five thousand and a mission at Mt. Washington which will be housed this year. No new work is projected, no house built except by the advice of the Joint Board, composed of all the boards of the different churches. When a work is organized it is pushed vigorously until the congregation is housed and provided with a preacher. There is no thought of making one work greater than the other, or at the expense of the other. If one church is better housed than another it is because it has grown up within a richer neighborhood and has had superior advantages of growth. Thus, when the mission child has been well started, to a very great extent it works out its own salvation.

Here should be mentioned some names of devoted business men and women who were blessed with talent and good fortune in making money, who gave it gladly and liberally to the starting and equipping of these missions, now our thirteen strong churches. Others gave as they were able, and their names are recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life, though we cannot mention them here. Let us mention those who were always first with large amounts to start the work and keep it going: E. P. Graves, David O. Smart, Langston Bacon, Dr. I. M. Ridge, R. L. Yeager, J. B. Atkins, James Hurt, E. L. La Force, Mrs. E. P. Graves, Mrs. Sarah H. Jenkins and Mrs. Mary J. Atkins. These people had the money and gave it. Without it the present victories would not have been possible.

The Independence Boulevard Christian Church was born in 1888 in a hall on Independence Boulevard as a mission Sunday-school to take care of the growing East Side. The church was organized the following year and the Sixth and Prospect building was erected and dedicated that year. This building was made possible by a gift of D. O. Smart, which amounted to nearly ten thousand dollars by the time the final indebtedness was paid. The church outgrew this building, necessitating the erection of the present church home, dedicated to the glory of God and the salvation of man on September 17. In this brief history the purpose is to show how many factors have entered into the present achievement. Had it not been for the princely gift of D. O. Smart, which made the Sixth and Prospect building possible at the right moment, giving our congregation recognition and standing at a critical time, the Independence Boulevard Church would never have risen to grace our city as a prominent landmark in our Christian development. To have a great purpose is to be half on the way. To give money for this purpose and then take God into company is to go the whole stage. This Brother Smart did at the crucial period and saved the Sixth and Prospect work for a great future.

John A. Brooks figured prominently at this time, as the pastor from 1888 to 1892 inclusive. His was an eloquent and persuasive gospel and many were added to the church. His reputation as a public man on account of his work in the Prohibition party and as its presidential candidate brought the church at once into prominence and people moving into Kansas City sought out this man and came into active membership. His pastorate was a great success until his resignation at the close of 1892.

The writer well remembers the first Lord's day morning of January, 1893. A slender, modest, graceful young man from Shelbyville, Ky., was in the pulpit, having been called to the leadership of the church by the congregation at Sixth and Prospect, without having been seen or heard by them. Men in whom we had confidence had recommended George H. Combs, and he was called to a great work. The sermon that morning was eloquent, with an appeal for men and women to love Christ and to consecrate themselves, body and soul, to him. This has been the keynote of his preaching all these years, and his life its illustration. As a congregation we have followed the leadership of this consecrated, powerful man at too long a distance and very stumblingly. But Brother Combs never failed to rally us from time to time until on Sunday, September 17, we stood on the heights all day in contemplation and in thankfulness for what, under God, we had been permitted to do.

In 1891, R. A. Long came from Columbus, Kan., to Kansas City. He had been in the lumber business there, but the field was too limited. From the first he succeeded, until now he is manager and principal owner of the Long-Bell Lumber Company, perhaps the strongest in the West. He was a member of the Christian church at Columbus, Kan., and when he came to Kansas City he did not forget his duty. His mother was anxious to have him enter the ministry. In this he disappointed her, but by his giving, and through his godly life, he has done more good than had he entered the regular ministry. His gift of $70,000 made the building of the Independence Boulevard Church possible. It is beautiful to note that in all of Brother Long's giving he has been seconded by his wife. I verily believe that Brother Long has succeeded because he has combined with his business ability a Christian method in dealing with his employes. He meets with his men at least once a year, and if President Roosevelt preaches to our nation in his prayer-meeting talks, R. A. Long preaches to all employers and to all lumber men the gospel of Christian treatment of employes. As a result all of his men believe in Mr. Long and work for his interests as for their own, because he has proven to them in practical helpfulness that their interests are one. I personally know that through two years of hard times he kept up the salaries of his men at a loss to himself of thousands of dollars. When I asked him how he could do this he replied, "They cannot stand reductions in salary. If I take proper care of my men now, God will help me to make it again in future years." That was in 1893. Since that time he has made money, and is to-day the most princely giver in our brotherhood. Every appeal is given the most careful notice and if he is able and thinks it worthy the gift receives attention. He is an example not only in what he gives, but in the way he does it. Such men are the hope and strength of a brotherhood. Let us pray for more such business men.

The Independence Boulevard Christian Church building is by far the handsomest and most complete house of worship in Kansas City or in the west. The location is ideal, being on the southwest corner of Independence and Gladstone Boulevards. The view from the front portico looks directly north on Gladstone Boulevard. People cannot see Kansas City without seeing this building. The church is designed in as nearly a pure Grecian Ionic style as is compatible with the requirements of a modern and useful church building. The exterior is of Phœinx stone for the lower story up to the main water table and blue Bedford stone for the balance of the work. Leading up from Independence Avenue are eleven steps to the porch. The plan of the auditorium starts with a Greek cross having shallow arms, the intersections of which are surmounted by a low dome penetrated to the sky and furnishing light through a shallow inner dome directly over the main auditorium. It is further lighted by windows from three arms of the cross. The treatment of the interior is white. The pews and woodwork are in mahogany and the gallery is seated with opera chairs. The carpets are green Wilton. The Sunday-school room is divided into twenty-three separate class rooms, partitioned by sliding doors, making it possible to throw the entire floor into one room. Other rooms, with study, parlor, primary rooms, cloak rooms, etc., make everything complete.

The dedicatory sermon was preached by Z. T. Sweeney from the text, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God," etc. The sermon was uplifting and inspiring. He divided his sermon into three parts: 1. Power for civilization; 2. For unitization; 3. For moralization. At the close $6,330 were raised for missions, R. A. Long and David O. Smart each giving $2,500, seconded by their wives. Three thousand dollars of this goes to city missions, $1,000 to the National Benevolent Association. The church was completely paid for before dedication and cost, furnishings included, $124,000. Of this amount, R. A. Long gave $70,000. The afternoon services were participated in by representative ministers from other religious bodies and from our own churches and judging by their speeches Christian union seemed near at hand. Realizing that a great work must be done by our church of 1,500 members a protracted meeting began Sunday night under the leadership of Chas. Reign Scoville and De Loss Smith. Great interest has been manifested in the erection of this building by letters and telegrams to our pastor from all over the land. Our membership is, therefore, made to feel that the eyes of a great brotherhood are upon us and that you consider this work your work as well. Brethren, pray for us that we may be kept in the faith and love of him who loved us and gave himself for us. Pray for our evangelists. Great crowds are coming every night and already people are turning to the Lord.

Ministerial Exchange.

The Christian church at Newkirk, Okla., wants a pastor to take charge at once. Address H. Garside, Newkirk, Okla.

Guy L. Zerby, 359 S. Academy, Galesburg, Ill., writes that he can put a few churches desiring meetings in touch with an evangelist of experience.

G. L. Brokaw, Des Moines, Ia., holds himself ready to accept calls in other states in his work as evangelist. It is wise, he says, to plan ahead for meetings.

W. H. Kern, 518 N. Garrison, St. Louis, can hold one meeting outside his regular work from the middle to the last of October.

N. A. Stull, Highland, Kan., wants a November meeting in western Missouri. He raises his own money.

J. P. Adcock, Pilot Point, Tex., would like to correspond with churches within 100 miles of Ft. Scott, Kan., that will need a preacher during 1906.

F. M. O'Neal and wife, singing evangelists, desire engagements during November and December. Address 842 W. Florida St., Springfield, Mo.

Harry Shields, Rochester, Ind., is a good singer and leader. He is available for work as singing evangelist.

Miss Lulu M. Rapp, Kendall, Mich., wishes to work as assistant pastor.

G. W. Thompson, pastor in Kirksville, Mo., is free to hold two or three meetings between now and Christmas. He is a good man. He will accept the free-will offerings as compensation.

Leonard V. Barbre, Terre Haute, Ind., can hold meetings during the autumn and winter. He has succeeded as a soul winner. Try him.

Arthur L. Haley, Butler, Ind., is highly commended as a singing evangelist. He is said to be a success both as leader and soloist. He is called a good personal worker. Such men should be kept busy.

The church at Westplains, Mo., wants a man for a meeting in the near future. A pure and consecrated man is desired.

J. J. Taylor, Lexington, Ky., who is highly commended by R. M. Campbell, Owingsville, Ky., where he has just closed a meeting with thirty-eight additions, is to help in the simultaneous campaign in Cincinnati and Pittsburg. He ought to be kept busy.

Cancer of the Face Yields to the Combination Oil Cure—After the X-Ray Failed.

Cambridge City, Ind., Aug. 8, '05.

This is to certify that in May last I applied to Dr. D. M. Bye Company of Indianapolis, for treatment of a sore on my face, which he pronounced a cancer, and treated it as such. After using his remedies one month, was entirely relieved and am now sound and well. Other physicians had treated it, including the use of the X-ray, without success.

My relief prompts me to say to those having the first appearance of cancer, to apply to that noted physician. ISAAC L. WHITELY.

We cure all forms of cancer and tumor with soothing, balmy oils. Most cases treated at home. Doctors, lawyers and ministers endorse it. Write for free books on cancer to the Home Office. Address DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Missouri State Mission Notes.

Back again after an absence of over three weeks in the trip to the national convention, the secretary wishes to express publicly his gratitude to F. E. Udell, who made it possible for him to take this great trip. It has been my desire ever since we began to talk about the convention going to 'Frisco, but I had given it up, when Brother Udell's generosity gave me the chance. May God bless him. I was born almost within hearing of the "boom" of the waves as the stormy Atlantic beat its waters on the shore, but it was not till Wednesday, Aug. 16, at Sunset Beach, a short distance from Los Angeles, that I saw the peaceful Pacific spread out before me and took a voyage on its bosom, and the delightful experience I shall never forget.

My hand can hardly be restrained as I think of all that we saw and experienced on the journey, and the delights of that great convention. I want to tell about it, but I must content myself with some observations that have to do with our work. Never did I realize the importance of our own state in its relation to our great country when viewed from the standpoint of the cause we plead, as I do now.

1. The country to be possessed is beyond description great. We started on the morning of Aug. 10, and with some pauses we were traveling for eight days, to be exact, about five days' travel as fast as steam could pull us before we reached San Francisco, and the return trip was just as long, yet in much of that country we are an unknown people. We have more people in either Boone, Callaway or Monroe counties than we have in the entire state of Montana, which is nearly twice as large as the state of Missouri. What a vast territory in which to plant churches of the primitive order that shall plead for the unity of God! And in this great task Missouri is destined to play the leading part.

2. She has already done this. There is not a church in all that great western land that has not in its membership more or less Missourians. The first church we found after entering California was San Bernardino, and Brother Wilhite, the pastor, told me that 150 of his members (nearly one-half) came from Missouri and had learned the "perfect way" in our Missouri churches. We visited a good many churches going and coming, and at every place the former Missourians flocked around us and gave us hearty welcome.

3. Missouri has largely shaped the character of our movement in all this mighty western land. In many of the churches the leading men, elders, deacons, Sunday school officers and teachers, are those who received their training in Missouri churches and Sunday schools. Not only so, but the ministry of that country is composed in large part of those who, in days gone by, had their names in the list of Missouri ministers. I am not wishing to exalt Missouri above her dues; I am just simply setting down facts as they came to me, and day by day I was impressed more and more with the importance, for all that country, of keeping our forces in our great state as mighty as possible.

The spirit of conquest ought to enthuse our people as never before. The strategic point for all this western empire is the state of Missouri; from her churches and her ministry in the days to come, as in days agone, must go the forces that shall win this great land for our Lord and King. What a privilege to be a sharer in this great work! How foolish to neglect a place of such strategic importance! Not to any of us who crossed the plains and saw the large possibilities that lie before us will our work in Missouri ever seem again a trivial thing.

As for your secretary, he has come back with greater desire, larger determination to exalt the work to which you have called him; he has a broader vision of the significance of state missions than ever before. To save Missouri for herself alone would be a grand achievement, but to save Missouri for the sake of this mighty empire in the west, for the great multitudes east, that yet know not the sweetness of this simple Gospel plea, for the country far up in the northland and for the "sweet sunny south," where the mocking birds sing and the magnolias bloom, yea, to save Missouri for the sake of this wide, wide world, this were an achievement worthy of the greatest people and the greatest leaders this world has ever seen.

Will you rally to such a call? This year should be and must be the very greatest in Missouri missions. The day for the offering is near—Lord's day, Nov. 5. Don't forget it. Get ready now.

The Oklahoma Convention

The fourteenth annual convention of the brotherhood of Oklahoma was held at Guthrie on September 11-14. The program provided for a discussion of all the varied interests of the work from the much neglected prayer meeting in the local church to the world-wide evangelism as represented by the Foreign Society. The attendance was up to the average, there being 115 registered delegates. The attendance of the Guthrie brethren was good, so that, notwithstanding the fact that this was a territorial convention, the audience was large and inspiring at all times. To a "tenderfoot," this first convention was full of special interest. It was a series of surprises. Here where the virgin soil had been broken only fifteen years ago came delegates representing still newer territory, and back of all these stood a brotherhood of 22,000, with 325 congregrations, and 160 of these housed in church homes, and with new buildings going up at the rate of a new house every eight days during the past two years Then the personnel of the convention was striking. There were such old veterans of the service, men of strength in other states in days past, as W. T. Maupin, J. C. Powell, and Dr. H. R. Walling, who are still active in this land of breeze and sunshine. Several of the leading pulpits were represented by new men who had come into the territory since the last convention, such as S. B. Moore, of Oklahoma City, J. M. Rhodes, of Perry, K. C. Ventress, of Guthrie, and O. L. Smith, of El Reno. Brother Moore had come from Atlanta, Ga., while the latter two had come from Illinois. Then came the men of action, the pioneer souls who are blazing the ways, where highways are hardly yet run. There was R. S. Smedley, the original, the unique, the rugged church builder and Gospel treasurer, the Elder John Smith of these modern times. It is the privilege of a lifetime to see the man and hear his story of pioneer service and doctrinal conflict. There was J. W. Cameron, a bronzed veteran, who looked like a young man. He was a man of nerve and energy. His story of raising dead congregations sounded like a lesson from the Gospel of John.

And C. M. Barnes, vigorous, active and resourceful, just from the new southwest, where the scattered Disciples were being gathered in as the fowl gathers her brood. His story of hopes wrecked by cyclones, and the reorganization that was soon effected sent a thrill of hope for the reality of modern heroism. And then came Geo. F. Thomas, the Saint John of the pioneer evangelists, plain, unassuming, spiritual. Yet his speech brought forth applause as he told the story of his great work. As he arose to speak we listened to hear what the bronzed man from the skirmish line would say; when he closed we were in tears of joy because we had heard a great message from a man of God.

And what reports! Smedley had built eleven houses, and traveled thousands of miles. Cameron had preached 212 sermons, traveled 3,370 miles, built eight church houses and added 213 to the church. Barnes, in seven and one-half months, had traveled 3,500 miles, organized five congregations, built two houses and received 127 accessions. Thomas had since March preached 190 sermons, bought two church buildings and built another, received 225 souls into the kingdom of grace. Brother Timble, another living link evangelist, did not attend, because he was in a meeting with 38 accessions and the interest still rising. And much else had been accomplished by these evangelists that could not be recorded in reports.

W. A. Humphrey, of Guthrie and Hon. Dick T. Morgan, of Woodward, one from business life and the other from a federal position, presided over the sessions with the exception of the C. W. B. M., over which Mrs. W. W. Storm, of Oklahoma City, presided, and the Christian Endeavor session, which was directed by Miss Mary F. Lawson, of El Reno.

Brother Morgan delivered a strong address, which was the fourteenth time he had presided over an Oklahoma convention. His services have been legion, and the brethren would not release him from further service.

J. M. Monroe, with the treasurer, C. M. Jackman, reported five living link evangelists provided for, all bills met and a balance in the treasury. This reflects great credit on J. M. Monroe. He was also recalled to serve on in the position of corresponding secretary. Mrs. Storm and Mrs. M. A. Lacy were re-elected to lead the C. W. B. M. forces.

Geo. L. Snively delivered two evening addresses; one instead of G. W. Muckley on his own work, and the second in place of C. C. Smith, who failed to attend. H. F. Davis, of Missouri, was so popular as a book agent as to be pressed into service in the absence of B. L. Smith. Brother Davis brought such a strong message on the work of the Holy Spirit in our work that we rejoiced at the fact that he had come among us. He also did valuable service in the Bible school session.

But none were more highly appreciated than Stephen J. Corey in his message concerning the heart of the New Testament. The committees were all at work and brought in thoroughly prepared reports. The Ways and Means Committee reported on four questions. The policy of the past was endorsed, which provided for five living link evangelists and the corrresponding secretary's salary. The living link men were provided for by Guthrie and El Reno churches, Brother and Sister J. M. Monroe, and the C. W. B. M., which provided for two. The A. C. M. S. also appropriated $600 to apply on the corresponding secretary's salary. The evangelists have been organizing and building in the new parts, while the corresponding secretary has been dedicating churches. The second item asked that all workers should seek to locate pastors as much as possible. The third called for the inauguration of an Oklahoma day on the first Lord's day in November, while the fourth enphasized the territorial paper, "The Clarion."

A policy of creating standing committees was inaugurated. They are as follows:

Sunday School.—Dick T. Morgan, of Woodward; H. L. Hutchison, of Perry; and W. A. Humphrey, of Guthrie.

Christian Endeavor.—Miss Mary F. Lawson and J. C. Hubbard, of El Reno, and Miss Van Vorhies, of Oklahoma City.

Education.—K. C. Ventress; of Guthrie; Dick T. Morgan, J. M. Monroe and C. H. Everest, of Oklahoma City.

By-laws.—O. L. Smith, K. C. Ventress and Dick T. Morgan.

Home Missions.—K. C. Ventress, chairman.

Foreign Missions.—O. L. Smith, chairman.

Church Extension.—J. M. Rhodes, of Perry; Virtes Williams, of Stillwater, and W. D. Woods, of Edmond.

Christian Benevolence.—Isom Roberts, of Blackwell; Scott Anderson, of Enid; and R. H. Love, Ponca City.

The new board consists of Dick T. Morgan, K. C. Ventress, W. A. Humphrey, Dr. Bacon, of Pawnee, C. H. Everest, S. B. Moore and C. A. Halsel, of Oklahoma City, Isom Roberts, of Blackwell, Virtes Williams and L. C. Dillen, of Stillwater, C. M. Jackman and O. L. Smith, of El Reno.

Oklahoma is still a ripe field for great work. No man could possibly do more good than to invest $300 and secure a living link evangelist. No church could do more with $300 than to do the same. When such new churches as El Reno and Guthrie enter the list, there is a demonstration of the Macedonian call and the great possibilities that lie in the answer to this cry. Now is the strategic time. The past shows what can be done, the present shows its needs. May the All-Wise Father raise up liberal men and missionary churches who will come to our aid in this matter. Please remember that every church in Oklahoma that has grown strong enough has become a living link church to carry forward this great work.

Our Governor Ferguson came out squarely for prohibition in the new state. The times are propitious. May God grant us wisdom and enthusiasm. May we come into the union temperate. And Christian assistance now will greatly help to determine the future. O. L. Smith.

A Fine Kidney Cure.

Oklahoma.

I closed my first year's work here with the month of August. During that time there were 130 additions to the church, and improvement along all other lines. The revival has kept up throughout the entire year. I have never been in a field where I enjoyed the work more than I do here; the people are wide-awake and aggressive, and notwithstanding the fact they are here from all sections and here to make money, they are about as considerate and liberal of time and means as in the older sections. We are hoping to make next year far more successful even than the one that has just closed.

I recently spent a few days in a meeting with J. C. Mullins at Mangum. We had only gotten the meeting fairly started when the writer was compelled to leave. There were three additions. A tent was used and some nights we had a very large hearing. Brother Mullins continued the meeting and will report later.

I am now at Guthrie attending our annual territorial missionary convention. A full report will be furnished by another. The outlook is bright. This new country is rapidly forging to the front.

Hendricks County to be a Living Link.

The Hendricks County, Indiana, Convention, held at Lizton, was strong throughout the entire session, but culminated in the great meeting on Sunday. People drove in from all over the county and filled the commodious church building Brethren drew wagons to the windows with platforms constructed on them filled with chairs. The yard was filled and an overflow meeting was held in the Methodist church. The writer spoke morning and evening on world-wide missions. In the afternoon the great communion was held. At this time it was decided for Hendricks county to plan to become a living link on the foreign field for the coming year. Bro. W. H. Alford, pastor at Lizton, will direct this enterprise. We have fourteen churches in Hendricks county and they will, no doubt, support a representative on the foreign field without any difficulty. Johnson county just became a living link this year, raising the required amount, and will support Miss Kate Johnson, Tokyo.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The Ralls county convention was held at Center and, in spite of the rains, was largely attended, and deep interest in the future of the work in Ralls was manifested. The county president, Mr. B. H Cleaver, was re-elected to the presidency for the new year, as his work has been most satisfactory during the past.

As to the C. W. B. M. part, it was represented by a talk by the secretary. The manager, Sister Christian, of New London, was denied the pleasure of being present or preparing the program, on account of severe sickness. As she desired very earnestly to be released from the work of manager because of frail health, Mrs. W. R. Netherland, of Center, was appointed to fill that place. We bespeak for her the loving co-operation of every auxiliary and church in the county. We fully expect the sisters at Center to organize themselves.

Kaboka was the very first auxiliary to return its September report. Belton is second and Higbee third. They are all good and full and are much appreciated.

Have you heard the new rally cry and aim, as chosen at San Francisco? No? Here it is: "Win one, 100,000 women; bring one, $200,000; save one, 100,000 souls." Suggestions: Special gifts from many, large gifts from some, "Tidings" in every home.

Missouri sent a larger delegation to the national convention than any state east of the rockies. Therefore Missouri ought to have the largest amount of, 1. Instruction; 2. Enthusiasm. 3. Inspiration. Result ought to be the largest growth of any state east of the Rockies. If we went in the right spirit and for the right purpose, the results are sure to come.

Our Mattie Burgess goes to India in October. Her support is the charge, and should be the joy, of the Missouri auxiliaries. Is there not one pocket book, whose contents are consecrated to him sufficiently to pay her passage to her field of labor? Write at once if one such is in Missouri. Mrs. G. L. Bantz.

NEW UNDERWEAR IDEA.

People May Now Wear Dollar Garments for Fifty Cents.

The readiness of the people of the United States to welcome a new idea has found fresh illustration in the reception accorded the new style of underwear which is having such an unusual sale. It is called Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece Underwear.

This underwear has the peculiarity that its name implies, combining an elastic rib on one side with a soft fleece on the other. The fleece absorbs the heat, while the rib, yielding to every motion, allows it to escape slowly, thus affording protection against chills and colds.

Men who appreciate the comfort and advantages of snug, close-fitting underwear, prefer the Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece to any other make. Prices are as follows: Men's and women's garments 50c each; children's sizes in union suits at 50c or in two piece suits at 25c a garment.

VELLASTIC RIBBED UTICA FLEECE
Made under Fabric Pat.603164 Apr.26'98

The trade mark, Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleeee, is sewed on every garment. If your dealer does not have it write us, giving us his name. Booklet and sample of fabric free. Utica Knitting Company, Utica, N. Y.

A Flower Book of Real Flowers

The Yellowstone Park Flower Book, published by the Northern Pacific, is a beautiful creation. It contains twelve specimens of real, pressed flowers, in natural colors, from Yellowstone Park, with botanical names and the places where found.

The book also has six full page, fine, half-tone illustrations showing the Park bears, the Grand canyon, geysers, hotels, etc., found in the Park, with a brief description of this most wonderful region, 54 by 62 miles in size, in the very depths of the Rockies.

The Flower Book makes a beautiful souvenir. Send A. M. Cleland, General Passenger Agent, Northern Pacific Ry., St. Paul, Minn., fifty cents for a copy.

Kansas State Missionary Convention

The state convention of the Kansas Christian churches has met, transacted its business, heard some thrilling addresses, and adjourned. The dates were Sept. 18 21. The Eldorado church royally entertained these saints. The work of the past year shows increased interests and gains in all departments. The work done has the appearance of permanency, and the coming years will doubtless be fruitful ones. The attendance was good; the weather ideal. The usual number of "ready with a speech" preachers was in evidence, and the speeches were to the point and helpful. Only one speaker was, during the entire sessions, called to a point of order. This shows the care that all speakers used to "stay with the text." The various organized missionary boards were ably represented: The Foreign by Corey, the Home by Wright, Church Extension by Muckley. By the presence and addresses of these men, the convention was gladdened, and our storehouses of missionary zeal greatly enriched.

W. S. Lowe, state superintendent of Kansas missions, never looked happier. He claims to be proud of his army of young, clean-shaven preachers—a few wear mustache—of this great sunflower state. He reported 378 churches, with a membership of a few over 45,000. Twenty-eight workers have been in the field more or less of the time during the year. They have raised $4,008.50 where meetings have been held and addresses have been made. The churches as churches gave $5,831.19 to state missions, making a total of $9,839.66. Over 1,600 addresses and sermons were reported by these workers, and 3,470 days work done. Forty three meetings were held, and five new churches organized. Four Sunday schools were organized and ten new C. W. B. M. auxiliaries. Four new church houses were dedicated by these workers. There were 621 baptisms, 554 additions otherwise, a total of 1,175. The superintendent sent out 2,050 personal letters, 1,045 postal cards, and 2,740 circular letters.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has 105 auxiliaries. This body itself has organized and reorganized 15 during the year. For want of leaders a few disbanded. The membership is 1,602. The state secretary reported 370 new members, but the unfortunate disbanding of a few auxiliaries leaves the total membership about the same. There are 953 "Tidings" taken. This is a gain of 262 over the previous year. These good women raised $3,624 65. The state work received $804 05, which is $309.43 more than last year; the Lawrence Bible Chair and the Mexico mission work, $958.79. The attendance upon Bible Chair lectures, under the efficient leadership of Brother and Sister W. C. Payne, has grown from four five years ago to over 80 the year just closed. In every way this work has been profoundly satisfactory. The general fund received its apportionment of $1,675.91, and other worthy causes were helped. The C. W. B. M. day was observed by 58 auxiliaries, with an offering of $386.90. The secretary sent out 1,194 personal letters, 600 circular letters, 175 copies of the "Tidings," 191 "Junior Builders," and 8,084 leaflets. Verily, the good work all this has accomplished and will accomplish is beyond computation.

The Christian Endeavor Society has 174 organized bodies, 3,892 active members, 891 associate members, which is a gain of 1,152 in these 12 months. The church received into its fellowship 373 Endeavorers, by confession and baptism. This happy band of young people paid $2,162.75 for local work, $149.04 for state work, $804.80 for foreign missions, and $744.48 for home missions. This is a gain of $1,521.55 over last year. Surely the Christian Endeavor Society of the Christian Church of Kansas is not a "disappearing brotherhood."

The Juniors report 112 societies; 4,042 members. Over 1,400 boys help to make up this encouraging number. Over 300 of these Juniors have come into the church. Their offerings were $531.80. The future church is certainly being well prepared for its willing responsibilities; and, with such continued activities, we will, in another decade, be ten years ahead of ourselves in preparation, compared with the twenty years or more just past.

The spirit of the meeting throughout was uplifting and stimulating. The songs sung were of a spiritual character, and the singing was full of life and understanding. Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., who lectured several times on the plea and purpose and teaching of the Christian church, made the oldtime gospel ring out like it did three-quarters of a century ago. His critical examination of several disputed Greek words was telling and conclusive. From 60 to 75 minutes at each address he held us spell-bound by his clear and lucid Biblical expressions, and exhaustive declarations of Scriptural teaching. Better than ever before, if possible, are we satisfied that the church is just the church, and all the followers of Christ just Christians, free from unscriptural adjectives and devices of all human kind. Brother Moore was the only minister in the convention wearing full beard, and that, waving admirably, with a silvery tinge, his tall personality, striking appearance and saintly bearing, made us feel as if we were close up by the side of the great legislator and lawgiver of the wilderness. I think I voice the sentiment of the convention when I add that his presence and lectures were a benediction to this growing state.

Miss Bertha Mason, of Dallas, Tex., appeared in the convention in behalf of Mexico. She charmed the waiting audience. She greatly astonished all of us by unconsciously teaching us how little we know about the ignorance and depravity of the races so hard by our door, and the wonderful possibilities of the Mexicans and their country. Her womanly attractiveness as a public speaker arrested the attention of the audience from the beginning. Her first words counted, the middle words counted, the last words counted. She was alive with love for her work, the needs of the situation, and this made her eyes sparkle with brightness and her words worth one hundred per cent on the dollar. If Kansas fails to do more than ever now for Mexico, it will be a deliberate failure—one simply from choice, and not for want of information.

The addresses were all of a high order. Time and care had been devoted to their preparation. The prayers were fervent and spiritual. They were not of the noisy kind, but modest, choice in language and solemn. The complexion of the attendants seemed to indicate religious determination, and the workers returned to their homes more firmly fixed in their plans for enlargement than ever before. The committee on future work recommended the extending and expanding of the circle of power and influence, by raising the state missionary apportionment and employing additional evangelists on guaranteed salaries; and it was ratified by the convention enthusiastically. A man will be placed in the field to give his entire time to the Sunday-schools; others will devote their time to weak churches and protracted meetings.

The whole amount of money raised and expended by all departments—Sunday-school money not mentioned—was $15,428.96, but some of this amount went into other fields, so that less than $14,000 went to this state itself, including a healthy offering to the Lawrence Bible Chair. This is good, but to determine and contract for greater things still, is vitalizingly commendable; and we confidently expect to realize the enlargement anticipated.

W. S. Lowe, the superintendent of State Missions, and A. Rosalae Pendleton, corresponding secretary and treasurer, have faithfully performed their duties, and much credit belongs to them for the success attained and the present vitality of the local churches. The Kansas Christian churches feel that they were never in a more healthy condition, and this is a sufficient reason for purposing larger work. Pastorates are longer, the class of preachers consecrated, ideals in church buildings and grounds have moved up a degree or two, and general equipments have been modernized until the Lord expects more of us, and we owe him more. The state has been wonderfully blessed agriculturally. Bursting corn bins with wheat unstorable, fat cattle and horses, with hay piled high and fruit of every kind and character. We justly owe him more. Ungrateful would be the people who could now be satisfied with past successes for this new missionary year. We must busy ourselves for larger service. The primary steps have been taken, as all work for the year has been carefully outlined by the convention. The local congregations will, as we believe, agree to all the recommendations, and with missionary board, preachers and people all working harmoniously, we shall be abundantly able to conquer.

The convention adjourned to meet again the third week in September, 1906, at Parsons. ALBERT NICHOLS.

gelist Special" company, he was enabled to become acquainted with "What the Christian Church is Doing on the Pacific Slope," and his first talk to his congregation on returning from the convention concerned itself with this theme. He impressed on his own congregation, according to the local paper's report, that with a building all newly painted and fixed comfortably, they should not fold their arms and rest in ease, but that there was a great work for them in the future; and the fact that they had accomplished so much in the past must be an incentive for them to work harder. In the evening Brother Cauble gave a talk on his journey to and from San Francisco, and we do not doubt for one moment that it was interesting to every hearer.

To the Bible Schools of Missouri.

The state Bible school board of Missouri takes pleasure in announcing that at last it has secured a successor to W. A. Moore in the person of J. H. Hardin, so well and so favorably known to our brotherhood. Brother Hardin will begin preparation for this work at once and enter fully as soon as a successor can be secured for the Richmond pulpit. Brother Hardin will inaugurate that phase of institute work so vigorously advocated at the Marshall convention. A new era of Bible school work is upon us. Let the workers rally to his call.

In behalf of the board,

A. W. Kokendoffer, president.

To the Brethren in Missouri: The Bible-school Board has elected me secretary and superintendent. I have accepted the position, and have already taken up such features of the work as can be done from my desk while closing up my pastorate here. By the middle of November I will be able to take hold of all the duties of the office.

To enter again into the duties of a department of service in which in the strenuous years gone by I realized many of the richest experiences of a somewhat active ministry, brings to my heart a flood of memories and fills my soul with strange feelings. God grant that the years of toil devoted to other departments since I tried to lead this one before, may have added that discretion necessary to enable me to worthily follow in the footsteps of the noble men who have brought this cause forward to its present splendid proportions.

It is unfortunate that so much of the year has passed with no one in charge of this work. This makes it all the more important that we get to work at once to bring everything into shape. I seek the prompt and hearty co-operation of our people throughout the state.

The first quarter of all the pledges made at the convention at Marshall has become due. If your school has not sent this money, let it be forwarded to me at once.

I am specially anxious to hear from all who want to arrange for Bible school institutes. The policy outlined by the Marshall convention will be followed. Information in detail will be sent to all interested who will let me know.

Let me hear anything that will help me to do what I have been appointed to do.

Address me till further notice at Richmond, Mo. J. H. Hardin.

The New Philanthropic Enterprise—The South Remembered.

For the past four years our National Benevolent Association has received urgent appeals for the establishment of a home under its auspices somewhere in the great southeast. Application was made by the Georgia State Board of Missions for the institution of this proposed home in that state. After much correspondence with ministers and other influential brothers and sisters, and conference between committees and the State Board of Missions, Baldwin was selected as the site of the new enterprise, and on Sept. 15, the National Board, by unanimous vote, decided to make that the next center for the radiation of Christian philanthropy. A forty acre tract of land with some buildings has been given for this purpose. The buildings, however, are inadequate. Correspondence with reference to memorial buildings, halls, rooms, windows, etc., may be directed either to the undersigned or to Wm. B. Shaw, Baldwin, Ga. Nowhere do we find brighter trophies of redeeming love than in the lives of these American boys and girls to whom the hand of the church is extended down into their environment of squalor and ignorance to lift them up.

Church Extension Receipts.

The following is a comparative statement of Church Extension receipts for week ending September, 20, 1904, and 1905:

	1904	1905	Loss
From individuals,	$104.50	$101.75	$ 2.75
From annuities,	735.00		735.00
From bequests,	100.00		100.00
From churches,	2,857.42	1,299.75	1,557.67
Totals, . . .	$3,796.92	$1,401.50	$2,395.42

Contributing churches, 1904, . . . 177

The Board is sorry to be compelled to report a loss, or a falling behind from all sources of receipts and the number of contributing churches. The total falling behind in receipts as compared with last year is $2,395.42. The falling behind in the number of contributing churches is 65. The Board is unwilling to believe that the great brotherhood has lost its interest in the work of Church Extension. In most parts of the country there have been three stormy Sundays, and only small offerings have been sent thus far. The churches that always send the largest offerings have not yet been heard from. We believe that the falling off in the number of contributing churches is due to the fact that churches are holding back their offerings until they can bring them up to creditable amounts. This is the only generous and hopeful way to look at the matter. Nearly 1,400 churches promised to take the collection, and thus far only 272 have sent in offerings, and a great many of these are from churches that did not promise.

According to reports thus far from the churches, their part toward reaching the half million mark will fall far short. The Board believes that the last week of September and the first week of October will show great gains. We believe that the churches will not allow this work to suffer. Remit promptly to G. W. Muckley, Corresponding Secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Convention of the Christian Missionary Society of Md., Del., and D. C.

The annual convention of the above district will be held with the church at Hagerstown, Maryland, October 3-7. The first service will be held at 7:30 p. m., on Tuesday, October 3. A good program is being arranged. Local and national speakers and an echo from San Francisco will be important features. A cordial welcome will be given by the Hagerstown church and its worthy minister, H. C. Kendrick. All our congregations in the district are urged to send up their delegates.

As I have accepted the work at Winston-Salem, N. C., my work as corresponding secretary will close with the convention at Hagerstown. Thanking the churches and preachers cordially for their sympathy and support, I trust they will all give their heartiest co-operation to my successor.

DANIEL IN THE LIONS' DEN.—Dan. 6:10-23.

Memory Verses, 21-23.

Golden Text.—The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.—Ps. 34:7.

The transition from the period of Babylonian supremacy in the east to the period of Persian rule is referred to in the verses preceding those of the lesson (Dan. 5:31 and 6:1). The historical records of this event are not in harmony. The Greek historians, Herodotus and Xenophon, differ from each other and from the cuneiform inscriptions (which might naturally be supposed to be the most trustworthy source of information), and Daniel is at variance with all three. Secular history knows a Darius who followed Cyrus and besieged Babylon to subdue a revolt, but no Median Darius as the predecessor of Cyrus. The most nearly contemporary evidence indicates that Cyrus got possession of Babylon without violence, and made it the seat of a new government, and that Darius later found it necessary to conquer his capital.

The incident recorded in this lesson has its value as a story illustrating the power of faith, the beauty of fidelity to one's religious training and convictions, and the protecting care of God. A people who took delight in the story of a hero who was neither ashamed nor afraid to pray, could not be without a strong element of spirituality. A nation which believed that God saved, even from hungry lions, those who faithfully called upon him, could not fail to have a tremendous power of resistance against the attempts to destroy its religion. So the story of Daniel became to the later Jews, as it has since been to many Christians, a source of strength and encouragement.

It is important that every Christian should learn to find the true values in those portions of scripture which, like the book of Daniel, have been and are subjected to searching criticism. The elements of permanent worth in the book are those which no criticism can touch, for they do not depend upon historical accuracy, but upon the forceful presentation of certain large and abiding religious truths. The words of Farrar, a conservative and evangelical scholar, suggest the true distinction. He says:

"Though I am compelled to regard the book of Daniel as a work which, in its present form, first saw the light in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes, and though I believe that its six magnificent opening chapters were never meant to be regarded in any other light than moral and religious Haggadoth, yet no words of mine can exaggerate the value which I attach to this part of our canonical scripture. The book has exercised a powerful influence over Christian conduct and Christian thought. Its right to a place in the canon is undisputed and indisputable, and there is scarcely a single book of the Old Testament which can be more richly profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete, completely furnished to every good work. Such religious lessons are not in the slightest degree impaired by those results of archeological discovery and criticism which are almost universally accepted by the scholars of the continent and many of our chief English critics."

Before leaving the book of Daniel, it should be noticed that it falls into two main divisions: First, stories of the life of Daniel, chapters 1-6; Second, the apocalyptic visions which are represented as having appeared to Daniel, chapters 7-12. The latter section not only narrates, darkly but in some detail, the fortunes of Judah until the Maccabean age, but reflects the best and liveliest Messianic expectation of later Judaism.

EVILS AND CURE OF COVETOUSNESS.—Luke 12:13-21; 1 Tim. 6:17-19.

Covetousness is wicked. "Thou shalt not covet" is the tenth comandment of the Decalogue. With idolatry, murder, profanity and lust, it is given evil prominence as one of the fundamental sins to which man is prone. Indeed it is called idolatry, as being such a love for riches, and such confidence in their power to bless, as to even dethrone God from his rightful place in our lives. To "have their hope set on the uncertainty of riches," instead of "on God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy," is practical idolatry. (See Col. 3:5; 1 Tim. 6:17.) "How hardly shall they that trust in riches enter into the kingdom of God," says our Master, when the rich young ruler turned away from him rather than give up his wealth. Surely, any passion that makes the grace of God ineffectual in reaching our hearts is wicked, and ought to be abandoned, if we hope for the divine favor.

Covetousness is cruel. Nothing in all literature is more tragic than the story of Ahab and Naboth, as given us in 1 Kings 21:1-29. The refusal of Naboth to sell the inheritance of his fathers, due to his reverence for the law of God and the honor of his house, brings upon him the wrath of the covetous Ahab and the bloody Jezebel. His virtue is assailed, his good name blighted by false and bribed testimony, and his life taken from him, all that a few acres of ground may be added to the pleasant vineyard of the king. The greed for riches is merciless, and stops not for the integrity of man, the virtue of woman or the innocence of childhood. The mills of commerce grind day and night, and little thought is given to the human lives and hearts that are ground up therein, if the dividends are regularly paid, and the stock kept at par. "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts that drown men in destruction and perdition" (1 Tim. 6:9, 10). "The love of money is a root of all kinds of evil," and of none more surely than of cruelty. The mercenary have little mercy.

Covetousness is foolish. The uncertainty of earthly riches has passed into a proverb. To the man who seeks to satisfy himself with abundance of material things the Lord says, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?" Nor can riches bring happiness even for the short time in which they may be enjoyed in this life. Dives could not have been a truly happy man while he reveled in his riches, and suffered poor Lazarus to die from hunger at his gate. Haman could not recount to his family the honors and riches which his king had heaped upon him but he was compelled to add, "Yet all this availeth me nothing, so long as I see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate" (Esther 5:13). And when one takes into account the eternal years of God, and the rewards of them that trust in him, how empty are all the hopes that center about mere temporal riches!

The cure for covetousness. "Take heed!" says Jesus. This is the cure for this sin. Think of what worldly wealth is unable to do for you, and you can not deliberately set your heart upon it. Consider the mercy and abundant love of God, and what blessing it can bring to the believing Christian, in time and eternity, and what holy service can be rendered by your possessions to his needy children, and you will conclude that the noblest use of riches is to spend them in making human lives better, and human hearts happier. Thus will you lay up in store for yourself a good foundation against the time to come, and at last enjoy the life that is life indeed.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

THE CHRISTIAN'S TRIALS AND TRIUMPHS.—Jas. 1:1-8.

For the Leader.

We come tonight to study a subject that will find a point of interest in every experience represented here. The topic, "The Christian's Trials and Triumphs," is, however, not the lesson of a pessimist. Trials are his, to be sure, but triumphs are his also. He does not rebel at the thought of suffering. This he endures. Patiently he plods on in the even tenor of his way. Why this? He expects to triumph some time. At what time? He does not know. God knows, and he is willing to trust him. The long, weary days are passed over in a loyalty that saves him from rebellion and fault-finding. So he goes on. His trials multiply. The world looks on and wonders. How strange it has never occurred to this servant to complain! Why, instead of this, he talks of coming victory. He sees from afar the stream on whose waters shall come his deliverance rise from under the altar. Yes, all this is possible to the Christian. His trials must give place to triumphs. It is not so with him who is not a Christian. He may triumph; he may fail. But the man whose trust is in God can not fail.

For the Members.

1. The Christian's trials are many. One of them is temptation. Not in one form, but in many. Here is the temptation to grow indifferent and neglectful of Christian duties. Here is the daily reading of the Word of God. I keep it up for a time. Then occasionally I let it pass because of some hindrance. Then the times when I neglect it grow more frequent. I have a plausible excuse. But I do not seem satisfied with it, for I repeat it to myself over and over. Then I find myself making little arguments against pledging myself to a formal doing of anything. Then I find a dislike of daily Bible reading. It becomes a trial to keep it up. What shall I do?

2. My difficulty in keeping up my Bible reading is similiar to those when I come to any of my other duties. It is the same way with them all. My only help is in forcing myself up to the strictest discipline in these matters. I must demand of myself that these things be done regularly. I must look upon the demand as imperative. If this course is pursued for a time, we will find the work easier. We will find it a means of joy to us. We begin to bring to it a skill that is a delight. The displeasure now comes from neglect rather than performance. We at last have conquered. Have you not found this to be your experience when you have clung obstinately to your purposes in the Christian life? Many have. Well, what is this but triumph? It is nothing else. And let no one say that the Lord was not in it. He was. It was he that enabled you to hold yourself up to the discipline. It was he who made the order in which this is a law of your nature. Yes, yes; it is God in it all at all times and everywhere.

3. Then there are the trials of the young Christian. He has, it may be, little money. His education has been neglected. He must start out late to get his preparation for his life's work. His living must be scant. The wits will be put to a severe test to find out how one is to get on at all. There will be times when it seems that the battle is so severe the victory is not worth the struggle. This is the tempter. Beware! Then comes an acquaintance into your life. You get glimpses of a gay world on the border land of your world. Out here the indigent get some relief from being destitute. Virtue is drawn upon just a little for the comforts of life. Why not you have a little better time? Why not you have some money for bills? Why not you have a little better wearing apparel? Others have and are not, you say, found out. What is this? Beware! This is the tempter. By this plausibility he is gaining many for his satanic majesty.

4. What is the refuge of those who are thus weighed down by trials? Jesus. There is no other way. The church. There is no other organization so helpful. It is an association of those who fight in a common cause. It is a household where every member is set for the good name of the other. The Endeavor Society. It is the place for you when tempted. It is your shelter when the storm comes upon you. It is the place where your friends are who will help you when trials are upon you. When you are tempted those of your Endeavor fellowship will stand around you as a defense. Wait upon the Lord often in these ministries of his and renew your strength. He has provided them for your protection. If you will not absent yourself from them you will not get into so much trouble. You can avoid much of your trouble and many of your trials by staying by your Savior, your church, your society. Bad demons—those set for the worst work upon Christians —sometimes linger near the fellowships of the kingdom of God, looking for victims, but, as a rule, they are not near such places. Keep close to your home in the Lord.

Quiet Hour Thought.

If I will not let the Lord save me, how shall I be saved?

BABY'S TERRIBLE HUMOR

Causing Untold Agony. Professional Treatment did no Good. Cured in Two Weeks by Cuticura.

"My child was a very delicate baby. A terrible humor, breaking out on his body, caused him untold agony. Professional treatment did no good, and I became discouraged and took the matter into my own hands, and tried Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment with almost immediate success. Before the second week had passed the soreness was gone, not leaving a trace of anything." Mrs. J. H. Block, 281 Rosedale St., Rochester, N. Y.

Family Circle

His Story and Hers.

BY GERTRUDE L. FICKWORTH.

"Well, haven't you got nothing to say?"

It was my mother's voice which fell harshly on my ears as we sat in our little farm-kitchen that sweet summer night. I knew that she had every right to resent my slience; and yet I declare I had never felt so tongue-tied in all my life.

"It's a great surprise," I said slowly, at length. "I never expected that you would marry again."

"Expected it? Of course you didn't!" cried my mother, with a scornful laugh. "You've never expected anything, nor had eyes for what other folks see plain enough. It's certain that you have never been in love, David, though I will say that at one time I thought as you and Mary—"

"I must ask you to keep Mary's name out of our conversation, mother," I interrupted, and I know that something in my voice caused her to look at me suddenly. At any other time my sense of humor would have been tickled at the idea of love having aught to do with the proposed alliance between my mother and old John Davies. But now, at the mention of that dear name, my face grew dark with pain, and of a sudden I realized all that my mother's announcement meant for me. The atmosphere of the kitchen felt stifling, and I rose up and went and stood by the open door. The cool breath of evening touched my cheek. In the west the sky was aflame with the crimson of the dying sun. Presently, through the tumult of my thoughts, I heard my mother's voice.

"I hope you'll manage all right without me, David," she was saying; "it will be a change for you."

"When is it to take place?" I asked, turning around.

"This day month."

I gazed at my mother in bewilderment. Already I coud see the kitchen without her familiar presence. Then I thought of my father, and, strange to say, my heart softened. He had loved her—once. I went to her and kissed her.

"I hope you will be happy, mother," I said gently; and then, before she could utter a word, I passed quickly out into the sweet dusk of the summer night.

The flame in the west was dying down, and overhead the first pale stars were gleaming in the fading sky. Obeying a deep-rooted instinct of my nature, I went swiftly up the slope behind our farm. In trouble the hills drew me irresistibly. I could breathe better beneath God's blue; I could see with clearer vision in his kindly dark.

Much of my past life rose up before me as I hurried on through the swift-coming night. For the bitterness of the present hour was so strangely interwoven with the story of all that lay behind.

I thought of that red-letter day long ago when the school master had climbed up to our farm. I thought of all the bright hopes which had filled the brief years of my youth. I thought of that strange and sudden home-coming, and of my promise to my dying father. I lived over again the days when I had lost the first courage which comes with sacrifice, and the glow of a high resolve had passed away.

In spite of hard experiences, I had always clung to my belief in a God who loved and cared and who acted with a wisdom uncomprehended by our foolishness. But that night as I lay on the grass under the cold eyes of the stars, it seemed to me that such faith was vain. No unseen Pilot stood at the helm of my life's frail bark; it was the plaything of the winds and waves of chance. As I write these words shame comes upon me. God knows how bitterly I have repented of that dark hour of unbelief. With the psalmist of old I can declare that his goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life. But let me tell my story clearly and calmly.

It seems to me that even my own poor pen must grow skillful when it writes Mary's name. Ever since the day when she came up to help my mother with the hay-making I loved her. The wild roses were in bloom upon the hedges, and I remember thinking that she was like a rose herself—a rose so sweet and fragrant that she could turn a man's life into a garden. And from that time for many months the thought of her filled even my darkened days with sunshine—yea, though it led to my bitter undoing, and I knew that never again could I look into her sweet eyes without a feeling of unutterable shame. For who was I to dream of love? How could I ask Mary, or any other woman, to share such a life as mine, to share such a home as my mother's presence made inevitable? And when I asked myself these questions, I knew that all my dreaming was over.

I think that here, for clearness' sake, I ought to explain that after my father's death his affairs had been found to be so involved that part of our little farm property had to be sold. Thus the burden of poverty lay heavily upon my shoulders, and from morning till night I was forced to toil for the scant necessities of life. As regards my mother, I have no wish to speak a harsh word. I stand in too much need of the cloak of charity for my own failings to fall into that error. But this I will say: that our kitchen was no place for a tired man to come home to of an evening, and that my mother's strange temperament was not the least of the trials which it had pleased God to send me.

And so these were the reasons why I had been so soon able to reassure my old schoolfellow, when, but a week before I heard of my mother's approaching marriage, he came to tell me of his love for Mary, and bluntly to demand my intentions. To this day I can see the look of relief on his face as I gave him my promise that he should have nothing to fear from me. And then because our hearts were knit by common memories, and because I felt such sudden craving for sympathy, I had shown him how my life was set about with barriers. After that I had tried to think of him as Mary's future husband, for report said that she was inclined to look with favor upon a suitor so desirable. Then, without warning, the fetters fell from my life, and I knew that I was a free man at last. But freedom had come too late.

And so this was the knowledge which was filling my heart with such bitter pain as I sat on the hillside in the star-lit silence of that summer night.

David has insisted upon my telling the second part of this story. I have told him that I have no skill for such a task, and that it would be far better for him to finish it himself. But, as I once promised to obey him, I have got into the habit of doing what he bids me—at least, I generally do. There, I have made an absurd mistake at the very beginning, which proves my point and would convince anyone except a man. For now I have let out our secret, and no one will care to read to the end. But, as David is waiting, I suppose I must proceed.

Of course, I knew quite well that he loved me—yes, even at the hay-making that golden afternoon. And I? Oh, well, there can be no harm in confessing now that I had never known before what easy work hay-making could be—at least, in David's field. And for months after that I went about with such gladness in my heart that I used to wonder that no one heard its singing. The following winter my two elder sisters were gayer than ever. They were the handsomest girls in all the country-side, and so it was only natural that they should have their admirers and be invited here and there, while I minded the house and made things comfortable for my father when he came home to his tea. But I don't remember finding it dull. David sometimes dropped in to supper. I fancy my father liked to hear him talk, for, as everyone knows, nature never intended David for a farmer, and he would have been a school-master if his father had lived. A great deal of the dairy work fell upon me that winter. But I don't remember grumbling or finding it heavy. David sometimes lent me a hand.

It was in the spring time, when the cuckoo was calling in the little wood behind our farm, that the song in my heart broke off. Of course, my sisters knew what had happened, for there are certain things which women have no need to be told. My father said nothing, only I noticed that his manner towards me grew more gentle as the days passed and David never came. Once or twice I saw him—David, I mean—as we came out of church, and anyone could see that he shunned me. But why? That was the question I kept asking myself, and it was never answered until one day in June the chance remark of a rejected suitor let in the daylight. Foolish fellow! I was too miserable even to feel surprised. Marry you, after David and I had worked in the hayfield together? But I felt grateful to you all the same, for though you spoke in anger, and you had no right to mention David's name to me at all, yet unwittingly you explained the silence of those long weeks. So David was poor and proud, and his mother shut out any other woman from entering his life. Then the very next morning we heard that old John Davies was about to take unto himself a wife, and that his choice had fallen upon David's mother. And that day I stopped to listen to the larks singing high up over the daisied fields.

But still David never came. Every morning I said, "He will come today," and every night I said, "He will come tomorrow." I grew to feel as if I had been waiting for something all my life. At last I could bear it no longer, and so, about a week after David's mother was married, it came suddenly into my head that—

(At this point I would fain lay down my pen, for I have come to the hardest part of my story. But it seems to me that I am only concerned with David's opinion, and that it were foolish to care overmuch for the praise or blame of any other. Nor do I intend to give any explanation save this: that I knew he loved me, and that only a miserable mistake could be keeping us apart.)

When I had tidied up the kitchen the next afternoon, I slipped from the house and went up the footpath to David's farm. I found him at work in the three-cornered field. He came quickly towards me, the sunlight on his face, a look in his eyes half of wonder and yet wholly glad. There was no need of formal greeting between him and me. We had been parted too long for that, and, besides, I had done with formalities when I left home. So all that David did was to take both my hands in his, while he said, simply, "How good of you to come all the way up here!"

I could answer him nothing, for the change in his face startled me, and I forgot the words I had been minded to speak. The next moment I felt myself turning crimson under his gaze, and all my courage ebbed away. I drew my hands from his, and thus for a space there was silence. And over our heads stretched the blue of God's sky, and all around us the ripening corn whispered at the touch of his breeze.

"I shall never forget that you thought of me in your happiness," said David, at last.

I turned quickly and faced him.

"What do you mean?" I asked. "What happiness have I?"

"I thought that—that you were—"

"Then you thought altogether wrong," I interrupted, for suddenly I understood.

Faintly across the hill came the sweet tinkle of sheep bells. Not far away a bird sang softly.

"Mary!" cried David, "Mary!"

Anything but the Scrap-Heap.

The Rev. Howard W. Pope tells the story of a Christian blacksmith who had had a great deal of affliction, and was challenged by an unbeliever to account for it. This was his explanation: "I don't know that I can account for these things to your satisfaction, but I think I can to my own. You know that I am a blacksmith. I often take a piece of iron, and put it into the fire, and bring it to a white heat. Then I put it on the anvil, and strike it once or twice to see if it will take a temper. If I think it will, I plunge it into the water, and suddenly change the temperature. Then I put it into the fire again, and again I plunge it into the water This I repeat several times Then I put it on the anvil, and hammer it, and bend it, and rasp it and file it, and it makes some useful article which I put into a carriage, where it will do good service for twenty-five years.

"If, however, when I first strike it on the anvil, I think it will not take a temper, I throw it into the scrap-heap, and sell it at a halfpenny a pound.

"Now, I believe that my Heavenly Father has been testing me to see if I will take a temper. He has put me into the fire, and into the water. I have tried to bear it just as patiently as I could, and my daily prayer has been, 'Lord, put me into the fire if you will; put me into the water if you think I need it; do anything you please, Lord; only, for Christ's sake, don't throw me into the scrap-heap.'"

Ten-Cent Music Lessons in New York.

A unique institution occupies seven good-sized rooms in Clinton Hall, down in the very heart of the Jewish settlement. It was founded several months ago by Mrs. Clara von Ende Liebman, and has so far been maintained out of her private income. The object of the school is to give to the children of the working people opportunities for studying music. Mrs. Liebman, who believes implicitly in the ennobling influence of music, says: "Many who have heard of the school and its project deem it superfluous and a luxury to teach children of the very poor the art of music, but I do not agree with them. Anything that can render another pleasure is not superfluous. I have always considered music, as did my father, the most uplifting influence that can be brought to bear upon human nature. Unlike most schools, we do not turn away applicants who have apparently no talent. The very desire which prompts them to save their pennies in order to take a lesson, and the time which they devote to practice day after day, is in itself a sermon and worthy of appreciation, whether they ever develop a marked aptitude or not. Most of the children are, however, much above the average in both natural talent and their untiring devotion to practice!"

A convincing proof of the East Side's appreciation of the ten-cent lessons is the sacrifice necessary in the homes of the children in order to eke out the weekly ten cents, for the conservatory reaches out to the very poorest class of people, and it is only by dint of much scrimping and saving that the sum which seems so little, but which will really buy so much in the quarter, can be spared. Little tikes with toes out at shoes and their little home-made knickerbockers obviously cut down from dad's or brother's, come in and proudly hand in their dimes as they explain whether it is a violin or piano lesson that they desire.—Harriet Quimby, in Leslie's Weekly.

A Fair Deal.

A southern congressman tells a story of an old negro in Alabama who, in his bargaining, is always afraid that he may get "the worst of it." On one occasioin, it appears, this aged darky went after a calf that he had pastured all summer, and asked what he owed for the pasturing.

"I have a bill of $10 against you," said the farmer who had undertaken the care of the animal, "but, if you are willing, I'll take the calf and call it settled."

"No, sah!" promptly exclaimed the negro, I'll do nothing like dat. But,"he added, after a pause, "I'l tell you what I will do —you keep the calf two weeks longer and you can have it."—Harper's Weekly.

The Mote and the Beam.

The pastor of a large city church was detained one morning by a lady in his congregation. "I want to tell you," she said, "that I can not come here any more."

"But why not?" was asked in surprise.

She tried to speak quietly, but she could not keep the bitterness out of eyes and voice. "I have been coming here three years," she answered slowly, "and in all the three years not once has anyone said a pleasant word to me, before or after service; and I can not stand it any longer; I am going to some other church.

"I am sorry," the minister answered, gravely. "It should not have been so. I do not wonder that you feel hurt, especially as you yourself must have spoken kind words to many in these three years."

The lady looked at him in bewilderment. "I," she exclaimed, "I never spoke to anybody—it wasn't my place to. I never thought of such a thing!"

It was the old story of the mote and the beam. Through the three years of deepening bitterness against her fellow worshipers she had not once brought her own soul to judgment; instead, she had lavished upon it a weak self-pity, and gone her unhappy way through the world of loneliness which she had created herself. It might all have been very different if only, seeking the lesson close folded in her pain, she set herself to keep others from such sorrowful experience. For one who bears the gifts of cheer and sympathy never walks alone; the world has too much need of him.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

The Advance Society.

The other day I was out on my balcony with Felix. I said to him, "Do you realize that you are known from one end of the country to the other;" that I have received letters about you from England, from Japan, from Canada, from China?" Felix purred. I said, "Brother Pinkerton tells me that when he went to the San Francisco convention, people had heard of you that had never heard tell of him." Felix waved his tail. "You are just an ordinary cat—a stray," I continued, "and yet you have had greatness thrust upon you!" (I was born great.) "You are famous, sir. Almost every state in the union has heard of you." "All this is of no interest to me," remarked Felix. "I think I see a mouse out yonder in the long grass." He jumped over the banisters and began to hunt. I was telling someone about our missionary in China. "The Advance Society tries to send her five dollars every month," I explained. "We can't go to China to tell the story of our faith, but we feel, in sending our dimes and quarters and dollars, that we are sending someone to preach for us (and when we send a dollar we feel that we are sending a special train with a sleeper)." He answered—this wasn't Felix, but a two-legged cat—that he wasn't much interested in foreigners, he had all he could do to attend to matters nearer home. By the way, I sent Drusie another five dollars last week. If you will lend a hand, we can do the same before another month passes.

Well, our orphan Charlie has paid me his annual visit. You will remember the Advance Society bought his ticket from St. Louis to Mrs. Ryman's, where he stayed a month; then Mrs. Ryman's father-in-law kept him, with other friends, at or about Grayson till the last part of his two months' visit, when he came on to Plattsburg. He had a fine time at Mr. Robert Marshall's, for they have a son there, Terrell, who is just Charlie's age, and a dog, too—I don't know how old the dog is. Charlie came here the day before a big circus came to town, if you will excuse me for mentioning such a thing in a religious paper, and Terrell came the day of the circus—I wonder how he happened in on that day? As I told you, my mother was visiting in Kentucky, and as we have no maids or butlers or coachmen, all the work fell upon the old family servant and the gardener. The old family servant is not an expert with the frying-pan, as he has spent most of his time in writing books and young people's pages for weekly magazines, and the steak that he cooked was refused by orphan Charlie, as being something beyond his experience. The steak was not so curious as the gravy, however. It was dappled-colored, with little hills rising above the levels. We were far more successful with the chickens, which a kinswoman sent us already fried, and the watermelon left nothing to be desired, except a worthy successor. The gardener kept the board stocked with tomatoes, upon which the orphan mainly subsisted, till we thought it best to let him go back to Terrell Marshall for a few days to recuperate. Then he came back here, and left from here for St. Louis. The last dinner was the supreme effort of the old family servant and his father, the gardener. There were boiled potatoes, boiled corn, boiled butterbeans, boiled coffee, boiled ham, with the inevitable tomatoes and baker's bread. Even the orphan said it was a fine dinner. There was so much he couldn't get to the catsup. While Charlie was here, Mrs. Nan Porter and Mrs. T. H. Capp invited us to dinner, not on the same day, either, and we were given a boat ride by two young men, Will and Henry Perkins. These brothers own a skiff on a creek that runs through their pasture. We took a long ride, and everybody tried his hands at the oars. It was a beautiful day, and the sun cast romantic shadows on the placid water, and there was a big watermelon, and five muskmelons waiting for us on the bank, and so many cows standing in the stream that we could have done the milking as we rowed along. The current was not deep enough to excite our alarm, or, if we did get frightened, all we had to do was to look at the cows' legs to relieve our minds. When the meals were over and the kitchen cleaned up, the old family servant was metamorphosed into a gentleman of the house. He and Charlie then played duets; Charlie on the piano, and the gentleman on the piano by his side, or on the violin or the flageolet. Charlie's favorite was, "Meet Me at St. Louis, Louis" (pronounced "Louie" in both places), as it no doubt reminded him of home. The other's favorite was, "I'm Wearing My Heart Away for You," not because any of his heart has worn away for anybody yet, or because he knows anybody who might act as a grindstone on that sensitive organ, but because he first heard the song at the street carnival under a close, black tent, sung to moving pictures which were so much prettier than the lady who sang the song, that he felt sorry for her and wondered if anybody would ever throw confetti at her as she passed down the street. We had the high dive, too, and it was free, but that has nothing to do with this story. One afternoon some of the girls came in to sing for Charlie—and for themselves, too, for they enjoy it, and there was candy. And we had "Wearing My Heart Away for You" as a duet, and then as a sort of instrumental hash, and then we warmed it over on the piano and fiddle, till Charlie said he thought we were wearing the song away. He says things like that every once in a while. I found him much improved since his visit last year. He is a good boy, and bright, and has manly qualities. He went home the Saturday evening before his school-opening. I went to the station with him, of course, and after he had hunted in the weeds for his lost pocketbook, which held over two dollars when he lost it, and after he hadn't found it, the train for St. Louis came rolling in, and it was "Good-by!"—and a cloud of dust, and Charlie goes back to the orphan home and I to my bright, happy home—how different! Now, as I came away from the station, I was thinking how the Advance Society had been the means of our orphan enjoying two whole months away from the hot, crowded city, and how I had been the means of interesting the Advance Society in our orphan and missionary. And I got to wondering if anybody in Plattsburg, that night, was happier than I. I heard shouts of laughter from young people, and the neighborly voices of the old, but they were not so happy, for my happiness was too deep for a voice. Two solid months of enjoyment in country fields and village homes—two months out of the heart of St. Louis—that is what I had given, thanks to the Advance Society! Near the station I saw the most wonderful tent, fitted up like a canvas palace with rooms and porches, and outside were covered wagons. Some gypsies were cooking supper under the open sky, and other gypsies were lounging at the tent-doors, ragged and blissful. But I looked at them and thought, "No, not even you are so happy as I!" And I am sure you who helped to give Charlie his vacation, either by sending your mite, or by opening your doors to him, share this happiness; and it is all the reward you could desire. Since our orphan went back, he has written: "I am now in school; it began Tuesday. Our new matron is pretty good. Miss Tena Williamson" (the former matron) "made a visit here last night. It has been raining down here this morning. The ticket from Cameron Junction cost $7.45." (The Av. S. pays this.) "I guess your mother has returned by this time. I am well and hope you all are the same. Call up Terrell (by telephone) and tell him I said hello." (This message has been faithfully delivered.) "I guess I had better write to Mrs. Ryman.

CAN BE CURED.

THE KOLA PLANT.

The African Kola Plant is Nature's Positive Cure for HAY-FEVER and ASTHMA. Since its recent discovery this remarkable botanical product has come into universal use in the Hospitals of Europe and America as an unfailing specific.

Mr. W. H. Kelly, 317 48th St., Newport News, Va., writes Jan. 23d, was a helpless invalid and was cured of Hay Fever and Asthma, by Himalya after 15 years' suffering. Mrs. J. E. Nordyke, of Hill City, Kans., writes Jan. 25th, had Hay-Fever and Asthma for ten years and could get no relief until cured by Himalya. Mr. D. L. Clossen, 126 Morris St., Philadelphia, writes Jan. 16th, Doctors did me no good but Himalya cured me. Mr. W. F. Campbell, Sanbornville, N. H., also writes Feb. 6th, that Himalya cured his son. Rev. Frederick F. Wyatt, the noted Evangelist of Abilene, Texas, writes April 15th, 1905, I never lose an opportunity to recommend Himalya as it cured me of Hay-fever and Asthma and have never had any return of the disease.

Hundreds of others send similar testimony proving Himalya a truly wonderful remedy. As the Kola Plant is a specific constitutional cure for the disease, Hay-fever sufferers should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity to secure a remedy which will positively cure them. To prove the power of this new botanical discovery, if you suffer from Hay-fever or Asthma, we will send you one trial case by mail entirely free. It costs you absolutely nothing. Write to-day to the Kola Importing Co., 1162 Broadway, New York

Tell all hello. Good-by. Charlie."

This is from our missionary, Drusie, who, I find from the "Missionary Tidings," is a faithful member of the C. W. B. M.: "The five dollars was received. How good of the Lord to send the drafts so regularly! Praise his name. Really, are you not a preacher, Mr. Ellis? I was under the impression that you were a minister or had been once upon a time. Like you, I do not like 'Rev.' before a man's name. I like 'Brother' or 'Pastor,' though I have heard some among the Disciples make objection to the word Pastor." (So have I; I know preachers who would apparently as soon be called rascal as pastor. Perhaps were I a preacher, I could understand the objection, but I can't see it now, though that will sound like heresy to some who read these words. Perhaps they will not even get printed, they must sound so dreadful to some ears. But the word pastor merely means a feeder, it doesn't mean anything bad. If a preacher isn't a feeder, or shepherd, he ought to be. Sometimes it's mighty dry feed, but I've found that you can live on pretty poor stuff, for awhile —can't you, Charlie? No, I never was a preacher. Drusie continues): "Dear members of the Av. S., the drafts come so regularly, I can feel it in my bones when it is time for another without looking up the calendar. It is wonderful to me that you should do so much for one whom you have never seen. The dear Lord himself speaks in your hearts. It has been so since I started to China, dependent upon Jesus alone for support." (The reader will remember that while Drusie belongs to the C. W. B. M., she is not sent to the South Chih-li Mission by them or by any board, but depends for support upon voluntary offerings.) "The Christian-Evangelist is a regular and welcome visitor. I enjoy the Av. S. page very much, indeed, also 'The Woodneys.' My grateful thanks to those who send the paper. I am surprised at how many have contributed to the money sent me. I send letters to all whose addresses I know." (The addresses you ask are: Carl and Clarence Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Simpson Ely, Joplin, Mo., and Geo. W. Dawson, Kansas City, Mo.) "I wonder if you realize what five dollars means toward the mission cause. For local need we use Chinese 'cash.' One thousand 'cash,' strung together, is worth about thirty American cents. Many a man supports his family on two hundred cash a day, the usual working man's wages, or about six cents. They have almost no furniture, only a bed built in one corner, and a little brick oven for cooking. Some can not even afford straw mats for the floor, the Chinese sit on the floor, you know. The higher officials, however, have a table, and two chairs for callers. Well, a genuine revival has broken out among us missionaries, who need times of refreshment as well as other people. The bookkeeper and secretary started to talk about Jesus, and somehow we forgot all our work and our souls were just flooded with joy. That night at prayer meeting, I never was in such freedom in my life, yet there was a spirit of reverence and quietness. There was no human leader. Our director was away. Anyone just started a song, or prayed, or testified. One realized that God was present, hearing every word. It was a quarter to eleven before we knew it." (Reader, just fancy its being a quarter to eleven at an American prayer meeting before we know it! Why, it's as much as a preacher's life is worth to run it up to nine o'clock.) "I want to tell you about a man named Chao Lien Hsing, who has been converted only six months. He is like a little child in faith, believing God will do everything that is said in his word. And God is using him wonderfully. He is convinced that all things are possible to those who believe. He is a very ordinary man, but when his face is shining with the glory of God, one thinks not of Chao Lien, but of Jesus. Pray for us, dear ones."

I am sorry I have not space this week to print many interesting letters, which go over till another time. The following, however, is too intensely interesting and important to be overlooked: Mrs. J. H. Hall, Cantrall, Ill.: "Will you please explain what it was Mr. G. C. D. Woodney ate, when he helped himself to more cymlings as recorded in the enjoyable serial?" Cymlings, generally pronounced "sim-lin's," are a species of squash that are mighty good but not very filling. When cooked they make a mushy, soft dish, of a bright yellow and pasty description. Cymlings are fine when you have a whole lot of other things on the table. You cook 'em with milk and lots of seasoning, the richer the milk the better, and you bring 'em on hot. Cymlings when warmed over are never what they once were. A dollar came from Lathrop for Drusie; and when Terrell Marshall came over the day of the circus, he gave me a quarter for our orphan.

Any book in the market will be supplied with pleasure, but to save time for you, give the name of publisher or author, or both, and the book will be sent you promptly.

Of the American Standard improvements there is no end, and now we have an excellent New Testament in divinity circuit, full leather, at 75 cents. It is one of the prettiest, handiest and most convenient books.

For devotional books, "Alone with God," "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," and "Heavenward Way," 75 cents each, or $2 the set, postpaid, have not been surpassed among any religious people.

From the standpoint of the good there is in it we are glad to see the increased demand for Cradle Roll and Home Department supplies, and from a business point of view, of course, we are glad of it.

For all our friends who order their holiday gift books before the "rush" we will put any name selected, in gilt, on front cover of any book selling at $1 or more; but to secure service, even now, you must give us time.

More than 800 Popular Hymns No. 2 have gone out this week, while the demand for other song books of like character has been good. If you are contemplating a new book of the cheaper kind, write us.

More than 100 of "The Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, have gone from our office this week, and the more you read after such men, the more will be the demand for such books. Twenty sermons at $1.00, handsomely bound.

Now that the forces are taking up their work after a pleasant vacation, do not forget the Home Department, so important and helpful, and do not forget that we have everything needful to make it a success. You can have all the samples by asking.

To the many new friends coming to us under the increased circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: Command us for any information about anything connected with any department of church work. Our 128 page catalog will be gladly sent you on application.

If our friends would only "take time by the forelock" and make their holiday selections now, you would have the choice, would have an abundance of time to insure their safe arrival and would "avoid the rush," which always means more or less miscarriage, lost packages and disappointments.

"Can you refer me to some good book for instruction on the church?" We can point to Munnell's "Care of All the Churches," cloth, 75 cents, or Milligan's "Scheme of Redemption," which every elder should have, every deacon should study, and every evangelist should teach, in order that our working forces may know more of what to do and how to do it. Milligan is $2.

One of our brethren in Texas has sold fifty copies of Johnson's "People's New Testament with Notes," and he is going right on with his canvass, for such a book is always in demand where persons want the teaching of the New Testament in a clear, pointed, concise style. Johnson's is without doubt the best New Testament commentary for the masses from any house, selling at $2 per volume, or $4 for the set, prepaid.

Do you wonder what number they are singing now, when you come into church a little tardy some Sunday? We have prepared a hymn register for all the hymns of any one service to be put before the congregation, so that without embarrassment any one can turn to the number and join in this delightful feature of the worship. Write us.

The little booklet used in drilling Juniors in Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies by H. F. Davis in his work in Missouri is now ready, with an exact reproduction of the chart used in his work and we are putting it on the market at five cents each, or 50 cents per dozen, postpaid. Order one, and you will order more for drill work in your school and for interesting your societies.

For betterment in Bible-school organization, development and work, nothing on the market is superior to the Guide Book, selling at 25 cents, postpaid, while for the Endeavorers we have the Helping Hand, by the same author, and at the same price, postpaid. The former should be in the hands of all Bible-school officers and teachers, the latter in the hands of all Endeavorers, for whom, also, we have the "Junior Instructor," at 10 cents; the "Young People's Society at Work," 10 cents, and the "Ways of Working," 10 cents.

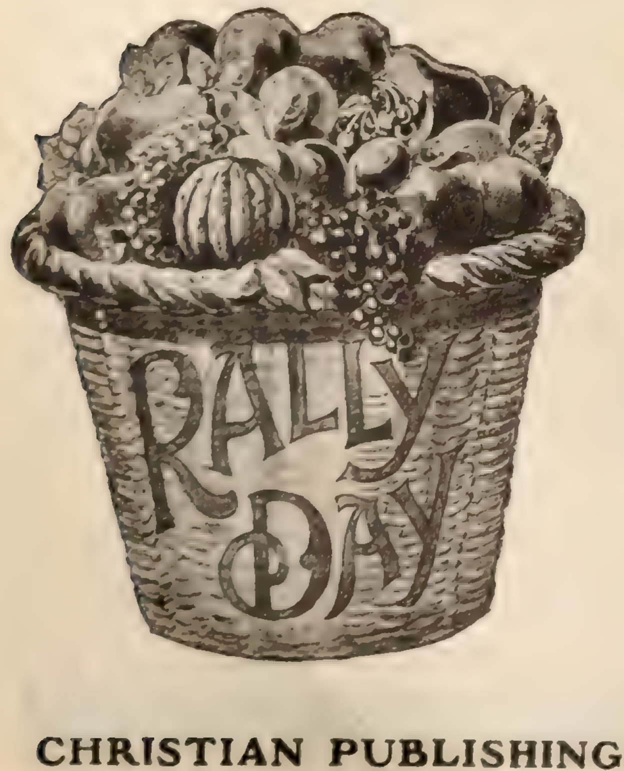
The fall season will see the organization of many Normal classes, and to all such we can heartily commend the Normal booklets, by W. W. Dowling, who, as a teacher of Bible school teachers, stands at the head. There are seven of these in a set, one on the Bible; another on the Christ; another on the Church; another on the Land; another on the Institutions; another on the History; another on the People, all of them first-class for Normal or Institute work and selling at 15 cents each, postpaid, or $1 00 for the set, postpaid.

"Going to Have It?" Sunday-School Rally.

Why not start the forces right and enthusiastically in the work this fall by a rousing Bible-School Rally? It is "up to you" to take advantage of such opportunities to quicken the school blood, to arouse parental interest and make ready for a good winter's campaign for Christ. Will you?

A Basket of Fruit

A farmer's basket filled to overflowing with fruits, such as pears, peaches, plums, grapes, and other autumn fruits, very appropriate for the harvest period, and in three colors, with assorted ribbons attached, at $1.50 per hundred, or at tha rate in any quantity.



The Star

A very pretty design in the shape of a star, indicating "The Star of Hope," "The Star of Promise," and such like. Printed in three colors, with selections like "Gather together in one the children of God." It has a sheaf of wheat, oak tree, fruit, vegetables, etc., in each of the six points of the star; each star has a silk ribbon, assorted colors, for pinning to every person attending Rally Day. They sell at $1.50 per hundred, or at that rate. But our supply is very limited and when this is exhausted no more can be had for this season.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

The President's Vacation. On the last day of September President Roosevelt ended his "vacation" at Oyster Bay and returned to Washington. We speak of it as a vacation because the papers have been calling it that. But it has been far from vacant of public duties. During this so-called vacation the President has kept in touch with political developments at home, has been in daily consultation with Congressmen, Senators and departmental heads, has been working out his plans for tariff revision and railway rate regulation, has worked over in some detail the Panama Canal affair in consultation with the commission, has doubtless written most of the message which he will present to Congress when it assembles, and has made the most daring and successful intervention in old-world international affairs that has ever been attempted by an American President. It is perhaps not easy for any of us to appreciate the outgo of work and study which was required by the President's part in the Russo-Japanese negotiations. The words that he spoke were not so many, and they were relatively simple. But only those of us who have been presidents of the United States can understand fully the burden that must be borne by a man who is determining to do an unconventional thing which, if successful, will accomplish a vast and beneficent result, while failure in it will bring himself and his government into contempt before the world. Being the world's greatest peace-maker is only by a hair's-breadth removed from being the world's greatest meddler. To choose and carry out a course of action in such a case—even if it required no act beyond the speaking of one word—is a task to make a man's hair turn gray in a night. The President has handled it as part of his summer vacation. He is back in Washington now, rested and refreshed, and ready for work.

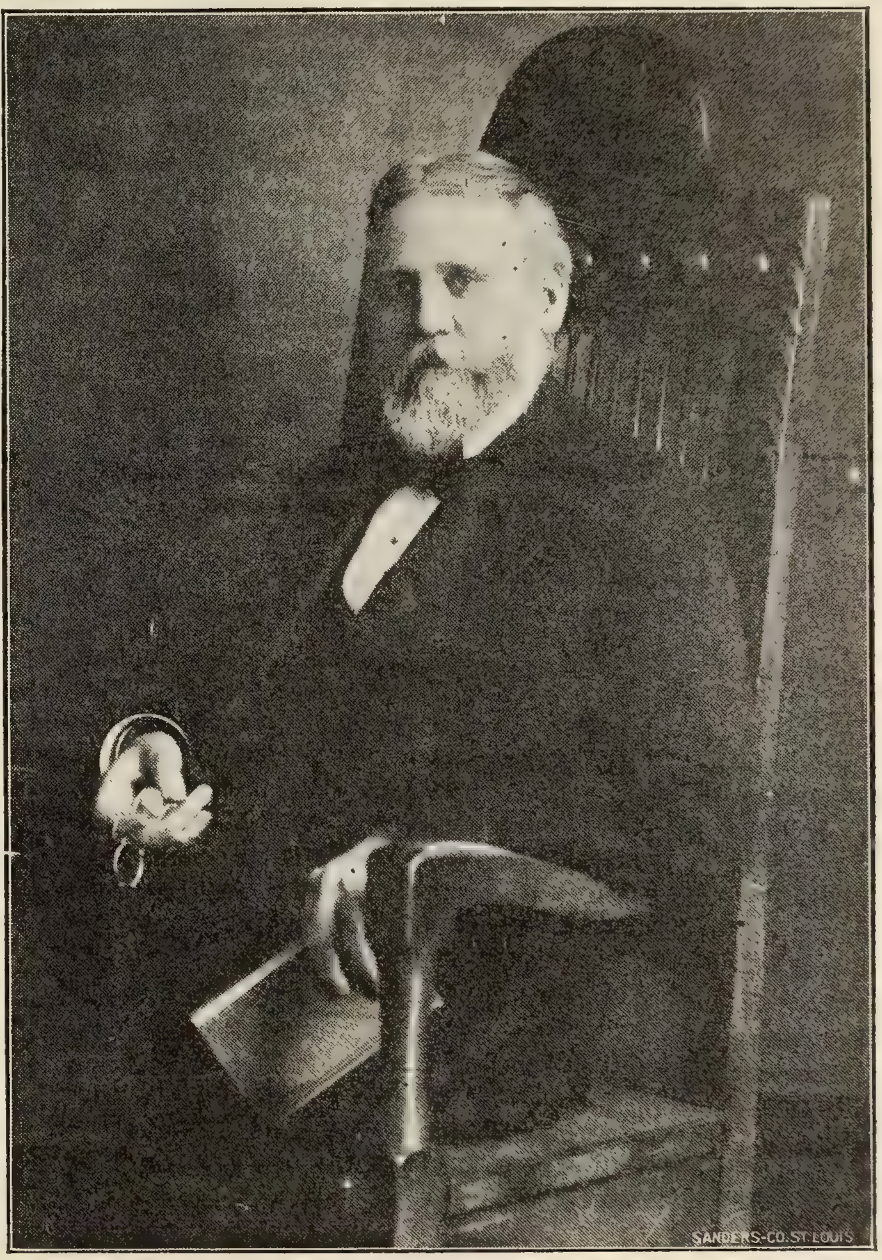
The Winter's Work. There is every reason to anticipate that the President's winter will be as full of weighty business as his summer has been, though doubtless it will contain no single item of such magnificent scope as the Russo-Japanese peace negotiations. The largest enterprises which he will have on his hands will be the securing of legislation for the federal control of railroad rates and the revision of the tariff schedule. On both of these points the party is divided, and the President is in the minority, so far as the political leaders are concerned. The professional politician, whether Republican or Democrat, knoweth his master's crib too well to favor railroad rate regulation. The machine will be against it. But the President's popularity is so extraordinary that scarcely anyone in public life, especially in his own party, will dare to oppose him openly. We are therefore likely to see some unusually subtle politics, when the congressional leaders set out to thwart his plans without incurring the odium of openly opposing him. It is quite in keeping with the historical precedents that, during a President's second term, there should be a weakening of party discipline and a lack of cordiality between the administration and the chief engineers of the party machine. A president who is not eligible to re-election is less amenable to the influence of the party leaders than one who hopes for another term and must keep the machine well oiled in order to get it. So far, the present situation is not at all exceptional. But it is unusual for the executive in such a case to be so amazingly popular with the rank and file of both parties and with the people of no party and with the world in general that those who are opposed to his policies scarcely dare to proceed except by subterfuge and indirection. And yet, with all of Mr. Roosevelt's popularity, he will not have his way about rate regulation and tariff revision without a prolonged and severe struggle. Against him there will be the weight of thirteen billion dollars of capital, representing 210,000 miles of railroad. Against him will be the old states-rights fear of federal control of anything. And we all know well enough the variety, magnitude and multiplicity of influences which rise up in opposition when a reform of the tariff is suggested. Yes, it will be hard winter—in Washington.



J. H. GARRISON, EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

Japan's Bargain. Mr. Dennison, the American who served as Japan's legal adviser in her recent negotiations, has made a somewhat surprising and very informing statement of the cash value of the concessions which Russia made in the treaty which is now awaiting ratification. Upon his showing, Japan did after all succeed in collecting a very substantial indemnity in a veiled form. The portion of the Manchurian railway which Russia ceded to Japan is worth $150,000,000, according to his estimate, and the coal mines of Fushan and Yen-tan are valued at not less than $25,000,000. The fishing privileges along the coast of Siberia will be worth $10,000,000 a year, which, capitalized at 5 per cent, would amount to a lump sum of $200,000,000. The southern part of the island of Sakhalin, which is returned to Japan, is rich in coal and iron mines which are worth uncounted millions. These valuations are amply confirmed by the most trustworthy authorities. When the Japanese people have allowed their heat to subside, they will perhaps begin to realize more perfectly than we can expect them to at present, that it was a great deal better business to accept these concessions and make peace than to expend another billion dollars, not to mention lives, in trying to force Russia to pay an indemnity of six hundred million.

The Cost of Insurance.

Professor Giddings of Columpia University, perhaps the most eminent sociologist in the country, has made a contribution to the many-sided discussion of the insurance question which is now before the public. Aside from the general fact that the financial operations of the great insurance companies are too vast in magnitude and too secret in method for any small group of men to handle with safety to the investor, he gives as the great source of all the trouble that the premiums are too high. We pay for our insurance and we pay a great deal more which goes into the expenses of extravagant management and into heaped-up surplus funds. Professor Giddings, in speaking of the cost of insurance, says: "Roughly speaking, the payment of $200 a year in premiums to an insurance company by a man 40 years of age and in good health, buys an insurance of the face value of $5,000. An examination of the finances of the great New York companies as made public in the recent disclosures, and a comparison of them with the finances of the life insurance systems of a country like New Zealand, where the business is honestly managed by the state, indicates that a premium of $200 ought to secure an insurance of between $10,000 and $15,000." Some of the insurance people have undertaken to answer this statement from Professor Giddings. They do so by saying "it can't be done." The answer does not seem wholly convincing in face of the fact that it has been and is being done. Until the present time, most of the wise advice on the subject of insurance has been to the effect that one should avoid cheap insurance and invest in a company whose premiums are large enough to provide for an ample surplus. And it is wise advice. No sensible man expects to buy gold dollars for 40 cents apiece, and cheap insurance at any price is as bad a bargain as cheap eggs. But that is not saying that we should pay two dollars apiece for gold dollars. And that is about what some of us have been doing in the matter of insurance. There is no fault to be found with the goods, but the price is too high. A poor article (shaky insurance, for example,) may be dear at any price, as we are fond of saying; but it does not follow that a good article is cheap at any price.

Lace and Learning

The making of Honiton lace, says an English paragraph, will soon be as much a lost art as the feather work of the Aztecs, because a recent order of the local school board, in the town which gives its name to the lace, compels the children to attend school so that they have no time to learn to make lace. We do not profess to know much about the peculiar merits and beauties of genuine Honiton lace—no mere man would be expected to—but if this statement correctly presents the alternative, we view with entire composure the extinction of the industry. No sort of lace can be quite precious enough to compensate for the cramped and starved lives of its makers, if that is a necessary condition of its making. If it comes to a choice between wearing lace and keeping the children in school, we will go without Honiton while the world stands and make no complaint.

Food Adulteration.

We grow easily indignant over the adulteration of food with poisonous and deleterious substances, but by far the greater amount of food adulteration is harmless except in that it deprives the customer of what he thinks he is paying for. This sort of adulteration we can contemplate without panic or hysteria, but in view of the magnitude of the total values involved we ought not to contemplate it without solicitude and even indignation. When we buy cotton seed oil under the name of olive oil and at the price of the latter, we are not poisoned but we are robbed. So when we buy fruit jellies which are purely chemical products, or any one of a hundred other things which are sold under the name of higher priced articles. The state chemist of Indiana, who has charge of a laboratory of hygiene for the detection of adulteration in foods sold within that state, has been making some interesting estimates of the magnitude of this swindle. He says:

> On the very reasonable basis of twenty-five cents as the cost of one day's food per capita, I believe it is safe to say that in the immediate past the state of Indiana has lost $3,000,000 annually in consequence of unrestricted food adulteration. This is very easy to figure out. Taking an estimated population of 2,500,000 for the state, and reckoning the daily per capita cost for food to be twenty-five cents, the amount spent for food in one year by the citizens of the state will be about $227,000,000. Of this amount one-fourth was liable to adulteration, and estimating conservatively, five per cent was adulterated. The five per cent of the total cost of food amounts to more than $11,000,000. Certainly as much as $3,000,000 would be a very moderate estimate for the loss to consumers in this state through adulteration.

These figures represent only one state. Probably one hundred million dollars a year for the whole country would be a conservative estimate. What we are going to do about it is another question. One thing we can do is to establish a food laboratory in every state and punish the manufacturers and purveyors of all adulterated foods.

Mr. Cleveland and Women.

Not content with the share of troubles to which he has fallen heir by his new connection with the Equitable, Mr. Cleveland has had the temerity to write an article against woman suffrage and to have it published in the Ladies' Home Journal. While he is so near the subject, he takes occasion to defend or explain his former statements about women's clubs. We have no disposition to take the affirmative in a debate on woman suffrage—or equal suffrage, as its advocates correctly prefer to call it—but Mr. Cleveland's arguments do not seem wholly convincing. His fundamental statement is that the result to be feared is not danger to the republic, but danger to the women, if political rights are extended to both sexes. But when he begins to base his argument upon the results of equal suffrage in the four states which have adopted it, he alleges no deterioration of the quality of womanhood in those states but calls attention to the election of Roberts to the House of Representatives and Smoot to the Senate, both from Utah, where women are allowed to vote. This is scarcely fair, unless he is merely trying to prove that universal suffrage is not an immediate and absolute cure-all for every political evil—and that is a proposition which no one really cares to deny. The truth is that the trial has not yet been made on a sufficiently large scale or in sufficiently normal communities—for Utah, Idaho, Colorado and Wyoming are not in all respects typical American commonwealths—to afford any safe and satisfactory basis for an argument from experience. And perhaps, after all, the eloquent ladies who claim for their sex the privileges and burdens of citizenship, have as good a right to fall back upon the doctrine of abstract human rights as had our political fathers who framed the Declaration of Independence upon a basis of philosophy rather than of history.

The Evolution of a Religious Journal

Three things are essential to the growth or evolution of a great religious journal that is to have a permanent place in the religious life of a people. It must have a message to convey, which the people need to hear; room in which to take root and grow, and ability to adapt itself to the changing needs of the times without being false to its essential principles. Lacking in either one of these essential conditions a religious journal is doomed either to an early death or a lingering invalidism, which is worse.

THE MESSAGE.

The only religious message worth while, in this day and age of the world, is the message which Jesus Christ brought to the world nineteen centuries ago. The purer the form in which this message can be conveyed to men, the nearer it approaches that of the Master, both in matter and spirit, the more vital it will be, and the more valuable will the religious paper be that bears it to a needy world. If there is anything in the world which it is infinitely important for men to hear and heed it is the message which God has sent to the world in Christ. It is the message of God's fatherhood, of his heart of infinite love, yearning to save men from the awful consequences of sin, and to bring them into fellowship and oneness with himself, and with each other. The incarnation, the cross, the resurrection, the ascension, the descent of the Holy Spirit, the preaching of the gospel, the organization of the Church, all have their reason and explanation in this gracious and eternal purpose of God. This is and ever must be the substance of the message of every religious journal that is to root itself in the favor of God and the confidence of men.

THE ROOM.

A religious journal must also have room in which to grow. An oak tree can not be produced in a pot of soil. By room we do not refer, primarily, to territorial extent, though that perhaps enters into the problem. There must be a place, a field, a need, for a religious journal, or there is no promise of permanency for it. There may be any amount of capital behind it, but unless it fills a real need and ministers to the religious necessities of men better than they would otherwise be served, its tenure of life is uncertain, its mission brief. A religious journal, like an individual, has, or acquires, an individuality of its own, a character, a spirit, an influence, which decides the field it is to occupy. If it be limited in its range of vision, in its sympathies, in its conception of Christianity, its constituency must also be limited in the same way. If it make its appeal to the prejudices, the sectarianism and ignorance of its readers, it will draw about it that kind of a constituency, and it is generally a waning constituency. On the other hand, the paper that is able to take a broad view of the world's needs, that has a conception of the gospel which makes its plea catholic in tone and spirit, appeals to a wider constituency, and draws about it readers who are like-minded. In this way a religious paper determines whether its field is to be a wide or a narrow one. But sometimes religious journals attempt to broaden their fields by lowering their ideals, sacrificing their message for a larger constituency. This they may succeed in doing for awhile, but it is the beginning of the end, without a change of policy.

POWER OF ADAPTATION.

The third essential of success is the ability of a religious journal to perceive the needs of the times and adapt its divine message to these needs. Legalism in the editorial chair makes this adaptation impossible, for legalism sacrifices the spirit to the letter. It has lost the spirit of freedom in which all great religious movements have their origin, and is unable to adapt its teaching to the changed conditions and circumstances into which the onward sweep of events is continually bringing us. A false liberalism can not do it, because it does not discriminate between the human and the divine, and often yields the latter, in its mistaken efforts to accommodate itself to superficial or imaginary needs. The religious journal that has a firm grip on the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and knows how to adapt it to the needs of men without sacrificing any essential principle or divine command, has a grip on the future, and is likely to remain an abiding factor in the religious life of the world. Such a religious paper may have a feeble beginning, may have, and often does have, for a time, a severe conflict with poverty and with unworthy prejudices. But if it remain steadfastly loyal to its high ideals, sooner or later it gains the confidence of good men, and a growing constituency that will appreciate its aims and mission, and will help it to realize those ideals in some good degree.

OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

In this article we have spoken of the evolution of a religious journal, and The Christian-Evangelist is, indeed, the root and stem from which have grown all other departments of our publishing business; but, measured by purely commercial standards, The Christian-Evangelist is perhaps the least of the three great branches of our publishing enterprise. The other two departments are that of our Sunday school publications and our book publishing business. These have grown up in the order named. The Sunday school supply department, under the editorial management of our veteran Sunday school editor, W. W. Dowling, has grown from a small beginning to our present complete series of Sunday school publications adapted to the various needs of that important department of church work. For many years this series has held a leading and commanding place in the Sunday school world. The book business, which from the beginning was a part of our plan, was not developed for several years, but has grown steadily until it is not extravagant to say that the literature of the Disciples of Christ, with few exceptions, is embraced in the books which the Christian Publishing Company owns and controls. Each year witnesses an output of new books from our presses which are intended to be adapted to present conditions and needs. This feature of our work is continually growing, and promises to become the chief business of the company. In every department our aim is to produce the very best that we are capable of producing, believing that the Cause and the constituency we serve are entitled to the best.

THEN AND NOW.

The Christian-Evangelist of today, in its size, form, matter, and circulation, together with its material equipment, is a very different paper from what it was forty years ago, and yet the same spirit that breathed in its pages then, breathes in them today. Continuity of aim and oneness of spirit have been a marked feature of the paper throughout its history. The humble sheet, printed on a hand-press, and carried to the post office in a basket forty years ago, was the progenitor of The Christian-Evangelist that now is, with its corps of contributors and correspondents all over

Pentwater Musings.

This is our last Lord's day at Pentwater for the season. It is a typical autumn day. A stiff breeze blowing out of the northwest is sending in a succession of breakers on the beach, and far out to the distant sky-line the whitecaps are running like flocks of gamboling sheep on a green meadow. The old lake is lifting up its voice in one of its loudest anthems, while the swaying and singing pines join in the autumnal melody. The squirrels have been chattering about it in the treetops—the same little neighbors whose feet were pattering on the roof of the cottage when we waked this morning—and the caw of the crow as he passes by, on slow-flapping wings, lets us know that he, too, has an almanac of his own and knows that autumn is here. Nothing else disturbs the quietness of these still woods, through which the chequered sunbeams are falling from a cloudless sky. Here and there a maple has blushed to crimson or gold, but otherwise the leaves are as green as they were in June. One can not look upon the beauty of this scene as it presents itself today, along this wooded lake shore, without seeing down the future when these hills and ravines will be dotted with neat summer cottages dedicated to rest and recreation, to communion with nature and nature's God. This is one of the decrees entered in the book of fate when this great lake was scooped out and these hills were reared and clothed with forests.

When the sound of the village church bell in the distance reached our ears, we walked down to Pentwater lake, where we keep our boat, and rowed across the little lake, nestling behind the hills, unconscious of the billows that were sweeping over the bosom of its larger sister. In the absence of the Methodist pastor, who had gone to Conference, and at his request and that of his offcers, the "Easy Chair" Editor occupied the pulpit this morning, preaching to a goodly number of the village folk, though many of the business men of the town were, as usual, conspicuously absent. Pentwater needs one more church, and that of the best type which the Disciples of Christ establish. Such a church, with one of our live preachers, would put new life into every church in town, reach a class of people that is standing aloof from Christianity, and elevate the religious life of the whole community. We must have it. Brethren of the State Board of Michigan, help us—help the nucleus already on the ground—and what ought to be will be. Pentwater may easily become a radiating center for New Testament Christianity in Northern Michigan, and plans should be laid to that end.

This is Monday, and to-day we are to close up "The Pioneer" until next summer. Sitting now by the bay window that overlooks the lake, we are looking out between words at the tumultuous waves which are still sweeping in from the north; but in an hour the shutters will go up, and we will go out and hence. Very different will be the sights and sounds that will greet our eyes and ears before this reaches our readers. Instead of the far stretching lake with its heaving billows will be the city with its busy streets; the music of the resounding waves will be exchanged for the roar of traffic, and life will take on a little tenser tone. And yet this will have been a busy vacation, filled with multitudinous duties and experiences, leaving little room for increased strenuosity. It is a good day to take our departure from Garrison Park, for there is a prophecy of winter in the sharp autumn breeze, and yet the Park has lost none of its vernal beauty. We shall carry with us bright memories of the place as we see it today, and will be glad to turn our feet this way again when "the good old summertime" shall come again.

A half-day was spent at Macatawa Park, as we passed by to close up dear old "Edgewood-on-the-Lake." There are few fairer places anywhere along this shore, if any, than Macatawa Park; but Lake Michigan seems to have a grudge against the place, and it is thundering at her shore with a whole park of her artillery. Men were at work, however, building out horizontal walls from the shore, which it is believed will stop the ravages of the lake and build up once more the old-time beach. The Park has had one of the most prosperous seasons in its history, and a new association of the cottagers has been formed and incorporated which, they think, will remove some of the annoyances to which they have hitherto been subjected. We trust this may prove to be so. Few of the cottagers were still remaining there. The Harmons and Sister Rogers and her daughter, Mrs. Holland, were there, and these contributed to the pleasure of our brief stay. It was not without some tender memories of the past that we noticed on the shutters and windows and doors, as we were closing up the cottage, the initials of the different members of our now scattered household, placed there to identify the shutters with their respective rooms, in years gone by. A lady reader in the Old World expresses her regret at seeing Edgewood-on-the-Lake advertised for sale, and does not like the thought of its falling into "alien" hands who will know nothing and care nothing for the history and traditions which our readers associate with it. It is not too late yet for some one familiar with its past to own it and control its future.

the world, its staff of editors, and reporters, its stenographers, machines, printing presses, its great publishing plant, and its rapidly-increasing circulation, some account of which is presented to our readers this week. It is enough that God alone knows the mental toil, the sacrifices, the anxieties, the increasing labors, not of one man alone, but of many, that have entered into this evolution of a religious journal from a feeble beginning to its present condition. The chief consolation that comes to us today, is not the material success that has resulted from these years of toil, but that whatever success has been gained, has been won by steadfast adherence to honest convictions of truth, through evil report as well as through good report, and that it is given to us, ere these labors close, to see the faces of the brotherhood turning toward those ideals which have been the inspiration of our lifelong struggles and toils.

Notes and Comments.

It is a happy coincidence that in this special number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST intended to celebrate our removal into our new building and our entrance upon a larger era of usefulness to the cause we are seeking to serve, we are permitted to announce the completion of the raising of a quarter of a million dollars for the past missionary year for foreign missions. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has just received a telephonic message from Secretary Stephen J. Corey stating that he had received a dispatch from F. M. Rains, stating that the $250,000 had been raised and the money was still coming in. As THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has done what it could in its line to bring about this result, we call upon our readers to rejoice with us and with the officers of the society in the completion of this undertaking. Not that it is a finality, but it is a way-mark showing progress, and a prophecy of larger things yet to be. It remains now for the society to write on its banner, $300,000 for the coming year, and plan to raise it.

Since the foregoing was written the announcement entitled "Victory!" from Corresponding Secretary F. M. Rains, which will be found elsewhere, has been received. Be sure to read it and catch some of the enthusiasm that flashes out from every sentence like sparks from an electric battery. The secretary evidently has his head in the clouds where the lightning is, and is closing the circuit between the divine enthusiasm of Christ and a half-sleeping church. Of course we endorse the new watchword—$300,000 between now and Buffalo. You see we had suggested it before we knew the Executive Committee had decided upon it. See Secretary Muckley's dispatch. It is great news we are publishing this week in the largest edition of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ever published.

Current Religious Thought.

Rev. Otis G. Dale contributes an article to "The Interior" on "The Function of the Religious Newspaper," which contains truths which religious people need to ponder. He says:

> This is precisely the function of the religious newspaper; it is the special journal of the fine art of Christian living. It is Christian thinking and Christian practice brought up to date; a record of expert opinions on matters of Christian life and service. It is therefore indispensable to the progress and highest success of every Christian. In its secular news columns is found the news of the world—all that is really worth while—reviewed from the Christian standpoint. Here is very valuable service rendered those who have neither time nor leisure to boil down the great mass of the world's happenings and readjust the residuum to the Christian's viewpoint. The editorial page furnishes the cream of current thought on matters of religious discussion, theological and practical. And contributed articles from the pens of recognized leaders in Christian thought and activity, touch the vital points of Christian life and service, and serve as instruction and inspiration. They give the Christian what every physician, lawyer and tradesman wants to know—what the leaders in his lines are thinking and doing.

Referring to the complaint sometimes made by unthinking people that the religious paper is too expensive, Dr. Dale mentions a few facts which are often overlooked:

> It is sometimes said that the religious papers are too expensive: "They should be as cheap as the popular magazines." Such a complaint comes of forgetting that the religious newspaper is a special journal, necessarily limited in circulation because appealing to a class, not to all people. The religious newspaper, compared as it should be with other special organs, is not expensive. "The Medical News" (Philadelphia) costs $4.00 per year; "The Legal Journal" (Pittsburg) $4.00; "The American Banker" (New York) $4.00; The "Engineering News" (New York) $5.00; "The Grocers' Criterion" (Chicago) $2.00; "The Financier" (New York), which every banker regards indispensable to his business, costs $10.00; "The Educational Review" (New York), published ten months of the year, costs $3.00; "Shooting and Fishing" (New York), a sportsman's magazine, costs $4.00. All periodicals of this class that are well edited range in price from $2.00 to $10.00.
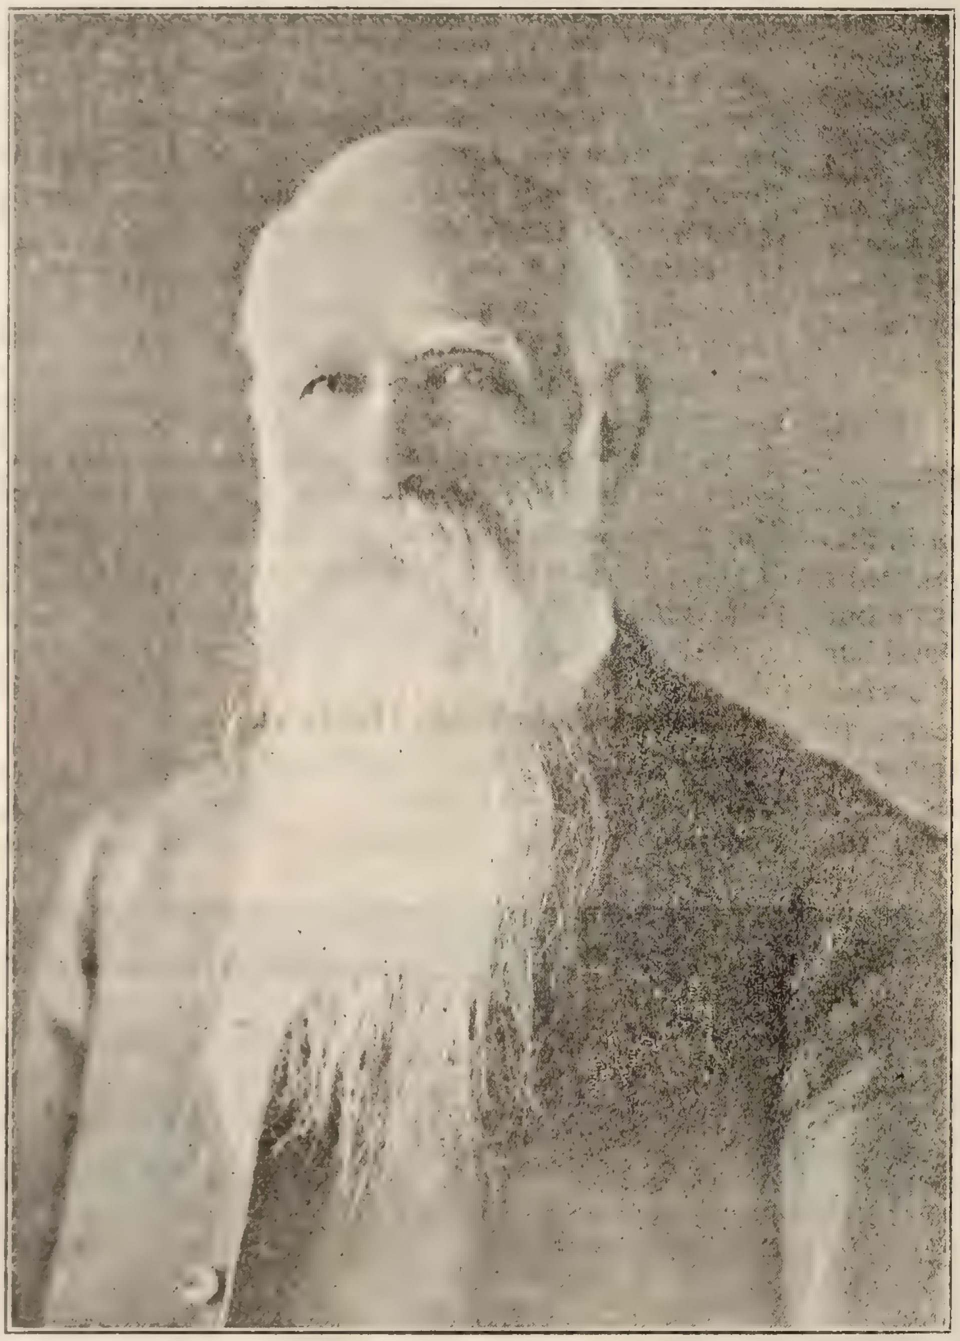
> The real value of the religious newspaper is still unappreciated by a large number of Christian people. In view of the considerations above, it makes its own appeal to every Christian household not as a luxury, but as a necessity for the broadest culture of Christian character and the highest efficiency in Christian service.

What are the Most Distinctive Features of Our Plea?

By W. T. Moore



This question has been asked and answered again and again. Some of the answers have been of great value, but not very many of them, in my judgment, have differentiated that which is most distinctive in the plea which the Disciples have made and are still making. What I say may not be satisfactory to all, but I think it is possible to sum up the main features of our contention in three things:

1. The liberty of every man to decide for himself what shall be his religious position, or what he shall believe and teach.

2. The great simplicity of our plea in its elementary principles, and in our method of presenting it to the world.

3. Its practical adaptation to the real wants of the individual man and the social conditions of the age.

In my judgment, the first of these has not received the attention to which it is entitled by those who have discussed the character of our plea. In their discussions they have often insisted upon certain facts and principles which are very important in themselves; but these must always be subordinated to the question of individual liberty which lies back of them. Our whole contention against human creeds is virtually a protest against interference with individual liberty; but it sometimes happens that while protesting against these creeds some have made other creeds tests of fellowship which are just as tyrannical, and just as unworthy of a great plea, as those embodied in the human symbols which have been evolved out of historical Christianity.

Speaking broadly, the Disciples of Christ have always claimed the rights of individual conscience, but doubtless they have not always been entirely true to this claim. Indeed, they have sometimes pressed their own convictions so decidedly upon the world as to practically ignore the convictions of others who differ with them. It is a noble thing to feel that we are right in our religious position, but it is a charitable thing to recognize the fact that others with whom we differ may just as sincerely as we do feel that they are right.

It was precisely at this point where the Campbells broke with the religious world in their day. In studying the Scriptures they came to certain conclusions, and when they began to proclaim these conclusions to the world their religious neighbors began to stigmatize them as heretics, and doubtless would have carried their opposition to extreme measures, if the days of the fagot and stake had not gone out of fashion.

Now an important question suggests itself at this point. Is it not possible that our religious movement may some day become distinguished for the very same kind of bigotry as that against which it was a solemn and earnest protest when it was first started? The tendency of all religious movements is to reproduce in themselves the very things against which they protested in the beginning, and out of which protests these movements had their origin.

At this point we must constantly be on our guard. The liberty we claim for ourselves we must freely grant to others. We are ardent advocates of Christian union, but a union which does not take into account the sacredness of conscience and the liberty of individual action would be worth little or nothing even if such a union could be formed. At any rate it seems to me that we have reached a period in our development when it is important for us to hark back to first principles. I notice a few earnest brethren are making this call, while at the same time they seem to be utterly ignorant of what these first principles are. They seem to think the very first principle is to adopt their exact point of view and echo precisely what they believe and teach. In short, they claim a whole world of liberty for themselves, but they seem unwilling to grant any liberty at all to other people. They set up a distinct standard, and then require every man to adopt this as his rule of faith and practice, while all who do not strictly pronounce their shibboleths are practically ostracized, or in some way discounted, as members of our reformatory movement.

Now if these ardent defenders of the faith could come to understand that their procedure is precisely the very thing against which the Campbellian movement made its most emphatic protest, they would perhaps modify to some extent, at least, the dogmatic spirit which they show towards their brethren who do not exactly agree with them in all their contentions. I do not hestitate to say that without the liberty, to which I am calling attention, the Disciple movement may become as sectarian as any of the other religious movements that have a place in the history of the Church. But if we will all recognize the liberty for which I am contending, it is possible to make our movement not only comprehensive enough to embrace all who love and serve our Lord Jesus Christ, but also make it possible to bring about such a union of all these as would assure the conversion of the world within the near future.

The simplicity of our plea is also a notable feature of it. From the viewpoint of the liberty to which I have called attention everything is simplicity itself. We have only to open our Bibles and examine for ourselves, not only as to what the faith is, but also whether we are in it or not. We at once avoid fruitless discussions about doctrines and philosophies, so far as fellowship is concerned. We may discuss any of these if we choose to do so; but we must not make our conclusions tests of fraternity. We must believe the simple facts of the Gospel, obey the simple commands of the Gospel, and then enjoy the simple promises of the Gospel. We must make our conditions of fellowship precisely equal to the conditions necessary to the Christian life and character. We dare not go any further than this; and while we confine ourselves to this limitation, our plea is so simple that it seems to me it ought to commend itself at once to every one who is a loyal follower of our Lord Jesus Christ.

In the third place, from the liberty standpoint, our plea adapts itself to the present conditions of the age in which we live. No one will deny that the old despotisms are rapidly crumbling to dust. Nothing is more distinctly apparent in the political horizon today than the fact that all forms of government which do not recognize individual rights are either tumbling down, or else are decidedly shaky on their foundations. It is also true that religious ecclesiasticisms are rapidly losing their power. Even the influence of the Vatican is nearly everywhere becoming less and less a power in modern society. All social conditions are crying out for liberty of conscience and the right of individual interpretation.

In the light of these facts we must not emasculate our plea of the very element which makes it fit for the present condition of the world. If we hold it to its original purpose, it will, in my judgment, finally conquer the world, but if we surrender it to the spirit of dogmatism and despotism, which is always clamoring to take possession of every movement in the best interests of mankind, then we may understand once for all that our mission will be practically ended and another will have to be started before the final triumphs of Christianity in the world can be truthfully proclaimed. Let us then write the word liberty over every sermon, every essay, every editorial, every church, every Sunday school, every college, etc., which stands for the plea which the Disciples of Christ are making, and let those who can not do this cease to disturb the glorious atmosphere of freedom which the plea of the Disciples invites us to breathe.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

If living be a fine art, dying is none the less so. "Death," says Ruskin, "is the only time when one can be nobly thoughtless." It is surely the time to be honest, to come to our real selves. "Today kings, tomorrow beggars," said Hazlitt of actors, "it is only when they are themselves that they are nothing." Today kings, tomorrow beggars; it is only when they are nothing that they are themselves, might be said of actors on a wider stage. "Thank God, this is real!" exclaimed some one when brought face to face with death. More unreality goes to make up life than we would willingly confess. Men and women go through it in a pose, a variety of poses, assumed as kings, beggars, jesters, stoics, playing a part; and we might properly ask of many, "What character have you selected?" Undoctored human nature is a scarce article.

If there is ever a time when the mask is thrown off it is when death comes. Few attitudinize on their death beds. The hypocrite then uncovers. There is no thought of the judgment of the spectators. Exceptions there may be, but even recorded instances of men who die to the audience have a later story of their genuine spirit. Mirabeau's talk is that of the orator: "I shall die today. When one has reached that point there only remains one thing to be done: to perfume oneself, to crown oneself with flowers, to surround oneself with music, in order to enter more pleasantly upon that sleep from which one awakens no more." Music, perfume, flowers—a triumphal procession to the grave. This is the natural language of the orator addressed to the unseen audience. But presently we hear of no music, no perfume, no flowers, and in the extremity of mortal agony the man replaces the actor as he breaks into reproaches against his physician. Pope gives us a picture of Sir Godfrey Kneller's death bed, lying down contemplating the plan he had made for his monument, saying he would not like to lie among the rascals at Westminster, and asking him to write his epitaph. He describes to Pope his dream: "I dreamed I was dead. Before me I saw a door and a great number of people about it. As I drew near I could distinguish Peter by his keys, with some other apostles. They were admitting people. As the first after my coming applied for admittance Peter asked his name and religion. 'I am a Roman Catholic,' said the spirit. 'Go in then, and sit down in the seats on the right hand.' The next was a Presbyterian. He was admitted, and offered a seat on the other side. My turn came next,

SHOUTED UP

In England They Politely Refer to the Stomach as "Little Mary."

Little Mary.—"I say up there, won't you please quit sending down such a variety of unnatural things to me.

"Here this morning first came down some sticky, pasty material, all starchy and only partly cooked. It was wheat or oats and was decorated with milk and sugar.

"Between the unchewed mouthfuls came gulps of coffee, finally a good big drenching of it. Then some bread and a lot of grease, perhaps it was butter, then some fried eggs and fried meat and more coffee, and some fried cakes and syrup. You load things on me as if I could stand everything.

"I try faithfully, but there's no use, I can digest part of it and the balance sours and I simply have to push it along to the liver. He says he's badly overworked now and gets so weak he almost collapses, so he sends the sour mass on down into the intestines to raise gas and trouble of all kinds. We can't help it, and you must either select your food with better reason or stand more and more trouble down here. Suppose you try us on some cooked or raw fruit, a little Grape-Nuts and cream, 2 soft-boiled (not fried) eggs, some well-browned toast and a cup of Postum. Liver and I will guarantee to make you feel the keen joy of a hearty and well man if you will send those things down to us. There's a reason, but never mind that, try it first and when you find we know what we are talking about, you may be ready to hear the reason."

The New Home of the Christian Publishing Company

How a Religious Newspaper is Made.

The Christian Publishing Company now occupies what is perhaps the best building in the West that is used exclusively for the production of religious literature. Fronting on Pine Street, on the lots numbered 2710-2712-2714, it stands out as the distinctive feature of the immediate neighborhood. The building extends to the alley in the rear, the area of the ground it covers being 75x131 feet. Entering the front door, the general business offices are found on the left-hand side, while on the right is the book room. To these departments is allotted the same amount of space—31x50 feet. Separating the two rooms is the front hall and stairway, leading to the second and third floors. Under the stairway is a large safe vault, and in its rear are lavatory and elevator. Under this front part of the building—75x50 feet—are the furnace room, and a great fire-proof vault, wherein are deposited seventy-five tons of book plates.

The rear portion of the ground-floor of the building is devoted to the press and mailing rooms. Here are seven large presses, folder, cutters, etc. The power used is electric, each machine being supplied with its own motor, and all kept constantly at work. The mailing room is contiguous, so that no time is lost in scattering the papers to all parts of the country as they come from the presses. From ten to fifteen large wagon-loads of mail are sent out weekly from this room.

On the second floor, in the front part of the building, are the editorial and circulation offices. There are five front rooms, and in these may be found the home force of our periodicals, some twelve in number. Two large rooms on either side of the halls and the stairways are used for purposes of stock, reference library, and among other things, an editorial lunch-room. Just back of, and communicating with, the offices wherein the editors do their work, is the great composing room, 64x80—one of the finest rooms for this purpose in any state—supplied with type of all kinds, and that wonderful machine which puts words into lead, called the linotype. The third floor is devoted to the advertising department, a large room for the use of the city ministers who gather at the headquarters of the Christian Publishing Company nearly every Monday for their conferences, and large store rooms where the book stock is kept. When we recently moved from the old building, on Locust Street, we brought with us 164 wagonloads of books, and as we had very materially reduced the stock, in view of removal, and have made many reprints and additions since then, this will give our readers a little idea of what is contained within the walls of our present building. The whole building is lighted by electricity. It is tastefully decorated, the woodwork being brown and the walls stained white. The building itself is of brick, and is substantially constructed. It is filled with workers who are kept busy earning their bread by "the sweat of their brow." It is dedicated to an appreciative brotherhood for the purpose of filling the homes of our land and the hearts of the Christian people with a literature that purifies and elevates, that helps us to be better citizens, and brings us closer to God. That the Christian Publishing Company may never falter from this purpose, and that our great brotherhood may help us to be true always to this aim, is the wish of every employe.

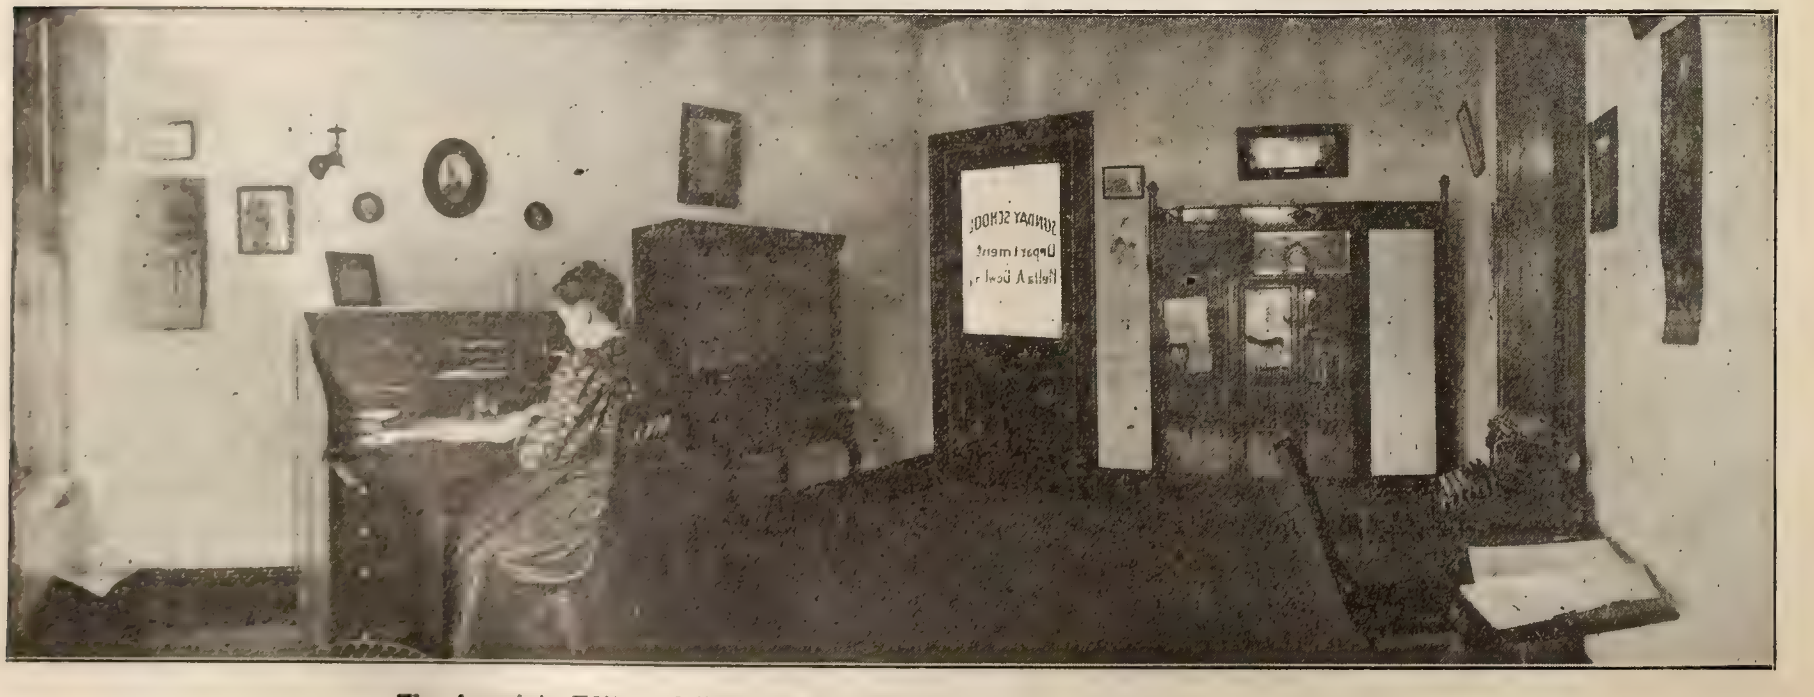
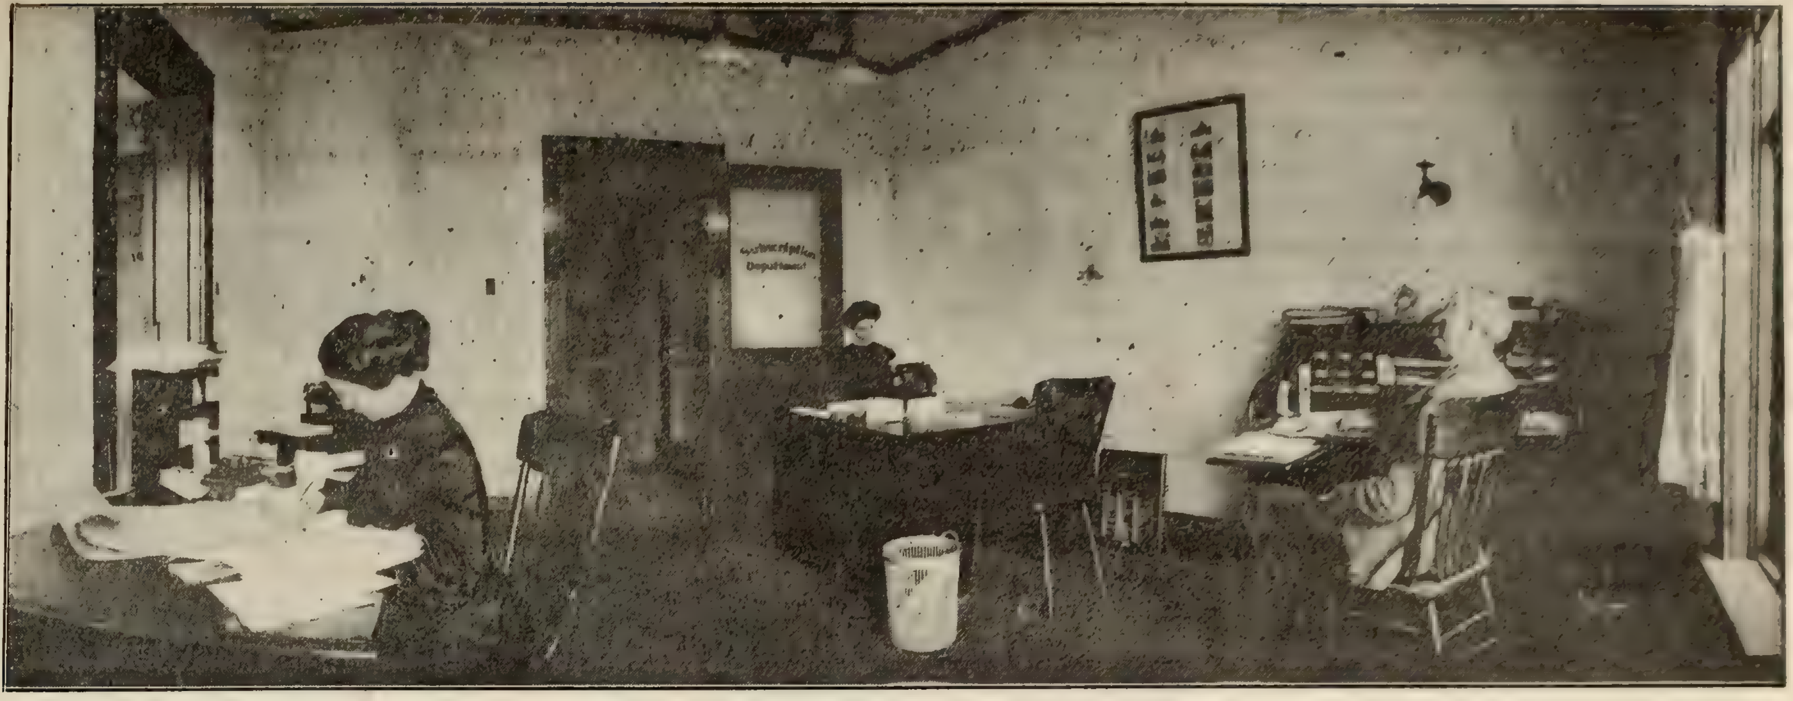
HOW WE MAKE THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

The present number of The Christian-Evangelist may be called a "special" issue, in that it has "features" that do not appear



The Associate Editor of "Our Young Folks" and other Sunday School Periodicals.



The Office of the Head of the Subscription Department.

in every number, yet the same routine is very largely followed week after week in getting out the paper. It may be of interest to a great many readers who have never been inside a newspaper office if we, seeing that we are this week presenting to them some illustrations of our new home, give them some little idea of how a weekly paper is produced.

To some extent, all newspaper editors work alike. But the conditions of work on a weekly, of course, are in many ways different from those on daily newspapers. Necessarily the staff of the latter must include a larger number of workers, for they have to handle much more matter, and handle it much more quickly. The work, therefore, must be more subdivided and every department have its recognized head. For instance, a daily newspaper has what is called its editor, who is very frequently one of its proprietors, if not the only one. With this man, in the final analysis, rest all the decisions of policy or judgment. Then there is the managing-editor, who is responsible for the general make-up of the paper. Under him are the heads of departments who are respectively responsible for the assistants who aid them in their work. The telegraph editor handles the news that may come in from all outside districts, but the city editor has control of the local staff of reporters and must see that his paper gets all the news of his city. Editorial writers, sporting editors, Sunday editors, and others, have their special field of work. But with a weekly newspaper the conditions are different. Many of them have but one editor, and what are known as corresponding editors, who send in contributions either regularly or as they may feel disposed. On the better class of weeklies, however, there is usually an assistant to the chief editor. That is the way with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Each has, in a measure, his distinctive work, and yet much of their work overlaps, and they are in constant consultation both in their plans and in their writing.

It was in the latter part of last year that the editors first conceived the idea of publishing a CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST special issue. The delay in the completion of their new building prevented their bringing the issue out when they had first arranged for it, and the further delay in getting some of the new machinery has postponed the number until this week. Every issue of the paper is carefully planned. As we published, some eighteen months ago, a number commemorating the fortieth anniversary of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and there was included in that number the congratulations and the eulogies from a large number of the leading men of our brotherhood and of the denominations we did not seek to let it be known that we intended to issue this particular number, illustrating our building; otherwise we would doubtless have had many kind words in view of this particular issue.

No sooner is a proof copy of one week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST out of the hands of the editors and the great press thundering as it prints paper after paper than the thought of the editors is directed towards what will appear in the next week's issue. From their repositories are brought forth articles that may have been written two years ago, or some that may have been received in the mails that morning. Here is one place where editorial judgment comes in. Everything must be weighed according to the value of the treatment of the particular subject; whether it is opportune, and how much space can be allotted in view of the amount of and the importance of the news that must be considered. Very careful attention is given to the question as to whether any of the articles that may be selected can be abbreviated or condensed. Nearly all the articles that are received from general writers are written at too great length. Then the matter of illustrations is taken up. Photographs are sought out weeks in advance of the time when they are to be used in the paper. On what pages they will go, and the size they are to be made, is carefully thought out and they are turned over to the photo-engravers. The space in the paper is finally allotted to each department and article, and after the work of editing is completed the copy is taken to the foreman of the composing room, who arranges it for the operator of the typesetting machine.

and as I approached, Peter asked very civilly my name. I said it was Kneller. I had no more said this than Luke, who stood near, turned and said with a great deal of earnestness: 'What, the famous Sir Godfrey Kneller, of England?' 'The same Sir, at your service.' On this St. Luke embraced me and made me a great many compliments on the art we both of us followed in this world, and entered so far into the subject he seemed almost to have forgot the business for which I came thither. Recollecting himself at last, however, he said: 'I beg your pardon, Sir Godfrey, I was so taken up with the pleasure of conversing with you. But pray, sir, what religion may you be of?' 'Why truly, sir,' said I, 'I am of no religion.' 'Oh, sir, you will be so good then as to go in and take a seat where you please.' " But that was two days before the vain old man was called to answer, and when the last hour came there was no humor, no trifling, no assurance or peace.

Men who have lived carelessly and selfishly have gone away with deep remorse and distress of soul. "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean!" was the yielding outcry of Julian the Apostate. "When I lived I provided for everything but death; now I must die I am unprovided to die," exclaimed sorrowfully Cæsar Borgia, the Italian prelate and soldier, at the close of his earthly career. "I am taking a fearful leap in the dark!" was the last despairing exclamation of Hobbes, the infidel. Dying after expending all his energies to overthrow the Christian religion, Voltaire would frequently cry: "O Christ!" "O Jesus Christ!" He complained that he was abandoned by God and man. All the torments of the furies were upon him; all the ravings of Orestes as nothing to those of the apostle of unbelief. His physician withdrew in terror and his nurse ever after refused to wait upon the sick for fear of witnessing another such scene as the death of Voltaire. "Behold eighty-three years passed away!" exclaimed Talleyrand. "What cares, what agitation, what anxieties, what ill will, what sad complications! And all without results!" "The present is a fleeting moment," said Gibbon, "the past is no more, the prospects for the future dark and doubtful." "I am haunted by remorse," said the Duke of Buckingham, a professed atheist, "despised by my acquaintance, forsaken by my God." Who will forget the swan song of Byron written Jan. 22, 1824, his last birthday, the thirty-sixth?

"My days are in the yellow leaf,
  The flowers and fruits of life are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
  Are mine alone."

How sad beside the swan song of the Christian poet!

"Twilight and evening bell,
  And after that the dark,
And may there be no sadness of farewell
  When I embark:
For though from out our bourne of time and place
  The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
  When I have crossed the bar."

We see the true art of dying in the passing of the just. Since the days of Christ, Christians, when dying, have exulted in the presence and smile of God. The faith cherished in life proves a stay in death. Religion fails not in the hour when most needed. No Christian in all the long history of Christianity has ever retracted on his death bed. The terror and despair of unbelief are matters of common observation. Hope, assurance, joyous rapture have been manifested by thousands sustained by religion. "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!" cries Stephen. "This soul in flames I offer now to thee!" exclaimed Jerome of Prague. "Be of good cheer, Brother Ridley," cries Latimer, "for we shall this day light such a candle in England as will, I trust, by God's grace, never be put out." "Be of good comfort, brother, for we shall have a happy supper with the Lord this night!" is John Bradford's word of victory. "Thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth!" says Martin Luther. "I will die steadfast clinging to Christ and to the doctrine I have so constantly preached." "I am weary. I will now go to sleep. Good-night," said Neander. "Best of all God is with us," exclaimed Wesley. "To you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings," exclaims Campbell.

Here is the great city of Rome. Along the crowded way passes a little shrunken Jew, a tent maker, born in Tarsus. Look at him as he moves through the streets of the eternal city. With firm tread he goes to his execution. Armed soldiers tread heavily beside him. Yet his thought is not upon the stately temples that rise on every hand, not upon the trial of his present position, nor upon the pain of the last struggle. Take your stand by his side and hear him. He is talking of the glory beyond. Listen. "To be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord. I am willing rather to travel out of the body that I may dwell with the Lord." "For me to live is Christ, to die is gain." "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." "I shall see my Master tonight. I shall be with Stephen and the rest. I shall behold the King in his beauty. This is my crowning day!" The scene of the execution is reached. With joyful countenance Paul stands and awaits the blow. The word of command is given. With sharp, heavy sword the Roman soldier smites off the head of the great apostle to the Gentiles and sets his spirit free. Now if our eyes could look as Elisha's we should see him leap into a chariot of flame and fly through limitless space. Look beyond. See him mount higher and higher. Behold him move up, up, forever upward. See him enter the city celestial and hear the word of his Master, "Well done!" The art of dying is an easy one if the life be worthy.

After a False Start.

"In 1890 I began to drink coffee.

"At that time I was healthy and enjoyed life. At first I noticed no bad effects from the indulgence but in course of time found that various troubles were coming upon me.

"Palpitation of the heart took unto itself sick and nervous headaches, kidney troubles followed and eventually my stomach became so deranged that even a light meal caused me serious distress.

"Our physician's prescriptions failed to help me and then I dosed myself with patent medicines till I was thoroughly disgusted and hopeless.

"Finally I began to suspect that coffee was the cause of my troubles. I experimented by leaving it off, except for one small cup at breakfast. This helped some but did not altogether relieve my distress. It satisfied me, however, that I was on the right track.

"So I gave up the old kind of coffee altogether and began to use Postum Food Coffee. In 10 days I found myself greatly improved, my nerves steady, my head clear, my kidneys working better and better, my heart's action rapidly improving, my appetite improved and the ability to eat a hearty meal without subsequent suffering restored to me. And this condition remains.

"Leaving off coffee and using Postum did this, with no help from drugs, as I abandoned the use of medicines when I began to use the food coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

HOW COPY IS TREATED.

A great many readers seem to think that the editor of The Christian-Evangelist personally looks after every detail of the business. Whether they order a lesson leaf, a hundred song books, or make an inquiry, or want to secure a pastor, or order their paper stopped, or send in communications about a hundred and one other matters, they address it to the editor. Now, as the editor is absent from his office for many weeks in the year, necessarily he could not attend to all these detailed inquiries and communications. Even were he at his desk every day in the year he could not do this, for it would take up the whole of his time and that of a corps of assistants. When the mail arrives it is carefully sorted and goes to the different departments that make up the Christian Publishing Company. All matter pertaining to the editorial work goes to the editorial rooms, and even a great deal of this does not see the eye of the editor-in-chief until it is in type. He has plenty to do without laboring over so many of the small matters of detail.

To watch the currents of religious thought, not only in our own movement, but among the great religious bodies of the world, to note the attitude of the world's thinkers in every department of thought toward Christianity, to study the inner tendencies among ourselves and others, and give the keynote to the brotherhood in editorial leaders, and to call for special articles on special topics as they may be needed, and, in a word, to decide the policy of the paper on all the current problems of the times—that is the work of the editor-in-chief, and that is enough to tax the strength and wisdom of any man, and to send him to the source of all wisdom for guidance.

The articles and news are carefully sorted out and put into drawers or pigeon-holes, according to subjects, such as Budget matter, Evangelistic, obituaries, literary reviews, Forum, etc. Each mail adds to the matter to be handled. When the editors get to work they take up department by department. The "Family Circle" and the contributed articles are generally the first to be prepared for the press. Then follows the mass of news matter, many of the items of which would not be recognized by the senders, were not their names attached, so great has been the change made by the editorial revision. A news item that occupies a page of ordinary writing paper may be condensed into fourteen or fifteen words, for a great many writers tell the editors things that would be of no interest whatever to the readers of The Christian-Evangelist. Needless words are cut out; whole sentences are deleted that bear only in a remote way or are of interest to but a few people. The aim of the editor is to present the news in as short a compass as possible. For instance, we give here a specimen of an evangelistic news item as it is received and as it appears in the paper:

"Grand River, O., Sept. 26, 1905.
"Editors, The Christian-Evangelist,
"St. Louis, Mo.

"Dear Brethren:

"We have just closed what was from all points considered the greatest meeting ever held in this place. We began three weeks ago Sunday, and there were ten added the first week. At the end of the second week the enthusiasm had greatly increased and the number of converts was correspondingly great. In the end there was an increase of over fifty per cent in the membership. Most of the converts were substantial people, and will greatly add to the force of our brethren in this growing town. I never stood before audiences of finer people and seldom before larger assemblies, and never before more intelligent ones. The officers are wide-awake, earnest men, well posted in regard to their duty. A number of consecrated women contributed largely to the success. The weather and roads were very much against us, but people came whenever they could, over muddy roads and long distances, to hear the good news. Brother Harker, the pastor, is an earnest, faithful, efficient preacher, and after this period of labor with him, I can say he is a true yokefellow. The singing was in the charge of Brother Smalley, whose fine solos contributed very helpfully to the success of the meeting. There were two additions from the Baptists and three from the Methodists. We believe that many more will come out for Christ.

"Your Brother,
"Neal R. Ford."

The space that such a communication takes when put into type can be seen by the reader, and if the news were permitted to go in thus, as written, The Christian-Evangelist would have to be enlarged very many times or nothing else could appear in the paper except such communications. The assistant editor, or his assistant, takes these news items and carefully scans them. When he has done his work the above item appears something like the following:

"Grand River, O., Sept. 26.—In a three weeks' meeting just closed the membership was increased fifty per cent. Two came from the Baptists and three from the Methodists. The weather was unfavorable. Fred M. Harker is the pastor and James Smalley was the singer.—Neal R. Ford."

SOME "NEWS" THAT IS NOT NEWS.

By such condensation we are able to hear from many parts of the country about the work being accomplished. In treating a paragraph of this kind the editors go on the assumption that all know that it is the year 1905, so that it is not necessary to state it fifty times on the same page of the paper, nor is it necessary to talk about the weather conditions at any length. Furthermore, it may be assumed that the pastor at the church is a really good fellow, and that the singer is competent. The readers of The Christian-Evangelist are not particularly interested in what one evangelist, traveling over the country, thinks about the fifteen or fifty preachers with whom he may be associated, nor what these same preachers may think of the evangelist. Neither the preacher nor the evangelist will wish to say in print anything disparaging one of the other, and it is taken for granted that they are all trying to do good work. By acting upon such an assumption the editors can give a great deal of news and facts in the space that the writers would like to be filled with what, to very many people at any rate, might appear to be drawn-out praise, even though it be deserved and sincere. The editors have to consider always a hundred thousand readers instead of one writer, and in order to get variety and a wide range of news they must use the blue pencil very freely. Hardly anything is published in The Christian-Evangelist as it is received from the writer.

Then a great deal of thought is used in securing news. Matters of special importance are provided for sometimes weeks and months ahead. The assistant editor is watchful of what is going to happen as well as of what has happened. A big meeting is to be held some place; special photographs are ordered and a writer secured to send in a reliable report promptly. It may be nothing more than an item that would take two lines, but the telephone or the telegraph is put to use to secure the information promptly. It is thus that The Christian-Evangelist has been able to pass the other religious newspapers in the up-to-dateness of its news. It is securing a special staff of contributors or correspondents who write for no other paper, in order that what appears in its columns shall not be duplicated elsewhere. The editors believe that a religious newspaper in its sphere should not be one whit behind the daily papers in the alertness of its reportorial correspondents, and that its important contributed articles should be of the very best. They do not publish an article simply because it will please the writer or his friends. Is there in the article a message for the brotherhood at large?

DOES IT GIVE INFORMATION

that has not been published before? Does it convey any idea that is worthy of consideration? Does it give a new setting to an old theme? These are the considerations that weigh; not the possibility of securing a few additional subscribers by giving pleasure to some individual. No doubt the editors frequently err in judgment and something that might be helpful or stir up a hornet's nest is returned to the writer or goes into the waste-paper basket instead of into the columns of the paper, but editors are human and they can act only according to their best judgment. Besides, it would be quite impossible to print one-fiftieth part of what is received in the average newspaper office. The very limits in the size of the paper necessarily make a selection of the matter compulsory. We can squeeze only so many words into a column of lead type, and you can put only ninety-six columns into thirty-two pages. A certain amount of space must be given to advertisements, for without these the average newspaper could not be published. It costs the Christian Publishing Company very considerably more to make your copy of The Christian-Evangelist than the $1.50 you pay for its fifty-two weekly visits. Indeed, even with the revenue derived from advertisements it costs us more to make the paper than we get for it, and were it not for the general business and the fact that the paper is a medium for pushing the book business of the company we could not possibly publish the paper at a subscription price of less than $2.50 or $3.00, which is the price charged by nearly all the religious papers circulated by the Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, etc.

PUTTING THE COPY INTO TYPE.

When the editor has decided into what particular part of the paper any article is to go he indicates by writing the same on the top corner of the first sheet of paper, specifying the size of type and the kind of headline. This copy is put into a copy basket and when the compositors are ready for it the foreman distributes it and it is set by machine or by hand labor, as required. With the great development of the speed of newspaper presses came the demand for a quicker method of setting type, and in nearly all large offices the linotype is now installed, for it can do the work of about six hand compositors in the same time. It is a wonderful machine. Operated by a keyboard somewhat similar to that of a typewriter, this machine assembles matrices into "lines of type," spaces the lines, carries all matrices to the casting mechanism, molten type metal is forced into the mold, the line is trimmed to the proper height and thickness and discharged into a galley or stick. While one line is being cast another is being set by the operator and the matrices of a third line are distributed automatically into the magazine of the machine. The old way was for the compositor to stand before his case and to pick up from a number of little compartments the individual letters that go to make up words; but now, except in the matter of fancy types and for the setting-up of advertisements, machines are very largely used.

As fast as a galley is completed proofs are taken and these go, one to the editor's room and one to the proof-reader's room. The editors seldom read the proofs until they have been "revised" by the proof-reader, which means that the proof-reader has carefully read them, the copy-reader reading aloud from the copy to the proof-reader, who scans the proof with watchful eye for errors, marks all defects, and returns the proof to the operator of the machine, who sets again every line in which an error has been found. For instance, if a comma has been left out or an "a" been made instead of an "e," the whole line has to be re-set. The corrected lines are then inserted in place of those wherein were the errors.

When a good deal of the matter is in type the "make-up" of the paper is decided upon; that is, the question of fitting the different articles into the pages is considered. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is so printed that all its pages go to press at once, but there are sixteen pages that are called "outside" and sixteen that are known as "inside" pages, and it is only on the outside pages that illustrations can be presented with any degree of success; hence, if there are to be pictures in the paper, as there are quite a number in the present issue, we have to carefully scheme not only how they will show up best from the artistic standpoint, but where they will print best, and how we can use them without sacrificing the news features. Perhaps an article does not quite fit a page; then the editor must hunt up a poem or a short article or write something himself to fill out the space. Sometimes the article is just a few inches too long for the page. Then it has to be reduced, and this reduction after reduction is frequently a very teasing undertaking.

As fast as pages are "made up" they are so arranged that the large single sheet which bears their impress can be folded into a paper with pages running consecutively from one to thirty-two. It is a busy time when we are about to "go to press." The "forms" have been kept open for the latest news and the editor is scanning the telegrams while the press men are waiting to "make ready." When the editor gives the final word to "let-her-go" the pages are locked up in their chases or iron frames, quickly hauled to the elevator, and sent down to the press room, where the large presses are waiting to begin their reverberations. Thousands of sheets of paper are fed automatically into a press at the rate of about thirteen or fourteen hundred an hour, and come out printed on both sides, ready for the folding machine, which quickly changes them from the single sheet into a paper of thirty-two pages. Where a cover is added, as this week, this is printed on a separate press and inserted in another part of the folding machine, and is pasted, and the paper comes out complete with thirty-six pages. It is then delivered to the cutting machine, where the side, the top, and the bottom are trimmed, leaving the paper ready for reading, with all its pages cut.

The dissemination of the paper is another story. Week by week the subscription list grows. A few readers drop out, either because of death, supposed inability to pay for the paper, or for some other cause, but the proportion of new subscribers is so very large in excess of those giving up the paper that we merely mention them; still there are names that have to be taken from the list, while new ones are being added at the rate of several hundred each week. These names are printed on a long list. This list is arranged by states and the post offices in the states are arranged alphabetically. The mailers, as they receive the paper from the folder, quickly wrap it and with a little machine paste on the address to which the paper is to go. As fast as the papers are addressed they are put into large mail bags and transferred to the post office, where they are scattered to every state in the Union and to many countries abroad.

Our Budget.

—The Christian-Evangelist throws open the doors of its new home this week, and invites its readers to come in and see for themselves.

—This "housewarming" has been a little delayed, but public interests had to be served first, and we could not get around to it any sooner.

—When you are in town, come and see us at closer range, and inspect the various departments of our business.

—The Christian-Evangelist reaches out a helping hand to Cincinnati this week, in its evangelistic campaign. We like to help along every good work.

—J. W. Gorrell has resigned at Lisbon, Ohio.

—C. W. Yard has closed his ministry at Thayer, Kan.

—Edwin Kieter will begin his ministry at Renick, Mo.

—The work at Douglas, Ariz., is now in charge of S. W. Jackson.

—K. A. Williams has entered upon the work at Tishomingo, I. T.

—T. J. Linkous has entered upon the pastorate at Statham, Ga.

—Claris Yeuell is located at the Randall Street Church, Baltimore.

—Wilmington, O., will have a new parsonage within the next year.

—J. M. Crutcher, of Chillicothe, expects to begin another meeting soon.

—E. S. Lewis will take up the work at Kewanee, Ind., next Lord's day.

—A. K. Adcock will enter upon the pastorate at Tiffin, O., November 1.

—T. D. Vosburg, of Brewerton, N. Y., has entered upon the work at Tully.

—A. T. Campbell has accepted a call to the Monroe Street Church, Chicago.

—Harold Bell Wright began his pastorate at Lebanon, Mo., last Lord's day.

—At the dedication of the North Side Church, Chicago, there was pledged over $2,000.

—C. W. Deane, Colfax, Ill., goes to Grand Rapids, Wis., to begin his work October 7.

—C. H. Caton has located at Blandinsville, Ill., and has taken work with the church there.

—The Hoosier Brothers are engaged in a meeting at Columbia, the educational center of Missouri.

—C. L. Andrews is succeeding at Narrows, Va., where he has recently taken charge of the work.

—Rufus H. Webb, of Galva, Kan., has left the United Brethren Church to enter the Christian Church.

—Miss L. Rita Rannels, of Wilmington, O., is assisting Miss Mary Lyons in district convention work.

—Signs of new life greatly encourage pastor and people at Mankato, Minn., where E. A. Orr ministers.

—H. M. Garn, of New Antioch, O., is moving to Cleveland, where he will have charge of a suburban church.

—The new building of the young church at Blanchester, O., is a very creditable edifice, and the outlook is hopeful.

—An Arkansas brother has just added $200 to his annuity account with our National Benevolent Association.

—Our church at Cambridge City, Ind., has suspended preaching service and Sunday school pending the renovation of their building.

—A. W. Gehres, of Veedersburg, Ind., has closed his work, and after holding several meetings will be ready to locate.

—Geo. H. Brown, for two years pastor at Lexington, Ill., has just taken up the work at the First Church, Charleston, Ill.

—Our church at Uniontown, Pa., contributed over $100 to the relief fund for the powder mill sufferers from the recent explosion.

—The brethren at Hammond, Ind., where C. J. Sharp ministers, after a meeting in a large tent, raised $2,450 for a new church lot.

—C. H. De Voe, evangelist, has begun a meeting at Wilkesbarre, Pa. Harry K. Shields, his helper, is singing this week at Saunemin, Ill.

—The fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the church in Quincy, Ill., where Walter M. Jordan ministers, was celebrated on Lord's day.

—The church at Long Beach, Cal., will get A. W. Thornton, of Waynesboro, Pa., as its pastor and F. A. Bright will take charge at the latter place.

—"The Christian News" reprints, in its entirety, the article by Dr. E. T. Davis, entitled, "Why No Young Men for the Ministry," which we recently published.

—A. I. Zeller and family have returned from a trip through Kansas and Oklahoma, in the course of which Brother Zeller officiated at the wedding of his brother Charles.

—E. A. Cary has accepted an indefinite call from his church at LeRoy, Ill. A well-filled purse has been presented to him as a further token of the appreciation of the congregation.

—They do have some good times in the east. Here is a report about 72 of the members of the Danbury church and their friends enjoying a corn roast on the top of Thomas Mountain.

—George L. Snively, while passing from one convention to another in the east, stopped over two Lord's days with the Fifty-sixth Street Church, New York, being a guest of Elder Robert Christie.

—The corner stone of the new building at Maysville, Ind., was laid Sept. 23, the addresses being delivered by Grant K. Speer, of Hicksville, B. L. Allen, of Indianapolis, Ind., and L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash.

—The enrollment of our mission school at Monterey, Mexico, is now 367. Of this number 66 are in the American department. Miss Clara Case has returned to Monterey from her visit to the San Francisco convention.

—A rally of all the churches at Princeton, Ill., was recently addressed in the M. E. church by Bro. Philip Evans, our preacher in that town, on the subject, "The Influence of the Sunday School on National Character."

—The following officers were elected at the Convention of the Third District, Indiana: President, Earl Wilfley; secretary, W. H. Newlin; Christian Endeavor superintendent, S. D. Watts; Sunday school superintendent, S. G. Smith.

—Clyde Sharp writes from Erie, Kan., that he organized a mission church of seventeen members at Oak Grove school house. The hope is that a strong church may be built there, and a Mormon organization thus forestalled.

—It was decided at the district convention at Sac City, Ia., to put Scandinavian preachers into the field at once, and money was raised for this purpose. Scandinavian preachers who now occupy fields will please report to E. F. Christian or Le Grand Pace at Sioux Rapids, Ia., or Onawa.

—J. Will Walters recently declined a unanimous call from the church at Perry, Ia., desiring to continue in evangelistic work. He begins a meeting with Hugh Lomax at Highland, Kan., October 8.

—E. E. Violett reports in our news columns a rather unusual case of a family's conversion to the primitive plea. A new building is to be erected at Shelbyville, Tenn., to meet the growing demands of our church.

—L. L. Carpenter has engagements to dedicate at West Frankfort, Ill., Kansas City, Kan., Athens, W. Va., Dowagiac, Mich., North Platte, Neb., Clarendon, Ark., and Oaktown, Ind. He is retained for other dedications, the time of which has not yet been fixed.

—J. D. Pontius, of Pleasanton, Kan., reports that together with the elders of the church at Avoca he has ordained unto the ministry W. F. Funderburk, of that congregation, who was reported to be a young man of far more than ordinary merit, self-made and of the most loyal type.

—W. M. Taylor, with his wife, called at our office last week, on their way to Salt Lake City, Utah, where Brother Taylor becomes successor to T. W. Pinkerton. Brother Taylor's experience in Porto Rico and other difficult fields will fit him for service in the capital of Mormonism.

—Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Gordon, who have been taking a vacation in America, and incidentally got married, will return to Mahoba, India, leaving New York October 7 on the Columbia of the Anchor Line. We published a photograph of the happy couple on the front page of our Convention Number.

—The following leaders of our university work will be speakers at the Chicago Social Union banquet, October 5: H. L. Willett, W. D. McClintock, Hill M. Bell, R. E. Hieronymus and C. C. Rowlison. There will be a tour of the university, starting from our Hyde Park Church at four o'clock.

—F. S. Whitslar, of Youngstown, O., has been called "the marrying parson." He has been a member of the Christian Church for seventy years, being now eighty-one years old, and was ordained to the ministry fifty-two years ago. Since last new year's day he has married 376 couples, which is, we imagine, a record.

—Franklin, Ind., with the churches of Johnson county, has joined the list of living links. Harry G. Hill, W. G. Smith and F. M. Rains addressed the annual meeting held in the fair grounds, which was attended by over a thousand people. There are sixteen churches in the county and about 2,500 members.

—A telegram received as we are preparing for press announces that the dedication of the church at Scottsburg, Ind., was a great success. M. H. Jacks is the pastor, and F. M. Rains was the master of ceremonies on this occasion. The cost of the church is about $7,000, and $3,500 were raised at the dedication.

—On returning home from Michigan last week the Editor and his wife enjoyed a brief visit at the office of "The Christian Century," and spent a pleasant evening with the family of Brother Tyrrell, now located in the south part of the city. Brother Tyrrell was absent, holding a meeting in Illinois, but his charming family gave us a hearty welcome. We reached St. Louis on September 29, and are in the harness, as usual.

—"One of the most hopeful signs of a suitable outcome of present problems is the negro's readiness to do his part," says "The Gospel Plea," a religious newspaper representing our colored people in the south; and it shows in what a commendable manner the negroes have been conducting themselves during the yellow fever scare.

—"The New England Messenger" reports that S. B. Moore, pastor of the Hammett Place Church, St. Louis, occupied the pulpit at Danbury, Conn., one Lord's day during his holiday. "Brother Moore has been gone from Danbury about fifteen years," says the writer, "but he has evidently lost none of his old-time vigor or earnestness."

—A lady, in describing a preacher in a personal letter to the Editor, says: "The preacher is a man who never knows people, never takes any interest in strangers, and is wholly uninspiring in his pulpit efforts." We are not surprised that she adds that "the church is on the 'anti' order." Of course, this does not hit any preacher who reads The Christian-Evangelist.

—F. D. Ferrall has closed his work at Ames, Ia., and taken charge at Bloomfield. During his four years at Ames 210 were added to the church, 104 being baptisms. The missionary offerings aggregated over $1,500, and for all purposes $7,894 were raised. The church is out of debt, and is ready to continue her policy of aggressive work. The congregation presented Brother Ferrall, as a token of love, a fine sideboard.

—The fifteenth anniversary of the pastorate of M. M. Davis at the Central Christian Church, Dallas, Texas, was observed last Lord's day, when the work of the past was reviewed and a prospective look into the future taken. We received an invitation to the annual reception in the church parlors, and regretted that it is still impossible to traverse great distances as speedily as our thoughts and our good wishes can wing their way.

—A correspondent who has the reputation of being rather a caustic critic and who often touches a sore spot, says: "I wish our preachers would all quit their professional grunts and attitudinizing and all other kinds of appeals to the groundlings and try to create and raise noble aspirations in the hearts of their hearers." Preachers who have the holy "grunts," and are in the habit of appealing to "the groundlings," should consider themselves rebuked, and act accordingly.

—J. P. Lichtenberger, pastor of the Lenox Avenue Union Church, New York City, was recently elected president of the Disciples' Union and vice-president of the New York City Endeavor Union. R. E. Carpenter reports that the work of this church starts out this fall with the brightest prospects in its history. Plans are being made for the greatest campaign ever undertaken by the Disciples in the metropolis. Charles Reign Scoville will lead the meeting in February.

—Philip Evans, minister of our church at Princeton, Ill., writes that the church there has just taken an action that is causing much comment. The saloon administration had a new sidewalk laid in front of the church, the law requiring that the membership should pay two-thirds of the expense, and the city one-third. After a sermon by the pastor the congregation voted to pay the entire cost. One man who is not a member "wanted a little interest in that temperance church and clean walk." More than enough money was subscribed for the purpose, and Brother Evans says the action has put the church in such a light as will result in great good.

—The dedication of the new church building at Mobile, Ala., has been fixed for Nov. 19. An invitation is cordially extended to all brethren to be present. Claude E. Hill, the pastor, has just made a visit to Citronelle, a thriving little city thirty-three miles north of Mobile. We have no church building here, but Brother Hill preached at the Baptist church, and there were ten additions. Until a church organization can be effected these members will unite with the congregation in Mobile.

—"You will doubtless remember me as a member of the California party in 'The Christian-Evangelist Special,'" writes one in subscribing for the paper. This formula is likely to become familiar in the future. It will be a sufficient introduction for any one to be able to say, "I was one of your 'Christian-Evangelist Special' party on that celebrated trip to California." The "Special" to California is in the past, but you can join The Christian-Evangelist family at any time and remain a member during good behavior!

—Butler College, Indianapolis, began its fifty-first annual session on Tuesday, September 26. The registration is twenty per cent greater than for the fall term of last year, and fifty per cent greater than for the same term two years ago. Preparations are being made for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of the first session on November 1, and President Garrison expects at that time to announce substantial progress toward the completion of the $250,000 fund which is being raised to add to the endowment.

—J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, Ill., writes that Dr. O. L. Lyon, formerly a Methodist minister, united with the Second Christian Church at that place last Lord's day. He adds: "Brother Lyon is well educated, has taught for several years in normal schools and colleges, was for three or four years professor in the Wesleyan here. He has had five years of experience as pastor, with fine results. He preached for us last Sunday evening to a large audience. The sermon was very acceptable indeed and presented in fine spirit." We hope to be able to present a synopsis of his sermon, at least, in our next issue, perhaps with a picture of Brother Lyon.

—It would require a special force of stenographers to reply personally to all the letters of congratulation which have reached us concerning our Convention Number. We are sure our friends will not expect this, but will accept instead this general acknowledgment of our thanks for their kind and appreciative words. In giving the time, labor and expense necessary to the preparation of such a number we were acting under a sense of obligation to the brotherhood, which has a right to expect from its religious journals a fair and adequate report of its great gatherings. Nevertheless we feel gratified that our efforts in this direction are appreciated by the public which we are seeking to serve.

—A brother who travels about among the churches a good deal writes as follows: "One great lack among our churches is that so few of the brethren take and read our religious papers. Not half of the elders and deacons of our churches read our papers. As a result they are indifferent to the missionary enterprises and often oppose the raising and sending out by their congregations of any money. We need a great campaign to put our papers in the homes of our people." The strangest thing about this whole business is that many preachers are indifferent about whether their congregations are reading our best religious journals or not. There is no doubt that our brother has stated a great and vital need. How shall it be met?

—"The King's Message," the monthly organ of the Central Christian Church at Spokane, Wash., contains the following in its last issue: "The Central has been fortunate in having many eastern brethren worship with it this summer. The greatest day since our dedication was when The Christian-Evangelist company breakfasted with us, and then in the evening feasted us with songs and words of good cheer and news from the convention. And, after all this spontaneous giving, persisted in leaving a generous purse for the Aid Society as a special expression of gratitude for the hot biscuits and honey." In the same issue we note a very admirable letter from B. E. Utz, the pastor, to his people. From this it appears that the church was never in so hopeful a condition as just now. Though other churches have seen fit to close their doors during the summer months, the Central forged ahead, having many additions and all the departments keeping at work. Brother Utz sounds a bugle call for every member to

A Great Evangelistic Campaign in Cincinnati and Vicinity

One prominent feature of the work of our Standing Committee on Evangelism is the simultaneous revival. It will be recalled that Chicago and Cleveland were among the cities testing this form of campaign last winter. Many other cities are planning such campaigns for the approaching winter or spring. The one nearest at hand is the one in Cincinnati, which is to begin October 8, and continue at least three weeks. One congregation is about to dedicate a new house, but cannot be ready for the meeting, two others are without pastors. Aside from these three, all the congregations in and about the city will join heartily in the campaign; there being some eighteen which have secured their evangelists and singers, and laid all their plans for the meeting.

A portion of the plan of the campaign is as follows: First, a contribution from each church, in order to create a general fund for defraying preliminary expenses. Another fund, contributed by the self-supporting congregations, paying a stated amount per week for not less than three weeks, in order to help the missions and weaker churches to secure the best men for their meetings. The down town meetings and rallies in the Y. M. C. A. Building or other central place or places for reports, conference, instruction and inspiration. Central mass meetings to be held on Sunday afternoons at such places as are easy of access for the entire community.

The Committee on Advertising is doing its work in a systematic and thorough manner. Uniform advertising is the rule, so that the same kind of display cards and others will be seen in every part of the great community of which Cincinnati is the heart. The committee on publicity has the assurance that our daily papers will give to the movement all the space daily which the interest of the campaign warrants. The disposition seems to promise liberal advertising through this medium for our entire campaign.

W. J. WRIGHT,

National Superintendent of Evangelism, under whose direction the campaign is being conducted.

Some of the things for which we hope as fruits of this meeting are: First, genuine revivals in all the congregations which are taking an active part in the campaign. We expect the membership to be aroused to greater activity and moved to more prayer and piety in their daily lives. We expect that hundreds, or possibly, even thousands, of persons may be led to place their faith in Jesus as the Son of God; we hope that larger numbers of Disciples who are not identified with our congregations will be led to deposit their letters or otherwise take membership with the churches during this campaign. We hope to call the attention of thousands of persons to the simplicity, scripturalness and catholicity of the plea which we are making for the unity of all Christians and the restoration of the apostolic Church. We hope to bring about such unity and co-operation of our forces in and about this city as we never before have had, and we hope that the result of this meeting will be such as will greatly increase the faith of all our preachers and congregations in this city, so that in the future much greater campaigns than this may be planned and successfully conducted. We fully expect within a year or two, and as a direct result of this campaign, to organize for this same section a campaign which will bring fifty of our strongest men here at one time, which will embrace such outdoor preaching as street and park services, services in places of public concourse and public utility, as the fire and police stations, and great meetings in Music Hall, where were held the sessions of our jubilee conventions, and which will bring together in a single meeting from 5,000 to 8,000 persons.

This campaign is a great stride forward in our local history, and, indeed, is the greatest campaign of its kind thus far in our history as a people, though the approaching campaign in Western Pennsylvania is one of greater proportions and promises greater things than this. We crave the prayers and suggestions of the brethren throughout the land for the successful conduct of this campaign. The work is yours quite as much as ours, and, indeed, it is not ours, save as in his majestic grace. He delegates it to us as his servants, and when the success comes which we are certain must follow our careful and prayerful efforts, we will all join in saying, "And thine be the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever, Amen."

Superintendent of Evangelism.

The Churches and Men Engaged in the Campaign

Cincinnati, O., where the first great campaign of the fall season under the direction of our National Evangelistic Bureau is to begin next Lord's day, has long been a center for the religious work of the Disciples of Christ. Our first church in the city was the old house on Sycamore street, where about one hundred and fifty people who had organized and adopted the New Testament as their only rule of faith and practice entered their new building in 1829. James Challen was the first minister, and continued for many years, alternating with D. S. Burnett and Walter Scott. In the winter of 1839-1840 a series of meetings was held, which increased the membership by 240. In 1849 the church moved to the corner of Eighth and Walnut streets, and the membership numbered 368. Here was really the origin of our organized work. The first convention of the Christian Church was held in this old building in 1849, and it was in this city that three of our organizations originated—the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Church Extension Society. It is here, too, that the work of the Foreign Board, the Home Board and our new evangelistic work is centralized, their offices being located in the city. Naturally, with such conditions, and the fact that Isaac Errett here did his great work on "The Christian Standard," some of our strongest men were found here. Following D. S. Burnett came C. L. Loos, Thomas Munnell, S. E. Shepherd, Robert Graham and John Shackleford, who was followed by W. T. Moore, under whose ministrations this congregation moved from Eighth and Walnut to the Central Christian Church, opposite the City Hall. This was the finest church building in the brotherhood when it was dedicated, and is today one of our best buildings, though now a down-town church. The building cost $147,000. Other pastors of the Central were George Flower, David Walk, E. T. Williams, J. Z. Tyler, J. A. Lord and A. M. Harvuot, who has recently been succeeded by J. L. Hill, who seems to be giving great satisfaction. The church has, for most of its history, been a very strong one, and most of the churches in and around the city are off-shoots from it. Its members have always been among the strong supporters of our missionary work, and A. McLean, president of our Foreign Society, and W. S. Dickinson, for many years its treasurer, are elders in the Central today. The present pastor, John L. Hill, was born in Gallatin, Tex., in 1872. Graduating from Cumberland University with the degree of B. D., he was ordained to the ministry in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and served as pastor for his denomination in Princeton, Ky. But in 1898 he left denominationalism and became a minister of the Christian Church at Madisonville, Ky., subsequently going to Union City, Ind., and entering upon the work at Cincinnati in the spring of this year. South Kentucky College has conferred upon him the A. B. degree.

The Richmond Street Church is an offshoot from the old church on Sycamore street. In 1842 a colony of 71 of its members were worshipping for the time in a hall of the engine house, afterwards securing a frame building, which they used as a place of worship for ten years and then occupied a large brick house on Sixth street. This building was sold in 1874, and the one where they now meet, on Richmond and Cutter streets, was occupied, A. I. Hobbs being at that time the minister. This church, too, has had a succession of men well known to the brotherhood at large as its leaders. The names of Pinkerton, Burnett, Sweeney, Bartholomew, Radford, Deweese and others are widely known. Howard Cramblet is the present efficient minister.

One of the oldest—and likewise an offshoot of the Sycamore Street Church—is what is known as the Fourth Church, whose building was erected in 1843 and, with improvements, is still occupied. This field is a difficult one, and in recent years it has been served by young men.

The church at Carthage was organized by Walter Scott in 1839, and is one of the historic churches of the reformation, having been served as pastor by such pioneers as Love H. Jamieson, L. L. Pinkerton, Dr. Richardson, W. M. Pinkerton, James Challen and others of that day. There were hardly any men among our early leaders who have not preached one or more times in the old church. The present pastor, Charles M. Fillmore, is in his seventh year with this congregation, which, though numbering only about two hundred, is steadily growing, and is composed of faithful workers. There was a net gain of 39 last year and this year has seen 30 accessions so far.

At Norwood, a rapidly growing suburb of Cincinnati, we have a church that was established as a mission under the supervision of the Central some seven years ago. Steady growth has increased the membership to 175, and no doubt there is a very prosperous future for it. Among its members are F. M. Rains, Stephen J. Corey and J. H. Fillmore. Joseph Armistead, its present minister, is a graduate of the College of the Bible and of the University of Kentucky, having received the A. M. degree. Prior to coming to Norwood, in January of this year, he was minister of the Woodland Street Church, in Nashville, Tenn.

The church at Lockland was organized seven years ago by Evangelist Allen Wilson. W. G. Loucks has been its minister for more than four years. It has been a difficult field from the start, but under his leadership has been steadily growing. It is still a mission point of the state, and meets in a plain but comfortable tabernacle. They hope soon, however, to purchase a lot upon which to erect a permanent building, in which to do more efficient work. Although the progress has been slow, the outlook for the future is bright and both minister and people are hopeful.

The Central, too, is the mother of the Walnut Hills Church, which was organized in 1884, when S. M. Jefferson was called as minister. Tannar, Ranshaw, Fannon, Dutcher were among its ministers, while R. W. Abberley has just entered upon the pastorate. S. M. Cooper, B. L. Smith, C. C. Smith are well-known men in its membership. The value of the church property is about $27,000.

The youngest of our churches in Cincinnati is in the new suburb of Evanston, lying between Walnut Hills and Norwood, the building being a mile and a half from our churches in these suburbs. The first meeting of the Disciples in this place was in March of this year. There were a few meetings in private homes, then in a tent, and in April a lot was purchased at a cost of $2,200, while in May a tabernacle was built and paid for. In June a meeting was held by I. H. Durfee, of Maysville. Then A. M. Harvuot, who had recently resigned from the Central Church, was elected pastor, and a Bible school was organized. Brother Harvuot is a graduate of Bethany College, and has been in the ministry since 1882, having served churches at Clarence, N. Y.; Millersburg, O.; Emporia, Kan.; Greensburg and Washington, Pa., and Central, Cincinnati. He entered a business life in April of this year, but is also devoting himself to the work at Evanston.

In addition to these churches on the Ohio side of the river there is the North Side Church, where Justin N. Green, one of our most faithful ministers, works, and the First Church, at North Fairmount, organized in 1901 and ministered to for a long time by J. A. Lord, and now under the guidance of Arthur Sebastian; the Madisonville Church, whose building was completed in 1885 and dedicated by Isaac Errett, where M. H. Salyer has charge; and the colored church at Lockland, where W. H. Dickerson is pastor.

On the Kentucky side of the river we have a number of churches that will take part in this campaign of Greater Cincinnati. The First Church, Covington, is the oldest, having been organized in 1837. The members met in a one-story frame building, their first pastor being James G. Arnold, who helped the church very materially in a financial way. In 1867 a church building was dedicated by W. T. Moore and Isaac Errett, but this was destroyed by fire and the present building, erected at a cost of about $34,000, was dedicated in 1894. It is the largest of our churches on the south side of the river, the membership now being about six hundred, with the building enlarged and paid for, while a handsome new organ has just been installed. Among its ministers have been P. B. Wiles, John J. Rogers, O. A. Bartholomew, J. B. Briney. Its present pastor, George A. Miller, has served it for nearly twelve years. His work has been evangelistic as well as pastoral, and he has held six protracted meetings for the church, doing all the preaching himself. There has been but one change of pastors in twenty-one years, and the present superintendent of the Sunday school has held his position continuously for thirty years. This Sunday school is the largest in the city.

The Fourth Street Christian Church, Covington, dates its history from 1875. Among its members are descendants of B. W. Stone and Samuel Rogers. Among its ministers have been S. M. Jefferson, Elisha Pinkerton, J. J. Morgan and George Darsie, Jr. It has a property valued at $10,000 and seats 400 people. It is in line with all missionary enterprises, and S. G. Boyd, one of its elders, has, we believe, never failed in attendance upon our national conventions.

Across the Licking River is Newport, where the first organized work among the Disciples of Christ was begun in 1871. The present congregation (incorporated ten years ago under the name of the Central Christian Church) was started as an offshoot of the First Church. It was organized with 77 members. Its handsome and commodious building, located at the corner of Sixth and Monroe streets, was dedicated in October, 1897. In November, 1903, a union was effected between the First Church and the Central, the First Church disposing of its property on Fifth street and turning the proceeds over to the united congregation. During the same month Charles Lloyd Garrison was called to serve the church. The union of the Disciples in Newport has proved to be a signal success. The membership has steadily increased until it is now 375.

There are two features of the Newport work which may be worthy of brief mention. The indebtedness of the church is cared for by a serial bond issue, copied after the model of municipality bonds, $500 worth being retired annually. The other feature is a fraternal organization among the men of the church. The organization is known as the Benevolent Order of Royal Pilgrims. One of its purposes is mutual aid in the way of sick benefits and indemnity at death; another object is sociability and Christian fellowship. The organization is incorporated under the laws of the state. It confers three degrees and shows the candidate an interesting time. This fraternal society serves as a new point of contact between the church and "the world."

The towns of Bellevue and Dayton, Ky., are separated by a line down the middle of a street, and nothing more. Together the two towns have a white population of 16,000, and our membership is drawn from both places, though the church building is in Bellevue. The organization was effected in 1889, and F. M. Rains dedicated in 1891. W. F. Smith, who is the present preacher, is a Kentuckian reared at Frankfort and educated for the ministry at Lexington, and all departments under him are in good working order.

H. C. Runyan is the preacher for our church at Latonia, which was organized in 1898. Brother Runyan is an energetic pastor, and has recently declined a call to another church in order to develop the field he is now in.

At Ludlow we have a building completed in 1896 at a cost of about $7,000. The growth in membership has been rapid, and under J. W. Moody we may expect it to go forward to greater things.

Among the evangelists are James Small, who will help the North Side congregation, of which Justin Green is pastor. This will be a union meeting, the Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist churches all uniting under the leadership of James Small. W. H. Pinkerton and W. E. Hackleman will hold forth at the old historic Central Church; Milo Atkinson will be the evangelist at the Richmond Street Church; H. D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, Ky., assists the congregation at Norwood; J. L. Thompson, Peru, Ind., leads the forces at Carthage; W. M. Gard, Elwood, Ind., will marshal the forces at Lockland; H. C. Bowen will be the evangelist at Madisonville.

Across the river some of the evangelists are: J. H. Gilliland at the Fifth Street Church, Covington, and S. D. Dutcher at the Fourth Street Christian Church; Ernest Elliott, of Eminence, Ky., assists the Central Church, Newport, and E. R. Edwards, of Bedford, Ind., is the leader at the Bellevue-Dayton church, of which W. F. Smith is pastor; J. J. Taylor, of Lexington, Ky., is the evangelist, and his wife the singer, at the Ludlow church.

This is a list of strong preachers, many of them with splendid records in evangelistic work, though it will be noted that there is but one professional evangelist in the whole number.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Illinois.

A quarter of a century ago a little band of Disciples was organized at Bethany, Moultrie county. It has grown to a membership of 225 with a good Sunday school, two Endeavor Societies and an active C. W. B. M. Bro. S. E. Sines, a splendid young preacher, is caring for the flock. He began a year and a half ago preaching half time for the congregation, but is now employed all the time and the church seems to raise the money easier for all the time than for half time. Few of the churches know their strength until some wise, godly leader guides them into the larger fields of usefulness. Bethany has almost made a new house out of the old one at an expense of about $3,500, and expects to rededicate before these lines are printed. The money is nearly all provided for. Unless we miss our guess, this church will take its place among the leading churches with public spirit and consecration for all the great enterprises for world-wide evangelism. Much of the church's spirit and prosperity is due to the godly life and ministry of Bro. W. S. Harmon who entered into his rest last fall. His memory is precious in this community and his works live after him.

At Dalton City we found the little church of 43 members, a Sunday school of 50 and an Endeavor Society of 26. Our esteemed Bro. Geo. T. Smith and his efficient wife, both preachers, moved into the community six months ago. The work has taken on new life; material as well as spiritual improvements are manifest. This is a great field and we look for the church to grow in numbers, grace and power.

The church at Allenville has just closed a short meeting with several additions. It has a good, comfortable house, an intelligent membership and a large field of usefulness.

While here your scribe took occasion to visit the final resting place of his father and mother, near the roadside that skirts the timber of the old Kaskaskia, between Mattoon and Sullivan. How the memory stirs with incidents of struggle, triumph and grace, when he feels so near those most interested were they but cognizant of passing events! The unbidden tear must fall and the heart's full prayer seems a little nearer the throne when even mother's sleeping dust is near. How to be envied is the child who can remember the pressure of the fond parental hand, or who in love is permitted to cheer the heart and guide the unsteady steps of father and mother down through the second childhood! The first thought that pressed itself upon me on that sacred spot was how I would like to tell mother how good the Lord and his people have been to him since she left her only child, a year old, and father, who left a year later, in what we call "this cold world." It is only cold to him who knows nothing but trust in worldliness. Not a night has been without its shelter and not a day without its food. What did the good Book mean when it said, "When my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up"? Have I not seen this pledge fulfilled through all these years? With not a day without opportunity for toil and service and not a night without opportunity for rest. Sickness and care and trial have come, but with each the greater grace from him who knows how to temper the wind to the shorn lamb. There is no god like unto our God, to whom be praise and honor forever more. What can we do to fill the world with this like precious faith in him who hears the raven's cry and sees the sparrow's fall?

> "What shall I render to my God
> For all his gifts to me?"

Missouri State Mission Notes.

Joseph Gaylor is making a determined effort to put Pierce City again on its feet. For some reason this has been a hard place in which to build up a self-sustaining church, but we are in hopes that this effort will mean just that.

H. G. Bennett, our missionary pastor at Jefferson City, has been assisting W. A. Thomas in a meeting at Burlington Junction.

Ralls, Polk, Dallas, Hickory, Sullivan and Putnam counties have all had their conventions since our last notes, and they have been good ones; in fact our conventions this season have been more than average in enthusiasm and really good convention work.

These lines are written at La Belle, as I wait for the train to take me to the Lewis county convention at Lewiston. C. L. Harbord, our county secretary, has worked very hard to make this convention a success, and we are expecting one of the best. From here we go to New Hampton to the Harrison county meeting.

G. P. Furnish is preaching for La Belle, Knox City and Sweet Oak and all are delighted with his loving, consecrated work. He is preparing for a meeting at La Belle to begin the third Lord's day in October.

Brother Furnish arranged for the secretary to visit all of his churches in the interest of state missions and we enjoyed his fellowship very much indeed. Lord's day afternoon and night were spent in the home of Bro. George Washburn and wife, who were our companions on a recent trip to California, and we had a happy time.

Audrain county convention meets this week at Macedonia church, but it is impossible for the secretary to be in three places at once; he is willing to try two places, but that's the limit. We hope they will have a great convention.

Our permanent fund is growing, slowly; it ought to go by leaps and bounds. We must raise that $10,000 by July 1, 1906. It will be our shame if it does not come. About 20 churches at Marshall pledged $100 each. There are at least 30 more that can do it and be the richer for it. Then there are not less than 100 men who ought to place that much on interest for the work in Missouri. Can you do better with your money than this? Each $100 will bear annually $6 interest, this will win three souls for the Lord, and will go on year by year when the donor has passed to his reward and thus through all time will he have entered into partnership with God to save his fellowmen for the life eternal. Can you put $100 to a better use? How many churches and individuals will volunteer to do this much?

Kansas City. T. A. Abbott.

North Carolina.

The fellowship was so pleasant and the sights to be seen so many, on the trip with "The Christian-Evangelist Special" to San Francisco, that your correspondent just got to Winston-Salem, N. C., on Sept. 2, in time to preach the following day. After a week spent here in getting acquainted, I made a trip to Waynesboro, Pa., for my books and trunks, and told the brethren about the great convention. The church has not yet secured my successor, but has been pushing forward the improvements on the building, and are preparing to reopen it the second Lord's day in October if their seats arrive on time. On my way I stopped a night with F. F. Bullard, in Lynchburg, Va. The Christian College at that place opened its third year on September 13. The prospects were good.

Besides the Christian College at Wilson, N. C., there is the Holman University at Black Mountain, which opened its second year September 25. J. C. Coggins is the president. It was incorporated last March by special act of the legislature, giving it the regular powers of a university.

Sister Sarah A. Holman, who recently donated her elegant home, that cost $25,000, to our Church Extension Board, not long ago donated 240 acres of land to aid in the establishment of a school in the mountains. Hence the name. It is the aim of the faculty "to make it possible for every ambitious boy and girl in this part of the country to get an education." It is but a few minutes from the city of Asheville and Biltmore, the Vanderbilt residence. Students can secure a free scholarship, worth $40, by securing at least five students to come and spend a year in the institution.

I found at Winston-Salem a congregation of about 80 members. They had been two and a half months without preaching. I regret to learn of the serious illness of the wife of my predecessor, J. R. Glenn. I have preached three Lord's days. There seem some signs of encouragement.

We have arranged to have Herbert Yeuell, of Washington, D. C., to preach in a meeting beginning the last week in November and first of December. Brethren, pray for us.

A. B. Cunningham, of Tiffin, O., is now in his new field at Washington, N. C. We wish him success in his work.

Kind regards for the large family of the "Special" with whom we journeyed, and appreciation of the "Convention Number," whose pictures recall pleasant memories. J. A. Hopkins.

Winston-Salem, N. C.

A Notre Dame Lady's Appeal.

I will send free, with full instructions, some of this simple preparation for the cure of Leucorrhœa, Ulceration, Displacements, Falling of the Womb, Scanty or Painful Periods, Tumors or Growths, Hot Flashes, Desire to Cry, Creeping feeling up the Spine, Pain in the Back and all Female Troubles, to all sending address. To mothers of suffering daughters I will explain a Successful Home Treatment. If you decide to continue it will only cost about 12 cents a week to guarantee a cure. Tell other sufferers of it, that is all I ask. If you are interested write now and tell your suffering friends of it. Address Mrs. M. Summers, Box 183, Notre Dame, Ind.

Ohio.

Collinwood has succeeded, after three or four attempts, in calling a pastor. M. L. Buckley, of Harrison, is the man, and the church is to be heartily congratulated on the choice made.

Bellefontaine has cast her line over in the Hoosier pond and caught a preacher in the person of Roy Brown, of Connersville. He will find the church at Bellefontaine ready to work, and the town a very pleasant one in which to live. He will be cordially welcomed into the Ohio fellowship.

J. P. Allison will come from Bellaire to Dunham Avenue, Cleveland, to succeed M. J. Grable. Brother Allison could not cope with the river climate, and hence this early change from Bellaire. It would seem that no man would fit in Brother Grable's shoes better than J. P. Allison.

The Wabash Avenue Church, Akron, of which A. F. Stahl is bishop, has made an heroic effort and paid off all indebtedness. The "fire" was held Sunday night, Sept. 10. The mortgage called for $1,300, and the church paid it. A meeting is now in progress with Miss Ida Mae Hanna, of Cincinnati, as soloist.

J. W. Kerns has been called to Massillon from Monongahela City, Pa. He will succeed George Darsie. We welcome "Judge" back to Ohio. His last Ohio pastorate was at Steubenville.

The Warren church has voted to build a house on the west side of the city for a new congregation. They will put about $7,500 into a building.

Now that all the churches have taken the Church Extension offering, let them all get ready for the greatest offering for Ohio missions that we have ever had. November 5 is the day for said offering. Make a big offering for Ohio missions November 5 and a big majority for Pattison for governor November 7. C. A. FREER.

Wisconsin Convention.

The annual conventions of the Wisconsin Christian Missionary Association and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions were held with the new church in Grand Rapids. The church is but five months old, but it did exceedingly well, and all went away happy and better.

The sessions were held in the M. E. church, the brethren having turned the G. A. R. hall, where they hold their meetings, into a dining room where dinner and supper were served, so that no one need to go away during the day.

The reports revealed the fact that we had grown during the year from 1,432 to 1,787, an increase of 24 per cent; that we had contributed about $1 per member to missions, had added four new churches, that the Scandinavian work had doubled, and that most of the churches had grown and were prosperous.

Our speakers from outside were: J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis; Mrs. Anna R. Atwater, of Indianapolis; Mrs. Laura DeLany Garst, of Des Moines; H. U. Dale of Des Moines, and Claris Yeuell, on his way to Baltimore. The addresses were out-and-out missionary, and were intended to spur us to greater activity and inspire us to better living.

C. H. DeVoe, who organized the church last spring, was with it before and during convention to keep things in order, and H. K. Shields, his singer, also came and took charge of singing. C. W. Dean, of Colfax, Ill., who begins ministering for this congregation October 1, was present and preached the last sermon. The C. W. B. M. workers were led by Miss Ida C. Towne, of Waupun, and the Bible-school forces were marshaled by Mrs. T. H. Goodnight, of Readstown, and the W. C. M. A. was presided over by J. C. Thurman, of Green Bay.

The Lord seemed to favor us in every way, so we had a delightful and helpful convention. H. F. BARSTOW.

Our Budget.

take some part, and he says: "Talent has been generously distributed. While all departments are doing well, there is enough inactive talent to take up the entire church work, if those who are now active for any reason stop their efforts. My appeal is for the use of this unused talent."

—E. Jay Teagarden, who has served the Danbury Church of Christ as pastor for sixteen years, presented his resignation to the church at the close of the morning service on September 24. In his letter of resignation to the church he recalls the following interesting historical fact: "The history of the Church of Christ in Danbury is of peculiar interest in that it is one of a group of three Christian churches that existed in America in 1817. One of the marvels of the religious world is the fact that these three churches have, in less than a century, been multiplied, until today they number 10,985, having a united membership of 1,233,000 souls." The letter is full of that tenderness which a true pastor feels for the church to which he has ministered for so many years. There are many paragraphs in the letter we should like to quote but our space will not permit. Suffice it to say that the spirit it breathes is a sufficient explanation of the success that has attended his labors during his long pastorate. After a little rest, Brother Teagarden will take up his work again in another field of labor, and very fortunate, indeed, will be the church that can secure the services of one who has held so long and successful a pastorate as that which he is now closing. As he went to Danbury from the Divinity School of Yale, he is now at a period of life when he is able to render the best service to any church with which he may decide to locate. His resignation is to take effect three months from the date of its acceptance by the church.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST AND THE SOCIETIES.

The Foreign Society is dependent very largely upon the religious press for the support and enlargement of its work. In order to feel any interest and to make worthy contributions, the people must know the facts. The papers give the facts. They go where no missionary agent has gone or can go. They reinforce the teachings and announcements of the pulpit. Their services are indispensable and invaluable. Little, if any, money is received from communities where the religious papers are not read.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been a steadfast and generous helper of this cause from the first. The Editor was present when the society was organized. He is one of the charter members and a life director. Children's Day originated in his family, and was the result of his prayers and teachings. The associate editors have shared in the interest and enthusiasm of their chief. They have done what they could to aid the work. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has given liberal space to articles and reports from the mission rooms, to letters from the missionaries, and to numerous and able editorials. It is a pleasure to bear this testimony. May the Lord bless THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and its editors and its readers more and more! Nothing could help the cause of missions at home and abroad more than a great increase in the circulation of all our religious papers. A. MCLEAN.

DO GOOD

With your money and enjoy an income from it while you live by giving to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the ANNUITY PLAN. The income is large, uninterrupted, and certain for life. Interest is paid according to age of donor. There is no expense for repairs or taxes. A bond is given to insure prompt payment of interest, semi-annually. It is better than a government bond. Over two hundred gifts have been made, amounting to about $250,000. This plan is especially adapted to those fifty years of age, or older. Full particulars given upon request. Let us send you our illustrated booklet, free of charge.

F. M. RAINS, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has, from the beginning, been one of the strongest supports the American Christian Missionary Society has had. Every year the columns have been placed at our disposal for the presentation to the churches of the work of home missions, free of all cost for space. We have found, in the constituency of THE EVANGELIST the largest percentage of contributors to this work. It is perfectly safe to count that wherever THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST circulates there will be found helpers to the cause of home missions.

The acting board of managers feels deeply grateful for the earnest, constant and consistent support this work has received at the hands of the paper. Personally, I want to thank you.

BENJAMIN L. SMITH,
Corresponding Secretary.

10,167 for The Christian-Evangelist.

Some months ago we asked our friends for ten thousand new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. At the close of the business year on Sept. 30, 10,167 had been received. Words cannot express our appreciation and gratitude to all who have had a part in this gain in the readers of this paper. If we count five readers for each new subscriber this means 50,835 new readers in the great CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST circle. Our friends have been a help to us in this splendid increase. We are greatly encouraged, and we are ready to undertake greater things still. Why not? The Lord has been good to us and why should we not do great things for the Master? Is it asking too much if we make the request for 20,000 additional subscribers? We have many thousands of enthusiastic, faithful readers who will agree with us and say that this paper is worthy of this larger circulation. Then will you aid us in securing this larger audience of readers? Here is a missionary work in the church in which all our readers can engage. It is right at your own door, and will not only bring good literature to 20,000 new homes, but will increase the church attendance from these homes, enlarge the offerings for church expenses, add thousands of dollars to our missionary offerings, and save many souls from indifference and spiritual death. Now if you feel in your heart that you can contribute a little work and can send some names to help in raising these 20,000 new subscribers, write us at once. You shall have all the sample copies you can use and every aid we can give you. G. A. H.

VICTORY!

The quarter of a million dollars for foreign missions has been reached. This glad message will send a thrill of joy around the world. Our brethren in all lands have been in a state of anxious expectancy for months. Messages expressing profound interest have been received from Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia. Never before has there been such deep and widespread concern in our home churches. The activity of the preachers and other leaders, together with the generosity of friends, has been without a parallel in our history. The office of the Foreign Society was the center of busy scenes during the closing days of the missionary year. We have never experienced anything like it before. The money poured in from every quarter. Many were inquiring how the battle was going. Others were asking for special news direct as soon as the books closed. A number expressed a willingness to help to make up any deficiency that might exist. Altogether the enthusiasm was so genuine and widespread as to make one rejoice in being identified with a campaign so worthy and successful. It has been a notable year. The victory is an all-around one.

The American Journal of Sociology

EDITED BY ALBION W. SMALL

Established in 1895

The Only Magazine Published in English Devoted Exclusively to the Field of Sociology

It is of special interest to professional men. The contributors include the best known sociologists in Europe and America, who keep its readers fully abreast of the times upon all debatable social relations—political, economical, educational, and religious—as well as upon those problems of social amelioration which are popularly and erroneously supposed to constitute the sole scope of sociology.

AN UNUSUAL OFFER

In the interests of our patrons arrangements have been made for many combinations of this journal with books and other periodicals. The book list includes such works as Small's General Sociology, Howard's Matrimonial Institutions, Ross' Social Control and Foundations of Sociology, etc., with material savings in comparison with prices through other channels. The following is an example of the opportunities which we are offering for a list of periodicals covering a wide range:

Our brotherhood has never before been so stirred. Strong men have given themselves to the mission fields, wealthy men have given of their abundance, the poor have given out of their penury, and editors and ministers have pressed the claims of the heathen world upon the hearts and consciences of the churches. God has touched anew the hearts of our people. We all rejoice together. The gain in the receipts is about $42,000, the largest ever before made in our thirty years' history. This gain is equal to about one-half the total receipts ten years ago. For full and detailed information read the annual report soon to appear.

We have come to a new era. Our people are restless for larger things. Their outlook is world-wide; their purpose is all-embracing, to every nation and people and tribe. Their message is a universal one. The methods, the standards, and the hopes of the past will not meet their plans and ambitions for the present nor for the future.

A new mark has been suggested for the new missionary year, beginning October 1. It is nothing less than $300,000 for foreign missions by September 30, 1906. This, then, is our new slogan. We turn our faces to the sunrise of this new and larger task. Ring out the new watchword! On to victory in the world's evangelization! F. M. Rains.

BOYS' AND GIRLS' RALLY DAY.

The Sunday school home missionary offering will be taken the Lord's day before Thanksgiving day, November 26. The Home Board is sending a pretty exercise, prepared by J. W. Carpenter, of Virginia, Ill., to all schools desiring to make the most of the day. The observance of this day is becoming a feature of Bible school work everywhere. It emphasizes home missions as fundamental to all missionary work. It appropriates the sentiment of the popular Thanksgiving note to the immediate benefit of the land we live in and makes practical the sacred emotions of the season. All superintendents should plan for a great rally this year. For help and information, write,

Ministerial Exchange.

There is a good opening for an allopathic physician, who is a member of the Christian Church, at Dayton, Wash. Address P. O. Box 278, Dayton.

A young minister wishes to do pioneer work with a view of establishing a school for higher education. Correspondence is solicited with churches in Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas or Florida. Address Christian Minister, Delavan, Ill.

Miss Anna Holmes, 708 Church street, Ann Arbor Mich., desires work as assistant pastor. She has taken a course in stenography and typewriting, hence can do the corresponding. She has taken the Bible work under Prof. G. P. Coler, and thus is equipped for the work.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and COSTS NOTHING—Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its worst forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrhal sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

PANORAMIC YELLOWSTONE PARK

The Northern Pacific can supply to all who have visited, contemplate visiting or are interested in Yellowstone Park, a large Panoramic Picture of the Park. This work of art is 48 inches long by 32 inches wide, done in fifteen colors. It shows, absolutely, the topography of the Park, the location of the hotels, the geyser basins, canons, roads, lakes, mountains and all features of the Park. It gives as nothing else can a connected idea of the region, and is a valuable picture and map combined. Framed, it is ornamental as well as useful, and is specially suited to the school, class room and library.

This Panoramic Picture will be sent to any address by A. M. Cleland, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minn., upon receipt of 35 cents. Orders may be sent direct to A. M. Cleland, or through any of the General or District Passenger Agents of the Northern Pacific in the larger cities, or through the local agents in Northern Pacific territory.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

ARKANSAS.

Little Rock.—The meeting under Brothers Fife, Jessup, McKinney and Stanly has given 102 additions to the church in less than four weeks. The meeting will be transferred to a large hall at a mission point in northwestern part of city on Wednesday night, Sept. 27, for a four weeks' campaign.

Ozark, Sept. 18.—We started here about eight years ago in a schoolhouse, have had preaching about once a month, and have held Lord's day services every Sunday with the exception of a few very stormy days. We have a good Sunday-school. We also have a house of our own. We succeeded in getting E. C. Browning, our state evangelist, to hold us a week's meeting which resulted in 13 confessions, and we feel much good has been done and more to follow.—Wm. H. Saunders, clerk.

CHINA.

Shanghai, Aug. 29.—Six more baptisms; others to follow.—W. P. Bentley.

COLORADO.

Loveland, Sept. 25.—One confession and one from the Congregationalists yesterday; 27 at regular services during the summer. Our work is prospering and outlook bright. —A. O. Walker, pastor.

Boulder.—Fifteen additions at regular services, Sept. 24.—S. M. Bernard, minister.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, Sept. 25.—Present at ministers' meeting to-day: Pres. J. E. Stuart, F. D. Power, E B. Bagby, W. T. Laprade, Walter F. Smith and the writer. Total additions reported, fourteen—thirteen by letter and one by confession and baptism. J. E. Stuart's report for eight months at 15th Street Church shows sixty six additions.—Claude C. Jones

FLORIDA.

Ashton, Sept. 25.—One received from the Baptists.—D. M. Breaker.

ILLINOIS.

Mechanicsburg, Sept. 27.—Two by letter. —L. L. Chapman.

Taylorville, Sept. 28.—During the month I have baptized 36 people, and some have been reclaimed, and some received by letter, making over 40. Begin revival October 1 with W. F. Shearer and Altheide.—Z. Moore.

Le Roy, Sept. 27.—Evangelist J. Bennett has closed a two weeks' meeting. Ten additions, all adults, and one a lady 75 years old. The church has received encouragement and a spiritual uplift.—E. A. Cary, pastor.

Farmer City, Sept. 26.—I preached at Marshall, Okla. Had one confession.—A. Immanuel Zeller.

Mason City.—Two baptisms—two sisters led to Christ by a sister.—O. C. Bohman.

Raymond, Sept. 28.—A good meeting at Pleasant Hill church in Montgomery county. Two by obedience, but the fruitage is not all in numbers. A new order of things, we hope, will follow. The young folks have organized and we shall endeavor not to omit the "assembling ourselves together." J. A. Clemens, of Decatur, helped us much.—James M. Driskell, Jerome McElfresh, deacons.

Jacksonville, Sept. 27.—Ten additions, eight with letters and two baptized.—Guy B. Williamson, assistant pastor.

Carbondale, Sept. 25 —One added yesterday, an intelligent Chinaman. We now have two, both trained by Brother and Sister Brandt.—A. M. Growden.

INDIANA.

Markle, Sept. 25.—One confession — M. G. Long.

Hammond, Sept. 25.—Four additions at Hammond.—C. J. Sharp.

Cambridge City, Sept. 28 —Elder McCormick, of Milton, has just closed a good meeting at the Hussey schoolhouse. Five additions. Four baptisms. A Sunday-school was organized with thirty-five charter members. Brother McCormick also preaches at Bentonville, where a successful meeting of two weeks added nine to the little congregation. A C. W. B. M. auxiliary was organized. He will begin a meeting with home forces at Milton, October 1. —C. C. Redgrave.

IOWA.

Fairfield, Sept. 25 —One added by letter. We begin a meeting Nov. 1, with Hamilton and Easton, evangelists.—H. C. Littleton.

Marcus.—The work is the most hopeful it has been for years. There were three baptisms recently. All missionary offerings have largely increased over former years.—William Baier, minister.

Des Moines, Sept. 25.—Nineteen days at Bayard; 43 additions—29 confessions, six from the denominations, and eight by statement. F. W. Mutchler is the pastor. —W. S. Johnson, evangelist.

Des Moines, Sept. 26.—The meeting at Braddyville closed with 44 additions, 38 confessions. G. A. Butler, Mound City, Mo., conducted the music. We were with the church 29 days.—E. W. Bowers.

KANSAS.

Hoisington, Sept. 25.—Two were baptized yesterday.—F. M. McHale.

Canton, Sept. 25.—I baptized 5 of my kinsfolk while on a trip to eastern Ohio, to attend a family reunion. These and a few others are intending to place their membership with the Christian church in New Philadelphia.—J. W. Strawn.

KENTUCKY.

Artemus, Ky., Sept. 25.—We dedicated the new and elegant church here a short time ago. We are in a revival now. The most substantial people are making the good confession. Coal and new railroad interests are bringing many people here. This is a great missionary church.—T. M. Myers.

to take confessions the last two Sundays. Three young people were baptized last evening. The long absence of a pastor and many removals so discouraged the church that they were not reaching the outsiders. These are the first conversions for more than a year.—E. A. Orr, pastor.

MISSISSIPPI.

Meridian, Sept. 27.—Two weeks' meeting at Houston. Two additions from the Baptists. We organized with 24 members, and will soon have a house of worship. The work has been hindered somewhat by the yellow fever scare. The board of health had the curfew law passed by the council, thus prohibiting any evening services, and for several weeks we have had no Sunday-school on account of diphtheria epidemic. We are planning for larger work.—W. M. Baker.

MISSOURI.

Brunswick, Sept. 29.—Three confessions at Orrick and one baptism at Miami since last report.—E. G. Merrill.

Barnard, Sept. 21.—A three weeks' meeting at Bolckow, in which M. F. Redlien, of Kansas City, did the preaching, closed with eighteen baptisms and four by letter. The church is much strengthened and encouraged. Brother Redlien has re-enterd the evangelistic field and may be addressed at Barnard in care of the writer, or Excelsior Springs, Mo., care of Jesse Gresham.—J. F. Bickel.

Lakenan, Sept. 26.—R. B. Havener, State Bible-school evangelist, just closed a three and a half weeks' meeting with us, resulting in eleven additions—seven baptisms and four by statement; he also baptized another who preferred to remain a member of the Methodist Church South. Our community is largely Catholic, and our Methodist brethren have a good hold, leaving small territory to work on.—W. S. Orr, clerk.

Minden Mines.—In Simpson Ely's meeting there were 47 confessions of new converts, one from Methodists (over 50 years in that body), one Catholic, three from Baptists, one from Congregationalists, three by letter. Chas. T. Swift, our regular pastor, has been employed full time.—S. E. Dickinson, clerk.

Republic, Sept. 27.—Fourteen to date.—Lawrence Wright.

Brunswick, Sept. 29.—We began a meeting September 16 with Frank M. O'Neal, of Springfield, as leader of song. There have been 10 confessions and five by statement. Sister O'Neal is also assisting in the song service.—F. H. Williamson, pastor.

Gallatin, Sept. 26.—I just closed a nineteen days' meeting at Jameson with 8 added—2 by statement, 2 reclaimed who had been Baptists, and four by confession and baptism. Only 5 days of good weather. Brother Omer begins a meeting for us Nov. 5.—C. W. Comstock.

Kahoka, Sept. 25.—Two additions yesterday by confession and baptism.—J. C. Bennett, pastor.

Kansas City, Sept. 25.—Four additions yesterday at my regular appointment at Louisburg—1 from the Methodists and 3 confessions and baptisms. In the last three months we have had additions to the church every Sunday. Our work is going well.—C. L. Fife.

Mountain Grove, Sept. 24.—A splendid meeting at Mt. View. I found the church badly discouraged. We succeeded in getting all united, appointed officers and trustees, set the church in order, raised money to employ minister one-fourth time. The future is bright. I will minister to them the coming year. Twelve valuable additions during the meeting.—E. W. Yocum.

Belle, Sept. 25.—Meeting 7 days old; 18 additions to date, with growing interest.—E. M. Romine.

New Hampton, Sept. 25.—At the close of the meeting last night 2 made the confession.—J. T. Alsup.

Kansas City, Sept. 25.—Ivanhoe Park church, 2 confessions and baptisms and two added by letter. This makes 29 during the first seven months' service with this congregation, all at regular services. The revival of the Independence Boulevard Church led by Scoville and Smith is awakening a splendid interest and we believe it will be an excellent preparation for the simultaneous effort of the other churches of greater Kansas City. Expect to begin October 22. Roy O. Youtz is to assist our congregation in singing during these meetings.—Lewis P. Kopp.

NEBRASKA.

Omaha, Sept. 26.—Ten additions to the First Church.

OHIO.

Athens, Sept. 25.—Four confessions. We closed the S. S. year yesterday with an enrollment of 528.—T. L. Lowe.

TENNESSEE.

Shelbyville, Sept. 28 —Our meeting closed this week. H. H. Saunders led the singing. There were 77 additions—all adults but three or four. There have been 114 added since I came here. Perhaps nowhere in all America is the tide of prejudice so high as in this part of the country. But many were baptized from the denominations. One M. E. lady turned her two daughters out of doors for obeying the truth. I went to see her, and she came to hear for herself. In three nights she and her husband both accepted the plea of the Church of Christ. Last night I baptized her last daughter, so five in one family all came out on the side of the gospel. They were all Methodists. We had many similar experiences.—E. E. Violett.

Not New, But True.

Daniel Webster once said about a certain political proposition that "There were many new things about it, and many true things, but the trouble was that the true things were not new, and the new things were not true," a philosophy which shows that Webster's fame and reputation were not unmerited.

The Vitæ-Ore advertisement which appears in these columns from month to month is not a new offer. It is the same 30-day-trial-no-pay-unless-benefited offer which the readers of this paper have seen and read for the last three or four years' time, and which many hundreds have accepted, and are not sorry that they did so. It is of the kind that would appeal strongly to Webster, in that it is not new, but all true. Vitæ-Ore has been before the public for three decades, and its newness has long since worn off, and its worth been thoroughly established by the experience of the many thousands of sick and ailing people who have sought its aid. It has seen medicines come and go, but has gone right along, growing in popularity from month to month, year to year, always satisfying, always doing as advertised.

The proprietors, the Theo. Noel Company, Vitæ-Ore Bldg., Chicago, want you to try it. You don't pay a cent unless you are benefited; two cents postage upon your request for the treatment is all you need to get it. Why should you hesitate?

The Hymn Book and Religious Culture

By CHARLES M. Stuart, D. D., Litt. D.

There exists a more than general impression among preachers and people alike that the hymn book has no particular or independent function in church life; that, at its lowest, the hymn book serves just to divert people while they are waiting for the appointed hour which an order-loving providence has set apart for the sermon; or, at its highest, to create a temper and atmosphere in which the sermon can be heard to the best advantage. One has only to consult the musical program of the average service in non-liturgical churches to realize the widespread indifference to, perhaps ignorance of, church song as an aid to devotion. A morning service opened with an anthem-setting of an evening hymn; and a sermon on the doom of the wicked, followed by a congregational rendering of "By Cool Siloam's Shady Rill"! Robert Louis Stevenson was moved to wonder by hearing the burly priests of Noyon troll out the "Miserere" like a tavern catch; but a minister, one of the most accomplished in his denomination, after a searching and solemnizing sermon on the sinfulness of sin, actually called on his congregation to "sing heartily and with the spirit," Ringwoldt's tremendous judgment hymn, with the lines—

"But sinners, filled with guilty fears
  Behold his wrath prevailing;
For they shall rise and find their tears
  And sighs are unavailing;
The day of grace is past and gone,
Trembling they stand before the throne
  All unprepared to meet him."

Dr. Lyman Beecher is said to have found the hymn book serviceable in distracting the attention of the congregation while he put the finishing touches to his sermon; and even Mr. Moody turned it to account for keeping the people good-natured while the air was being changed, the windows opened, the doors shut, or a collection taken. The Methodist church provides singing at the close of the pastoral prayer, for the people who come late to church. Whether this is designed as a sign of welcome, a token of forgiveness, or a diversion of attention from the fact of their late coming, is not altogether clear.

As an offset to this rather unworthy attitude toward the church's manual of praise, it may be well to look at the place which the service of song has made for itself in the church's order of worship. It has always had a place; and that not from apostolical direction or from papal or synodical decree, but from the nature and necessity of the worshiper. The essence of worship is a deliberate uplifting thought about God. The psychology of the psalmist is inevitable and indisputable. In immediate juxtaposition to the thought of the glorious honor of God's majesty and of his wondrous works, of his being nigh unto all them that call upon him to hear their cry and save them, he places the worshiper's outburst of praise—"I will extol thee, my God, O King; I will bless thy name forever and forever! Every day will I bless thee; my mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord; I shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness and sing of thy righteousness." Such a thought of God touches the springs of faith and hope and love. And faith sings; hope sings; love sings. Song is the characteristic expression of their life. Atheism never sings; unbelief has no hymnody; even a moribund religion is always mute. But let the Spirit of God play upon the spirit of man, and song is born. That impact of spirit upon spirit draws from a man's lips, as morn from Memnon, rivers of melodies. A recent writer on the revival in Wales discusses the music as a unique feature. But when was there ever a revival of religion that was not accompanied by a great outburst of song? Under the impulse of strong religious emotion a man can not be restrained. He will either find an instrument of praise or he will make one. And it is better, on the whole, that the average man should find a hymn than make one. The impulse to poetic expression is not always the sufficient guarantee of one's call to express oneself poetically.

Now, the existence of song as a constant factor in the order of worship is a warrant for serious consideration of the hymn book. If this element in our service of praise were arbitrary; if it existed only for convenience' sake; if it could disappear like, let us say, the incontinent church notices, with a measurable sense of gain to the service as a whole, it might be taken differently. Its constancy hints at something more significant than the mere enrichment of a form of service. It indicates that there is in such an element a mystical, a magical power to open the heart to the entrance of divine truth where it is intelligently and wisely directed, For "What's poetry?" as Mr. Browning says, except a power that makes, and, speaking to one sense, inspires the rest, pressing them all into its service. It is in the power of song to quicken every approach of the soul by which God can come into it—awe, adoration, aspiration, tenderness, faith and love. The minister who is ignorant of this power of song, or indifferent to it, is simply abridging the influence of his ministry and depriving himself of what might well be an invaluable auxiliary.

Moreover, it is instructive to consider the hymn book as an agent in the dissemination of doctrine. In the apostolic church one meets with the recognition of its value in this regard by the apostle Paul, who exhorts his Colossian disciples to edification in the word of Christ through the use of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. Later, its use in controversy is hinted at in Pliny's letter to Trojan, where he refers to the Christians as singing hymns to Christ as God. The story of the Gnostic controversy with Bardesanes and Harmonius on the one side, and Syrian Ephrem on the other, was virtually a battle of the hymn books. In the Arian campaign of the fourth century Chrysostom at Constantinople and Ambrose at Milan were the conspicuous figures, and the people were indoctrinated even more by song than by sermon. During the Dark Ages, when Christian doctrine was almost wholly obscured under the gloom of very unchristian life, it was not by preaching that any remembrance of the truth was kept alive, but by the creeds and anthems of the church in the ritual of the mass. Still later, in the awakening under Luther, it was not Luther's sermons, but Luther's hymns, which alarmed the Church of Rome when it discovered, to its dismay, that "the whole people was singing itself into the Lutheran doctrine." There is, indeed, no lovelier picture in that tempestuous and terror-ridden epoch than that of the great body of the people, in the midst of the storm, sturdily and heartily making the streets and lanes, the high roads and the open fields, echo to the ringing stanzas of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ.

These scenes were repeated in the English revival under the Wesleys. Making every allowance for the eloquence of its matchless preachers, it remains true that the hymns of Methodism had an even wider hearing and a more general acceptance. It should be remembered that two classes of people were almost impenetrable to Methodist preaching—the very wise, who differed from Mr. Wesley, and the very poor, who were too ignorant to understand him. But both the contentious wise and the nonunderstanding poor were amenable to Methodist song.

Look at the picture! A bare room in the squalid house of a dismal street in an English mining town. A flickering candle lighting up the smooched faces of rough colliers, and not at all softening the hard visages and tasteless attire of the women. Surely a company auguring ill for poetic temper or devotional response. The itinerant preacher, like his Master, having no beauty that people should desire him, but quietly impressive, under the conscious dignity of the message which he brought from that same Master. The hymn is announced; it is read slowly; it is read line by line. The people have no books; it is even doubtful whether any can read. The meaning of the hymn is explained. It tells of Jesus, lover of their souls and of all souls; of Jesus, a haven from the storms of life and a refuge for the helpless and the defenseless; of Jesus, the source of blessing and power, able to raise the fallen, to cheer the faint, to heal the sick, to lead the blind; of Jesus, last and best of all, the fountain of grace and truth, able to forgive sin, and to make and keep men pure and to be in man the spring of eternal life.

Look again at this company. As the swelling tide of music rises the faces of the worshipers become transfigured. "The meaning of song goes deep," says Mr. Carlyle. In these unsophisticated natures the hymn has gone to the roots of their being. The trembling voice, the gleaming face, the eye over-brimming with tears—all tell that, for those people, the impact of the divine life is thrilling them, and to each one Jesus is in very deed and truth, Friend, Lover and Savior. The preaching of Wesley and Whitefield has passed away; great and glorious was the harvest of their work; but to this day the hymns of Charles Wesley are still "taming the roughness of unlettered minds, renovating wornout spirits, bringing hearts benumbed by sordid cares and worldly prospects into that bright atmosphere in which his own spirit dwelt, and winning everywhere a listening ear for the higher harmonies of heaven."—Epworth Herald.

BETTER WORK OUR SOCIETY SHOULD DO.—Heb. 6:7-12; 13:20, 21.

For the Leader.

I am sure it should be the desire of every one in the meeting tonight that we enter upon a better work. Not only should we enter a season of better work, in the sense of doing more as a society, but we should cultivate the effort to do more thoroughly what we undertake. Two things are an abomination to the Lord: one is doing only half work and the other is half doing our work. Are we given in this society to doing less than our share? Let us bestir ourselves and do all our share. We will be happier for so doing. And how much happier will many others be who are to share in the results of our full capacity work! Then we should give attention to doing our work well. I once knew a farmer who never did anything well. If it were plowing, his was too shallow; if it were cutting weeds, his were about half cut; if it were harvesting, he would always waste a good share. His halfway spirit was upon all about him, for his hands seemed to know what was expected, or to breathe in the same lifeless way of the farmer, for they did their work in keeping with the rule that prevailed on this farm. This man lived a hand-to-mouth life for a generation. His farm went to the bad and his buildings tumbled down. What did he need to avoid this unhappy condition? Simply to do better work.

For the Members

1. Our presidents should do better work. They are in the lead. We all look to them to lead out. In but few places would the young people fail to follow. But we can do but little where the president divides his time and his heart between the world and the society, making the society secondary. A good president will give most of his time to planning for the society. By this is not meant that he will take his time from his secular employment, but that it will ever be upon his mind. He will be thinking, planning, praying for the good of the society that has honored him with the place of leadership.

2. Our secretaries should do better work. They are apt to let so much that falls to the secretary as his regular work go by default. Sometimes a spiritual listlessness takes hold upon them. Why, in some societies the secretary will begin after the third or fourth business meeting to neglect the minutes. He will begin his neglect by scratching them upon a blank sheet of paper. Then two or three of these back minutes will accumulate before the secretary writes them in the record book. The hurried writing gets cold, and, at the next meeting, there will be difficulty in finding out just what was done. Now the harm of this is not alone in the fact that the record of what happened is not kept, and that the society is without the benefit of this help, but in the fact of the spiritual indifference that caused such neglect. The neglect is a symptom of an alarming condition.

3. Our committees should do better work. I wonder how many committees fulfill the requirement of having a written report. No doubt many of them do. Here comes the night of the business meeting. I think of it with a jump, for I well remember that my report is not written Come to think about it, I believe there is nothing to write. May not this very fact be at the very bottom of my neglect in the clerical part of my duty? Would I not be ready enough to write if I had something to write? So we see that not only better work, but the question of work at all comes into the count at once. Why can not members of committees resolve to remedy this fault? It lies with them to change this troublesome thing into a pleasant performance of duty and a general rejoicing over what has been done. Are there not some who will resolve to make the effort? But right here we must come back to the president; he can help much by holding everybody up to good work. He should require it of every committee chairman to make a faithful report and hand it to him before the time of meeting so it can be in the hands of the secretary for reading at the proper time.

4. Now let us as individual members look this question in the face. Why should we be able to get our consent to drag along with our individual work in this way? We should be ashamed to do this. Yes, we should be afraid to do so. One or two faithful ones in a society—well, a half dozen, anyway—will be able to band themselves together and make a good, live society in any town in the country. They can even do so in any country place where the roads are at all passable in winter. If you will prepare talks, ask others to take part, keep the society near your hearts, pray and work, after a while others will come and stand with you. It may be slow, but it will be sure to win in time. Try it. Do not allow the drag to be put upon your devotion. Force yourself, if need be, for a time to go ahead. Always have that part prepared. Never fail to respond in a meeting to help the leader on with the meeting. After a time you will find the spell broken. In the strength of the Lord we will be able to go forward with abundance of spiritual energy.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Have I ever fervently prayed to God to give me the spiritual industry that will send me early and with great cheerfulness to all the work I may have to do in his kingdom?

THE GOSPEL A MESSAGE OF LIFE.—Acts 5:20.

Life the Supreme Possession of Man. Whether the words of the ancient adversary of Job, "All that a man hath will he give for his life," be true or false, none will dispute the exceeding value placed upon life by the human race. To prolong it the miser would give up his gold, the warrior lay down his sword, the epicure curb his appetite. To maintain and enrich his physical life man explores the earth, develops its ample resources, and exercises his ingenuity in invention of means for multiplying his native powers of getting and making. His intellectual life makes still more urgent demands upon him, and for truth's sake he will endure any hardship, make any sacrifice, that may lie in the way of reaching his end. The higher life of the soul calls him to yet larger effort and surrender, until martyrdom becomes the normal method of answering the prohibition of the service of God by the Christian. Yes, for life, in all its higher meanings and uses, the true man would give all that he hath.

The Gospel Enlarges Our Conception of Life. The believer in Jesus Christ knows more of the length and breadth and height of life than can others. Jesus came to give us life "more abundantly" (See John 10:10). The Gospel sanctifies and exercises the whole nature of man—body, soul and spirit. (See 1 Thess. 5:23.) When the apostles preached to men "all the words of this life," they were opening to them the door of opportunity such as never was theirs before. Nowhere but in Christian lands is human life capable of reaching its highest estate. Christendom and true civilization have the same boundaries. Other religions develop one or another side of human nature; Christianity produces symmetry and therefore beauty and strength. Buddhism has an affinity for the Mongol, Brahmanism for the Hindu, but Christianity adjusts itself to the nature and needs of every race, and is at home in every clime.

The Gospel Makes All of Life Sacred. It brings the pardon of sin, and the sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit, thus redeeming our life from its degradation (Mark 16:15, 16; Matt. 28:18-20; Acts 2:37-41). Henceforth, the intelligent believer knows that he is consecrated to the new life in Christ, and he will not devote his powers to the service of sin, as he did before. The lesson of two weeks ago, in the 6th chapter of Romans, is worth reviewing as a sufficient proof of this fact. Even the body of the Christian becomes the temple of the Holy Spirit, while his mind, heart, soul and spirit are intended to be the very Shekinah of the Most High (1 Cor. 3:16, 17; 6:19, 20). For the Christian to live among men is for them to enjoy the presence of Christ himself, for it is the mission of the believer to reproduce the life of his Lord (Gal. 2:20; Phil. 1:19-21).

The Gospel Brings Us Eternal Life. "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and he that liveth and believeth in me shall never die," said the Lord Jesus Christ to his disciples. "This is the witness, that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son," says the beloved disciple (John 11:25, 26; 1 John 5:11, 12). So may we turn away from all other teachers, whatever their pretensions or promises, and say with Peter, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life!" In this life let us ever rejoice and trust.

RETURNING FROM CAPTIVITY.—Ezra 1:1-11.

Memory Verses, 5, 6.

Golden Text.—The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.—Psa. 126:3.

The captivity marked the great turning point in the history of the Hebrew people. Never in history did a people emerge from a severer test or a heavier punishment with their lesson more completely learned. It had taken all the centuries from the beginnings of their national life until now to teach them to be monotheists. Theirs was no special "genius for monotheism." Their tendency, from the days of Moses to the time of the captivity, was always in the direction of idolatry. It required not only the giving of the Law, but the discipline of bitter experience, the teaching that came through special blessings as well as special punishments, the preaching and pleading and denunciation of the prophets, and finally the destruction of the holy city and two generations of captivity in a strange land—all this to teach the Hebrew people to shun idolatry, to worship none but Jehovah, and to keep his worship free from the corruptions of pagan ceremonies.

That lesson was now learned. The captivity had done its work. But it had given opportunity for the development of a new tendency which had its dangers. With the destruction of the temple, the reverence for the Law increased. Judaism tended to become a book-religion. It lost the feeling of the presence of God, and missed the true prophetic emphasis upon right living as the first requirement for pleasing God. It began to make the service of God, first and last, a matter of exegesis and literal obedience. To interpret with absolute precision and the utmost subtlety the very words of the law, and to fulfill them literally—this was the new ideal of religion. The order of scribes arose, whose duty was to interpret and apply the law. They developed a system of casuistry which took the place of conscience and reduced religion to the plane of barren technicalities. Out of this arose Pharisaism, and what this led to we all know.

The captivity, then, may be taken as marking the point where the temptation to idolatry ceased and the temptation to barren and pettifogging legalism began. Idolatry was burned out of them by a fiery trial. There came, in a gentler and more gracious way, the opportunity to turn from legalism to life, but the race as a whole rejected the Lord who would have led it aright, and lost its opportunity.

The restoration of Judah from captivity came at the hand of Cyrus. Cyrus was the first of a new line of conquerors and rulers. Scarcely had the Babylonian empire firmly established itself upon the ruins of the Assyrian and become the overwhelmingly dominant power in the East, when there arose one Cyrus, first as "king of Ansan," who conquered Elam, and made himself ruler of Media and king of Persia. Babylon formed an alliance with Egypt to resist the new conqueror. But in vain. The Babylonian empire burst like a bubble. Babylon was captured without a blow, and Cyrus, in 538 B. C., made it his capital.

Perhaps he had seen some evidence of the power of Jehovah; or perhaps, after the manner of orientals, he wished to please all the gods on the chance of finding a powerful friend among them. Perhaps, too, he wished to strengthen his empire by gratifying all dissatisfied elements, of which the captive Jews in Babylon were certainly one. At any rate, he sent them back to their own land and generously restored the temple treasure which had been looted by Nebuchadrezzar.

A CURE GIVEN BY ONE WHO HAD IT

In the Spring of 1893 I was attacked by muscular and inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered as those who have it know, for over three years, and tried almost everything. Finally I found a remedy that cured me completely and it has not returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted, and it effected a cure in every case. Anyone desiring to give this precious remedy a trial, I will send it free. Write right now. Address

Does Mrs. Eddy Believe in a Personal God?

In her book, "Science and Health," Vol. I., p. 39, we find the following statement: "The time has come for a belief in the person of God to give place in the better understanding of the Science of the Divine Principle, named God. Hitherto theology has interpreted God as a personal Savior, instead of a Saving Principle." On page 25 of the same book she says: "For a personal deity to be omnipresent he must possess a body encompassing universal space, and we can not conceive of such a personality."

Scarcely an attack of any character can be made against Christian Science but what some of its adherents are ready to claim that Mrs. Eddy teaches otherwise in her book. James A. Logwood denies that Mrs. Eddy teaches that there is no such thing as a personal God. It will be difficult for him to explain any such statements as the above.

We do not claim that it would be difficult for him to find where Mrs. Eddy contradicts the above statements, as her book is a book of self-contradiction. Let him do so if he will, but the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist is right when he suggests that he has seen somewhere in Mrs. Eddy's teachings that she did not believe in a personal God.

CHILDERS.

On August 19, 1905, Elder E. R. Childers passed away at Troy, Mo. Born in Franklin county, Mo., Nov. 8, 1832, he united with the Christian Church in 1852, and began preaching in 1853. For fifty-two years he was a devoted and efficient minister of the gospel, turning many to Christ. His life was prudent and Christlike. He was "a ripe sheaf," ready for the Master's use. By his request the writer conducted his funeral at the Christian church. His body was buried in the city cemetery. He leaves one son, Henry Childers, Editor of the "Troy Free Press," one daughter, Mrs. Mary Baily, of California, and four grandchildren.

E. J. Lampton.

CLAYTON.

Mrs. Alta Place Clayton, daughter of Robert Place, died June 22, 1905, aged 20 years, after a long illness, full of proofs of her triumphant faith. She was educated at Bethany, W. Va., and Oxford, Ohio. She had a wide circle of acquaintances and was active in Christian work. Clyde Darsie.

Bowling Green, O.

MORGANS.

On the fifth of August my father, Ephraim Morgans, passed away. He died in the triumphs of the Christian faith. On the 7th he was laid to rest beside my mother, who preceded him to the better land six years ago. He died at Marionville, but was buried at Bethpage. He was 82 years, 5 months and 10 days old. He became a Christian nearly 40 years ago. Father and mother celebrated their golden wedding three years before death separated them. Four sons and three daughters mourn. Morgan Morgans.

Lanagan, Mo.

WASSON.

One of those pure spirits which God sometimes lends to earth to show the quality of heaven has just returned to its legitimate sphere. In the twilight of September 6, our greatly beloved sister, Susan E. Wasson, was summoned to "go up higher." She was a lifelong Christian, possessed of those beautiful and striking characteristics which are the sure result of habitual contact with the Master, and which made her companionship heavenly and her influence irresistible. She had not an enemy; one might as well have thought to quarrel with the sunshine as with her. God gave her long life, as if loth to withdraw her from the world, to which her presence was a benediction and her devout example was both incentive and blessing. At the ripe age of 81, having suffered long and intensely, but with martyr-like patience, she "fell on sleep" and awoke to look into the face of Jesus. Her life was all consecration and her memory will be a perpetual fragrance. Anson G. Chester.

WILLIAMSON.

Rachel McFarland Williamson was born June 27, 1830, and died August 14, 1905. For fifty-seven years she lived on the farm where she died. For sixty years she was a member of the church, most of which time she was connected with the Christian church at Massillon, O. The undersigned, who was her pastor for five years, testifies to her faith and purity, her devotion, kindness and liberality. One daughter, Mrs. Sarah Baughman, survives her. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

Too Late.

By Janet Young.

It was Monday morning, and the Rev. Charles Davidson was in his study, lounging comfortably before an open fire, but there was a slight frown on his face, and, tossing a letter upon the table, he said, a little impatiently: "That is the twentieth letter I have received in a fortnight. They are from preachers who wish me to assist them to locate."

"Not a very pleasant state of affairs," said the Parishioner, who had come in for a few minutes' chat.

"No, indeed; I can't settle twenty men. The churches are independent, and they wish to do their own choosing. I believe we shall yet be compelled to form some system for locating men. This church and preacher hunting question is becoming serious. Now, in this instance," and Mr. Davidson held up a letter, "I may be able to do something. This letter is from James Warner; you know him, don't you?"

"Oh, yes."

"Well, he is a friend of mine—a good man and still in his prime. He desires me to send his name to N——, and as I happen to have a friend or two there I may be able to work him in."

"He doesn't hold long pastorates," said the Parishioner.

"No; he has been singularly unfortunate in the choice of fields, though I suppose they were not of his own choosing."

"I understand there was some misunderstanding at R——

"Yes," Mr. Davidson replied; "but Warner was not at fault there. You know, R—— is a rough place, and there are some tough citizens in the church. Warner is clean-cut, and thoroughly abhors hypocrisy. Then he is a bit of an enthusiast, and is not politic enough."

"Were he not so good a man he might be more successful," said the Parishioner, dryly.

"I should not like to admit that," said the Rev. Charles Davidson.

At that moment the telephone bell rang and the Parishioner took his leave. The message ran: "Mrs. Grover is very ill; can you come at once?" The letters were thrust into a drawer.

"I can not write that letter today," said Mr. Davidson. "I will have more time tomorow."

The morrow came and went, and many another followed, and still the letter was unwritten. One frosty morning in late September the Parishioner again dropped in.

"I saw Warner yesterday," he said, by way of opening the conversation. "He looked as though he had had a spell of sickness. He said his wife had been ill and his little daughter is now seriously sick."

"His child sick!" exclaimed Mr. Davidson. "She is the light of his life. He didn't try N——, it seems."

"Why, no; he said he had not received a line from N——, and, in fact, had had no opportunity to candidate save at S——."

Mr. Davidson jumped to his feet. "Is it possible," he exclaimed, "that I failed to write that letter! How could I have forgotten it!"

Seizing pen and paper he wrote the letter and, running downstairs, dropped it into the box.

"Perhaps it is not too late yet," he said, on re-entering the room. "The church at N—— is at low ebb just now. Perhaps they need a man like Warner."

* * * * * *

Daisy Warner tossed restlessly on her pillows. Mrs. Warner tenderly pushed back the straggling curls.

"Do you feel better, dear?" she asked.

"I don't feel very well, mamma," the child answered, "but maybe I'll be better tomorrow. Where's papa?"

"I hear him on the porch."

"It seems," said Daisy, a little fretfully, "that papa walks the porch all the time. Why does he, mamma?"

Mrs. Warner did not answer, but she listened with fainting heart to the footsteps outside.

James Warner was in a state bordering on insanity. He had not read a page for weeks—he could not. There was room in his mind for but one thought—what could he do? How should he make a living for his wife and child? He had written to church after church, but all to no purpose. He had said in the early spring, "I shall be settled before midsummer"; but midsummer had come and gone, and no church had yet appeared upon his horizon. He had turned to the business world, looking up insurance companies and agencies of all sorts. And at last, in desperation, he had applied for work as clerk at several stores in the neighboring city, but he had returned home miserably disappointed.

"The business world does not believe in a preacher," he had said to Elizabeth.

Just why he had not received an opportunity to candidate in some of the many churches that were contemplating changes in pastors he could not quite understand. He was little known, however; and, though an able man, he was not what might be called a popular preacher. Today winter stared him in the face, and the little sum of money he had saved from his former pastorate was almost gone. How carefully he and Elizabeth had hoarded their little store, even counting the pennies! Since March of that year they had had but the barest necessities of life.

Even Daisy had been deprived of the little delicacies she liked, and really needed. The child, always delicate, had contracted a cold in the late winter, which had left her with an annoying cough. The doctor recommended a change of air, but lack of means forbade this. Through the long summer the parents had waited with sinking hearts, yet always hoping that she might be placed in a warm climate before the coming of winter. But autumn had come, and they still waited. Owing to the cool weather she was again stricken with a heavy cold.

James Warner could hear her litle hacking cough as he strode back and forth across the small veranda. His face had a hopeless look this morning, but a cynical smile crept over the fine, sensitive mouth. Should he go on a farm? Could he husk

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin disease as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

corn and follow the plow? He stepped quickly inside.

"Papa!" called a sweet voice. "Papa, I want you to come and sit by me."

"I want to go to the post office now, darling. When I come back I will sit by you a long time."

"I shall be better in a few days, papa, and then you must take me to the woods; the trees are so beautiful now. Will you, papa?"

"Yes, darling," he replied, smiling; but before reaching the door the smile died out of his face.

Many a morning James Warner had walked tremblingly into the post office, and with beating heart had approached the box; but this morning he approached carelessly and indifferently; he had almost lost hope. A letter! Warner picked it up eagerly and, hurrying outside, read its contents. It was an invitation from the church at N—— to occupy its pulpit next Lord's day, with the view of becoming its pastor. That was all; but it put new life into the heart of James Warner. Daisy heard a springing step outside.

"Did you get a letter, papa?" she called.

"Yes, dear." Then turning to his wife: "The church at N—— has invited me to preach for them Sunday. They desire a man to take charge of the work immediately. But how can I go, Eliabeth, leaving you here alone with Daisy, and she so ill?"

"Oh, papa, I'll be well when you come back. I'm better now."

"You must go, James," added Elizabeth.

Daisy was not so well the next morning, and it was with some misgivings that Mr. Warner took his leave. "If she should grow worse, Elizabeth, let me know immediately," he said.

The church at N—— received him warmly. The auditorium was full in the morning, but overflowing at night, and the people grasped his hand with a hearty good will as he walked down the aisle at the close of the evening service. But as he drew near the door a telegram was thrust into his hand; it ran: "Daisy worse; come immediately."

Oh, that long, long night! Would it never end! Would he never reach home!

"God in heaven," he moaned, again and again, "take all; do with me as thou wilt, but spare my child, my little daughter, my first born."

He thought his heart would stop beating as he neared the house that held all of this world for him. In a moment more he knew the worst. Standing in the doorway he caught sight of Daisy, lying white and still. The doctor was bending over her. Elizabeth, with bowed head, was kneeling by the bedside. The doctor turned and grasped his hand.

"Can you bear it, Warner?"

He could not answer, but sank down by his wife. The doctor looked at his watch. "She has but an hour to live," he said.

Presently the child stirred, looked about the room, letting her eyes fall upon her father.

"Papa," she said, gladly, "did you get the place?"

"Yes, darling."

"I'm so glad," was the reply. "I've been very sick, papa, but I'm better now."

A little later she asked, feebly: "Is it a pretty place, papa?"

"Oh, yes, dear."

"Tell me about it."

"Its streets are wonderfully beautiful," he said, with a sob, "and there is a river clear as crystal."

"And we shall have all we want there, papa?"

"Oh, my poor child!" moaned the father.

"Kiss me, papa."

She spoke no more. The hour passed quickly, far too quickly, and with it passed the soul of Daisy Warner, a smile on her lips and the light of heaven in her face.

A week after the funeral James Warner received an urgent call from the church at N——. He accepted, and a few weeks later the stricken husband and wife took up the work. The people were doubtful—had they made a mistake? James Warner never faltered. The work went steadily on until the church in N—— became one of the best churches in the state, and a number of church committees were looking toward its popular pastor. Yet three years after the beginning of Warner's pastorate Elizabeth found him, one autumn day, sitting with bowed head. Raising his sad face he said, wearily:

"It was too late, Elizabeth, and it is still too late."

KISSING IS HEALTHFUL.

With feelings of unmixed joy we chronicle the fact that a distinguished French physician has gone against his colleagues and actually stood up for kissing. Far from being harmful, it is wholesome. The mistletoe should be encouraged by enlightened practitioners all the year around. Kisses may carry microbes, of course. So much the better, says this amiable authority. The interchange of certain bacilli is a laudable and healthy practice. In kissing it is not so much the bad microbes as the beneficent ones that are exchanged. These good bacteria, as is well known, are not only favorable, but essential to digestion. If we were to sterilize our inner man, completely killing the white with the black sheep among our colonies of bacilli, we should instantly die. Now, by exchanging friendly microbes, we stimulate them. Kissing, therefore, is a natural therapeutic custom, the jolly physician concludes, and who knows but what some day the kissing cure will be ordered for dyspepsia by up-to-date physicians?

HE RANKED WITH THE BISHOP.

Bishop Vincent was praising at Chautauqua the Chautauquan architecture.

"Beautiful buildings," he said, "are a perennial delight, and the architects who give us them should be more highly honored and rewarded than they are.

"Whenever I look at our superb buildings here, I think of what their architect once said to me.

"He said that a bishop employed one of his brothers in the designing and erection of a fine house. When the house was completed the bishop was well pleased with it, but when the architect's bill was presented to him he was not so well pleased.

"'My good brother architect,' he said, 'don't you think that your charges are too high? The yearly salaries of many of my curates do not equal the amount of this bill of yours.'

"'Very likely not,' the architect replied; 'but I am a bishop among architects.'"

NOT THE SINGER, BUT THE SONG.

Thirty men, red-eyed and disheveled, lined up before a judge of the San Francisco police court. It was the regular morning company of "drunks and disorderlies." Some were old and hardened, others hung their heads in shame. Just as the momentary disorder attending the bringing of the prisoners quieted down a strange thing happened. A strong, clear voice from below began singing:

"Last night I lay a-sleeping,
There came a dream so fair."

Last night? It had been for them all a nightmare or a drunken stupor. The song was such a contrast to the horrible fact that no one could fail of the sudden shock at the song suggested.

"I stood in old Jerusalem,
Beside the Temple there."

The song went on. The judge had paused. He made a quiet inquiry. A former member of a famous opera company, known all over the country, was awaiting trial for forgery. It was he who was singing in his cell.

Meantime, the song went on, and every man in the line showed emotion. One or two dropped on their knees. One boy at the end of the line, after a desperate effort at self-control, leaned against the wall, buried his face in his folded arms and sobbed, "Oh, mother, mother!"

The sobs cut the very hearts of the men who heard, and the song, still welling its way through the court-room, blended in the hush. At length one man protested:

"Judge," said he, "have we got to submit to this? We're here to take our punishment, but this—" He, too, began to sob.

It was impossible to proceed with the business of the court, yet the judge gave no order to stop the song. The police sergeant, after a surprised effort to keep the men in line, stepped back and waited with the rest. The song moved on to its climax:

"Jerusalem, Jerusalem! Sing, for the night is o'er!
Hosanna in the highest! hosanna for evermore!"

In an ecstasy of melody, the last words rang out, and then there was silence.

The judge looked into the faces of the men before him. There was not one who was not touched by the song; not one in whom some better impulse was not stirred. He did not call the cases singly—a kind word of advice, and then dismissed them all. Not one was fined or sentenced to the workhouse that morning. The song had done more good than punishment could have accomplished.

MILES OF WORDS.

In the October World's Work an article on "Writing for a Living" contains many anecdotes of the career of a writer for revenue only. Mr. Gilson Willets says:

"In the life of the special correspondent of the weekly or the monthly come what may be called 'emergency calls,' comparable to the 'hurry calls' of the physician. The evening President McKinley was shot an editor telephoned me to have the whole story in the office by seven the following morning. In that all-night of telephoning for facts and of banging the typewriter I made $75. Again, President Schurman, of Cornell University, could be interviewed only on the train from New York to Ithaca. On my arrival in Ithaca an editor telegraphed me to hasten to Kansas to 'cover' the publication of the Rev. Charles M. Sheldon's 'As Christ Would' edition of the Topeka Daily Capital. That assignment kept me in Kansas three weeks, although I had left New York to be gone only one night. On another occasion, as I stepped ashore after four days spent on a rocking pilot-boat off Sandy Hook to write of 'Pilots Courageous,' a boy handed me a note from an editor asking me to hasten by the train to the coal-mining region of Pennsylvania, where a great strike was agitating the country. On the train to Scranton I had to write the pilot story, in order to be free to gather the facts for the story of 'The Coal Dust Twins, Messrs. Striker and Scab.'

"An editor telephoned me on Thursday: 'Can you sail with me Saturday for Europe?' 'Yes!' 'Then meet me on the ship, for I have no time to see you before sailing.' As the ship steamed down New York Bay, I asked: 'Why are we going to Europe?' 'I want you,' was the answer, 'to get the facts in Berlin, Paris, London and St. Petersburg, and write a series of articles on 'The American Commercial Invasion of Europe.'

"That year I crossed the Atlantic six times, making three round trips; for, besides the trip to get material for the 'Commercial Invasion' articles, I made separate trips through the poorest counties of Erin's Isle, mostly in carts, to write 'The Depopulation of Ireland'; and through the slumberland of Alfonso XIII., to write 'Americans Now Welcome in Spain.'"

HIS RELIGION.

Not long ago a certain clergyman from the West was called to a church in Jersey City. Soon after his arrival the divine's wife made the usual visits to the members of the parish. One of these, a plumber's wife, was asked by the good lady whether the family were regular church-goers, whereupon the wife of the plumber replied that while she and her children were attendants at divine service quite regularly, her husband was not.

"Dear me," said the minister's wife, "that's too bad! Does your husband never go to church?"

"Well, I wouldn't say that he never went," was the reply. "Occasionally Will goes to the Unitarian, now and then to the Methodist, and I have known him to attend the Catholic Church."

A look of perplexity came to the face of the visitor. "Perhaps your husband is an agnostic," suggested she.

"Not at all," hastily answered the other; "he's a plumber. When there is nothing for him to do at one church, there is very likely something for him at one of the others."—Harper's Weekly.

A HEALING MINERAL SPRING
At Your Door

YOU CAN DRINK

three times a day from a spring more powerful than any known in Europe and America if you want to; you can drink glass after glass of healing, purifying, cleansing, curing, strengthening tonic waters; stronger, more powerful, more efficient than any the rich and great can get from the live, flowing springs and wells at Bath, Baden, Carlsbad, Saratoga, Mt. Clemons, French Lick, Hot Springs, White Sulphur Springs, or any of the well-known places where the rich get health and strength, and you need not step outside of your door to do it, need not call a doctor to prescribe it, need not put up a penny to get it.

IF YOU ARE SICK

and ailing, weak, debilitated, worn-out, feeble, if the organs of your body are not working rightly, in proper harmony, if your mind is not strong and clear because of bodily ill health, if your food does not feed you, if your sleep does not rest you, if your blood does not strengthen and sustain you, you can have the advantage of a mineral spring condensed and concentrated, every glass of which is equal to 53 glasses of the waters of the most powerful healing mineral spring of which man knows, every glassful of which will help set you right, make you hearty and whole, and you can have it brought, ready to your hand and lips, right to your chamber door.

VITÆ-ORE IS ALL THIS and will do all this. It is an Ore, a mineral, from a mine of medicine-bearing rock, that has been ground up and pulverized into a fine powder. You have only to mix the Ore with water (nothing else) to make the water that is all this, that will do all this, that will do it as surely as the sun rises every morning in the eastern sky and sets in the western. It is from the earth's veins, and was put there for the good of your veins, to give to your body those elements which in ill health are lacking, to make rich, red blood, to make health, strength, life and energy—what God intended that every man and woman should have.

YOU CAN HAVE A PACKAGE

of this Ore for the asking. It will not cost you one penny if it does not help you. If it does help you, you will then owe us One Dollar. If it does not help you, you will owe us nothing. You have but to ask for it, to say that you have never before used it, that you want and need it, and a package will be sent to you, enough to make 120 glasses of this all-powerful, all-pervading, all-reaching, all-curing, all-healing water. You are to judge it; you are to decide whether or not it has helped you, whether or not you should pay for it. You alone are to be the judge. Read our special offer.

YOU ARE TO BE THE JUDGE

WE WILL SEND to every subscriber and reader of this paper a full-sized $1.00 package of VITÆ-ORE, by mail, postpaid, sufficient for one month's treatment, to be paid for within one month's time after receipt, if the receiver can truthfully say that its use has done him or her more good than all the drugs and doses of quacks or good doctors or patent medicines he or she has ever used. Read this over again carefully, and understand that we ask our pay only when it has done you good, and not before. We take all the risk, you have nothing to lose. If it does not benefit you, you pay us nothing. We give you thirty days' time to try the medicine, thirty days to see the results before you pay us one cent, and you do not pay the one cent unless you do see the results.

A Certain and Never-Failing Cure for Rheumatism, Bright's Disease and Dropsy, Diabetes, LaGrippe, Blood Poisoning, Piles, Sores, Malarial Fevers, Nervous Prostration, Liver, Kidney and Bladder Troubles, Catarrh, Female Complaints, Stomach Disorders.

You are to be the judge! We know Vitae-Ore and are willing to take all the risk. Read what Vitae-Ore is. Write today!

What Vitæ-Ore is: VITÆ-ORE is a natural, hard, adamantine, rock-like substance—mineral—ore—mined from the ground like gold and silver in the neighborhood of a once powerful, but now extinct mineral spring. It requires twenty years for oxidation by exposure to the air, when it slacks down like lime and is then of medicinal value. It contains free iron, free sulphur and magnesium, three properties which are most essential for the retention of health in the human system, and one package (one ounce) of the ORE, when mixed with a quart of water, will equal in medicinal strength and curative value 800 gallons of the most powerful mineral water drunk fresh at the springs. It is a geological discovery, to which nothing is added and from which nothing is taken. It is the marvel of the century for curing such diseases, as thousands testify, and as no one answering this, writing for a package, will deny after using. VITÆ-ORE has cured more chronic, obstinate, pronounced incurable cases than any other known medicine and will reach such cases with a more rapid and powerful curative action than any medicine, combination of medicines, or doctor's prescription it is possible to procure.

VITÆ-ORE will do the same for you as it has done for hundreds of readers of this paper if you will give it a trial. Send for a $1.00 package at our risk. You have nothing to lose but the stamp to answer this advertisement. We want no one's money whom Vitæ-Ore cannot benefit. You are to be the judge! Can anything be more fair? What sensible person, no matter how prejudiced he or she may be, who desires a cure and is willing to pay for it, would hesitate to try Vitae-Ore on this liberal offer? One package is usually sufficient to cure ordinary cases; two or three for chronic, obstinate cases. We mean just what we say in this announcement, and will do just as we agree. Write today for a package at our risk and expense, giving your age and ailments, and mention this paper, so that we may know that you are entitled to this liberal offer Address

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

TAKING PUSSY'S PHOTOGRAPH.

My kitty purred as if she'd pose,
And so I dressed her in doll's clo'es,

And put her in my old high-chair.
She looked so sweet, a-sittin' there,

And stretchin' out her tiny claws,
And clappin' of her little paws,

And actin' nervous, just like folks,
While I made reassurin' jokes.

I just was goin' to press the ball,
When—pussy wasn't there at all.

And hours later, in the coal,
I found her watchin' a rat-hole.

Her pleasant expression was all gone,
Likewise the dress that she'd had on.

A Week with the Woodneys.

FIFTH NIGHT (CONTINUED).

The scene on the sidewalk before the Enderthorpes' was one of mingled humor and pathos—one might almost say, tragedy. There lay the white cock, his spurs forever at rest, his days of grass-scratching never to return. At his head stood the little musician in his faded blue shirt, his patched trowsers, his well-worn hat, playing ““The Devil's Dream” on his violin. Facing him was the muscular blacksmith, his head tilted back, his horn upon his lips, as if it contained some delicious nectar which its owner was quaffing. On the fence sat Mace and Ed as spectators. Across the street were the blacksmith-shop, the store and the school-house, all deserted. The little musician had seldom before been so humiliated and so miserable. It seemed to him he was desecrating his violin by playing that lively little air which he had learned, to his regret, at some county fair. As he drew his bow back and forth, his face drooped till the frayed hat-brim hid it from sight. There seemed to hover before him, like a spirit of the dying twilight, the beautiful lady who had been kind to him when he most needed kindness. He seemed to hear the voice of Anna Zuccarini bidding him be true to his art, for his sake and for hers. He had promised never to play anything unworthy of their friendship, but this hateful tune, running under his bow, was unworthy. How he despised it, and how he despised himself! It seemed to him he could never regain his self-respect, and look upon himself as one of the world's future composers of splendid music. How could he hope to produce anthems for cathedrals, and choruses, for convention halls—he who stood beside the dead cock playing a contra dance in the open air, like a beggar, indeed! He knew, too, that Mace Woodney was looking on with a sarcastic gleam in her great eyes—Mace Woodney who, until this night, had seemed so mild, so gentle, so unimportant. It was not for one like Arthur Lowell to analyze the change of feeling in his breast. Was it because her new clothes and her party manner had transformed her into some graceful fairy of his imaginative fancy, or was it because she scorned him for his secret of the morning? No matter why the charge, he now longed passionately for her good will, for her approbation, and bitterly he felt that this was forfeited. He felt, too, that it was not to be regained. What could he do to show her he was not the coward and unworthy guest she supposed? These are not the days when knights go forth to show their prowess with sword and spear. These are the days when one proves himself by years of patient waiting and of steady toil. An act may destroy our career; but what act can build it up? Thus as he played that sprightly tune, which repeats its measures with such impudent insistence, his heart was swelling with anguish—that anguish which youth feels more keenly than maturity, because it is given it to feel all emotions supremely.

Mace watched the slender form in its ragged attire as the head hung over the violin, and her lip curled. It is so easy to despise a sinner when he is poorly dressed! She thought, of course, that her just scorn for Arthur arose from his hiding the evidences of his deed, and keeping what he had done hidden in his breast like a guilty crime. All the same, had he been better dressed, and tall and handsome, like her cousin Ed, for instance, would she have felt such contempt?

Worth Acre in the meantime, his eyes penetrating the darkening blue of the heavens and his horn poised like a drinking-cup, was blowing manfully. He was unacquainted with "The Devil's Dream," but the swing of the tune is infectious. He caught the swing, but neither the air nor the key in which it was being played. The key, however, was never material to Worth. He could play only in three flats, and if the melody were in any other key, so much the worse for it. Being blessed by an ear absolutely deaf to harmony, the blacksmith blew with a will, and with great content. He soon learned from the swing of the tune where the measures were repeated. He felt his way through the mazes with cautious "toot!" "toot!" till he came to those passages; then, rejoicing in being on well-known ground, he executed the scale in three flats with amazing rapidity, giving the effect of a discharge of an entire package of fire-crackers. After this execution, he would pause, red in the face, but proud of his accomplishment, and listen for farther direction. Out of the storm of his cascade of notes, the thin, fine tones of the violin would emerge like a mouse squeaking in its escape from the claws of a cat.

Ed Woodney, his knees drawn up under his chin, watched this scene with a keen eye, and, after a while, slowly descended from the fence. "Yes," said Mace, "we'd better go back, for we told them we would come as soon as we got the mandolin-string."

But Ed did not answer her. He walked up behind the despairing little musician, and laid his hand on the hand that clutched the bow. The violin was poised without sound. Ed put his arm about Arthur's neck. "That's enough, old chap," he said gently; "Worth doesn't understand—that's all."

This unexpected interruption and the soothing kindness of the voice was more than Arthur could stand. The tears came to his eyes and he turned away his head. "I know he doesn't," he murmured.

The blacksmith, still staring into the sky, and poising his horn, waited in vain for leading. He looked down and examined Arthur attentively.

"Come on home with me, Arthur," said Ed, still keeping his arm about him, "I'd like for ma and Jennie to hear you play some real music. Won't you come?"

"Oh, I couldn't!" said Arthur, almost overpowered by the discovery that this splendid young man was the brother of the beautiful Jennie. "No, I couldn't! Look at my clothes—oh, but it is good of you to ask me!" He looked up and a smile transformed the delicate, pale face.

"You must come soon, anyway," said Ed, giving him a hearty pat on the shoulder and releasing him. "You have stood your punishment like a soldier, and none of us realized how great a punishment it was. We don't understand these things very well—do we, Worth?"

"I think maybe I have been into deeper water than I intended," said the blacksmith, tucking his cornet under his arm; "but it seems to me no lesson is too hard that teaches us to be frank and open. The world needs lives that never hide the truth. Wherever there's a secret, there's danger. My lad, we'll go back home, and for fear

From 1611 to 1901

For nearly 300 years the Bible was not re-translated. The language of the 1611 or "King James" edition had all these years remained unchanged, while the English language itself changed so much that at least twenty-five different dictionaries were necessary.

For these reasons

THE AMERICAN STANDARD
Revised

I've been a little strict, I'll bury the rooster, myself."

Mace and Ed left them. As they walked along, Mace was discontented both with herself and with Ed. Somehow he had seemed to put her in the wrong, where she had felt herself securely established upon a just seat of indignation. "I think you encouraged him!" she said suddenly. "Mr. Acre was right; if there is anything that ought to be punished, it's doing a thing in the dark and denying it by your silence."

"Couldn't you see his heart was breaking?" returned Ed.

She did not answer. They had almost reached G. C. D. Woodney's when she said, "There is something I must say to you, cousin Ed."

"By all means," he answered. "Have you something to confess? I promise not to be so hard on you as Worth was on poor Arthur."

She pretended not to hear him. "You want me to go into a music-club with you, and meet two or three times a week, from house to house?"

"Yes—won't it be great! There are three weeks before I have to go to Columbia, and three until your school opens—we can have fine fun, you know!"

"Yes, we could," said Mace seriously. "But, cousin Ed, I can not go into anything with a person who drinks."

"Well," said Ed, "I guess Bob Enderthorpe doesn't drink, and I know Worth doesn't. We'll find out about Arthur; and you and I complete the list. We are innocent, I'm sure!"

"No, we're not. I mean you are not. You confessed to me that you went to the saloon to drink; and I saw you go there."

"Oh, come, cousin Mace! I said I went there simply for a glass of beer. Beer isn't drinking. Why, beer is healthful! It makes people fat. Beer isn't any harm."

"But I can't belong to the club, cousin Ed, if you do that."

Ed frowned with annoyance. "This is so notionate!" he exclaimed. "Mace, you're not going to try to regulate my diet, I hope! I like you ever so much, you know, but you mustn't tell me everything I'm to do."

"You will, of course, do as you choose," said Mace coldly. They walked on, then Ed said irritably, "Mace, you have no right to interfere!"

"The only right I claim," said Mace, "is to regulate my own conduct. And my conduct will be to keep out of the music-club unless you promise me to quit drinking."

"Don't say 'drinking' in that cold-blooded, statistical manner. It's only beer, Mace."

"Only beer—for how long?' returned Mace. "You know what it leads to. I don't want to discuss that." They entered the wide yard and slowly walked up the granitoid way. Her face was hard and set, and as Ed watched it, his heart swelled rebelliously. It seemed to him that she was unnecessarily severe and too self-righteous. She was showing the same cruelty toward him that she had shown toward Arthur Lowell. He suddenly exclaimed, "Mace, I don't believe you care whether I promise or not!"

"Oh, cousin Ed!" cried Mace, turning toward him, her face suffused with color which the lamps from the hall revealed, her deep eyes eloquent with reproach, "how can you say that? I was just trying to keep from bothering you by showing how much I do care!"

Ed felt a sudden elation. "You'll never bother me by showing how much you care for me!" he cried. "I promise on the spot. There!"

"There!" cried Mace, grasping his hand warmly. They ran up on the porch, laughing like children.

Business Notes.

The Cradle Roll needs seeing after in a nice way and we have just the things you need for its successful prosecution. Order samples.

The large sale of "The Holy Spirit," by Garrison, seems nowhere near the end, judging by the orders for this week past; $1 per copy, postpaid.

Any book in the market will be supplied with pleasure, but to save time for you, give the name of publisher or author, or both, and the book will be sent you promptly.

Of the American Standard improvements there is no end, and now we have an excellent New Testament in divinity circuit, full leather, at 75 cents. It is one of the prettiest, handiest and most convenient books.

For devotional books, "Alone with God," "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," and "Heavenward Way," 75 cents each, or $2 the set, postpaid, have not been surpassed among any religious people.

From the standpoint of the good there is in it we are glad to see the increased demand for Cradle Roll and Home Department supplies, and from a business point of view, of course, we are glad of it.

For all our friends who order their holiday gift books before the "rush" we will put any name selected, in gilt, on front cover of any book selling at $1 or more; but to secure service, even now, you must give us time.

More than 800 Popular Hymns No. 2 have gone out this week, while the demand for other song books of like character has been good. If you are contemplating a new book of the cheaper kind, write us.

More than 100 of "The Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, have gone from our office this week, and the more you read after such men, the more will be the demand for such books. Twenty sermons at $1.00, handsomely bound.

Now that the forces are taking up their work after a pleasant vacation, do not forget the Home Department, so important and helpful, and do not forget that we have everything needful to make it a success. You can have all the samples by asking.

To the many new friends coming to us under the increased circulation of The Christian-Evangelist: Command us for any information about anything connected with any department of church work. Our 128 page catalog will be gladly sent you on application.

If our friends would only "take time by the forelock" and make their holiday selections now, you would have the choice, would have an abundance of time to insure their safe arrival and would "avoid the rush," which always means more or less miscarriage, lost packages and disappointments.

"Can you refer me to some good book for instruction on the church?" We can point to Munnell's "Care of All the Churches," cloth, 75 cents, or Milligan's "Scheme of Redemption," which every elder should have, every deacon should study, and every evangelist should teach, in order that our working forces may know more of what to do and how to do it. Milligan is $2.

One of our brethren in Texas has sold fifty copies of Johnson's "People's New Testament with Notes," and he is going right on with his canvass, for such a book is always in demand where persons want the teaching of the New Testament in a clear, pointed, concise style. Johnson's is without doubt the best New Testament commentary for the masses from any house, selling at $2 per volume, or $4 for the set, prepaid.

Do you wonder what number they are singing now, when you come into church a little tardy some Sunday? We have prepared a hymn register for all the hymns of any one service to be put before the congregation, so that without embarrassment any one can turn to the number and join in this delightful feature of the worship. Write us.

The little booklet used in drilling Juniors in Bible schools and Christian Endeavor societies by H. F. Davis in his work in Missouri is now ready, with an exact reproduction of the chart used in his work and we are putting it on the market at five cents each, or 50 cents per dozen, postpaid. Order one, and you will order more for drill work in your school and for interesting your societies.

For betterment in Bible-school organization, development and work, nothing on the market is superior to the Guide Book, selling at 25 cents, postpaid, while for the Endeavorers we have the Helping Hand, by the same author, and at the same price, postpaid. The former should be in the hands of all Bible-school officers and teachers, the latter in the hands of all Endeavorers, for whom, also, we have the "Junior Instructor," at 10 cents; the "Young People's Society at Work," 10 cents, and the "Ways of Working," 10 cents.

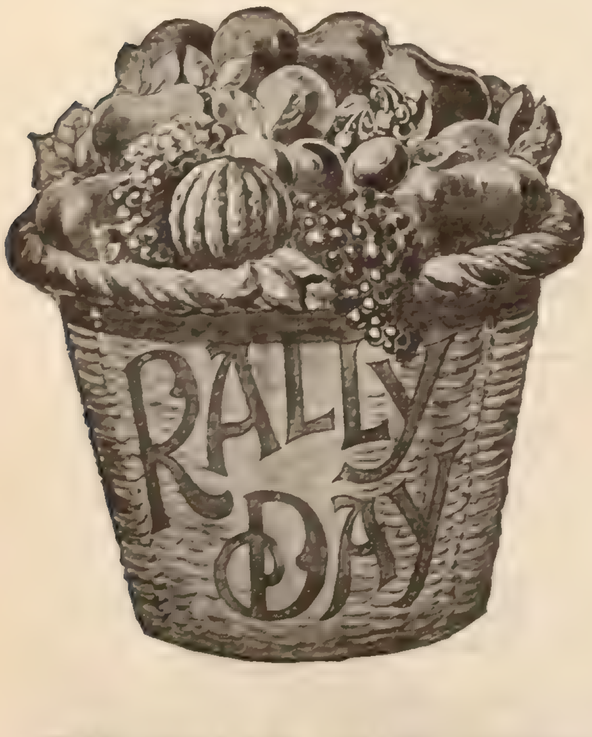
The fall season will see the organization of many Normal classes, and to all such we can heartily commend the Normal booklets, by W. W. Dowling, who, as a teacher of Bible school teachers, stands at the head. There are seven of these in a set, one on the Bible; another on the Christ; another on the Church; another on the Land; another on the Institutions; another on the History; another on the People, all of them first-class for Normal or Institute work and selling at 15 cents each, postpaid, or $1 00 for the set, postpaid.

"Going to Have It?" Sunday-School Rally.

Why not start the forces right and enthusiastically in the work this fall by a rousing Bible-School Rally? It is "up to you" to take advantage of such opportunities to quicken the school blood, to arouse parental interest and make ready for a good winter's campaign for Christ. Will you?

A Basket of Fruit

A farmer's basket filled to overflowing with fruits, such as pears, peaches, plums, grapes, and other autumn fruits, very appropriate for the harvest period, and in three colors, with assorted ribbons attached, at $1.50 per hundred, or at that rate in any quantity.



The Star

A very pretty design in the shape of a star, indicating "The Star of Hope," "The Star of Promise," and such like. Printed in three colors, with selections like "Gather together in one the children of God." It has a sheaf of wheat, oak tree, fruit, vegetables, etc., in each of the six points of the star; each star has a silk ribbon, assorted colors, for pinning to every person attending Rally Day. They sell at $1.50 per hundred, or at that rate. But our supply is very limited and when this is exhausted no more can be had for this season.

THE BURDEN OF THE TIDE.

FROM ocean's deep-voiced bosom, crest on crest,
  The vast full-freighted billows landward sweep,
And strew the seashore's unresisting breast
  With all the wondrous burdens of the deep.

Stately, erect, the great ships homeward ride,
  Weighed down with youth and age, with gold and grain;
Or storm-rent hulk tossed shoreward by the tide,
  Gives silent witness of the treacherous main.

Frail, feeble craft on breakers mountain high
  In safety ride and moor them on the shore;
Rare shells and seaweed in profusion lie,
  Like whispers from the sea's mysterious lore.

So on the shifting seashore of today,
  We stand and scan the ocean of the past;
Behold where stately conquerors ride the bay,
  Or note a shipwrecked life's slow-drifting mast.

The humble bark that speaks of modest worth,
  And seaweed bits from age-old mystery;
Yet naught there is the great waves cast to earth
  But bears its message for the eyes that see.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

How Not to Do It.

An admirable exhibition of how not to do it, is being made by the Republican party organization in preparation for the approaching municipal election in Indianapolis. The party has, in the first place, nominated for mayor a discredited politician whose record during his former administration should be a complete disqualification for further office. The campaign is an effort to perfect a corrupt political machine to be employed in other interests than those of the public. Its strongest feature is its appeal to the vicious and irresponsible classes. The attempt to organize the colored voters by clubs and members, so that the committee can keep tab on every voter, has been pushed to the point where the decent colored men are in revolt against it. The colored element is large in Indianapolis, and it includes a good many men who have acumen enough to see that the race can never get or deserve full political rights so long as its vote can be swung here and there by a corrupt politician of the right party and delivered by wholesale at the party call. A large independent negro vote would help the race immensely on the road to that political equality which it has as yet only theoretically achieved. And to see an attempt in broad daylight to march negro voters to the polls as a chain gang is marched in lock-step to the rock pile, is enough to give great encouragement to the independent vote.

Serving God and Mammon.

A beautiful opportunity came to the recent diocesan convention of the Episcopal Church in New York to put itself on record, in wholly unobjectionable terms, in favor of honesty in business, but it declined to do so. We have not an instant's doubt but that the gentlemen who composed the convention are individually in favor of honesty, but as a convention they did not like to say so. The following resolutions were presented, which are so admirable in style (they read almost like a section of the Book of Common Prayer), so temperate in substance and so free from offensive personalities, that we give them in full:

Whereas, The members of this convention are aware of the many difficulties and temptations which surround a business man's career and are sympathetically mindful of the apostle's affectionate and solemn warning against the haste to be rich, which often leads men into a snare and drowns souls in perdition;

Resolved, That the convention can not afford to pass unnoticed the revelations being made in the daily newspapers, beneath its eyes, of the tampering with trust funds by men in high positions of privilege and confidence in the business world, constituting a most discouraging evidence of moral laxity and bad example among those from whom the church and nation have a right to expect better things;

Resolved, That this convention proclaim anew that word of God which says: "It is required of a steward that he be found faithful";

Resolved, That no talent for high finance, no useful service to the community, no benefaction to the church or to objects of philanthropy, can excuse or atone for dereliction in trust, contempt for the rights of others, or disregard of the rules of common honesty;

Resolved, That commerce languishes in the degree and dies to the extent that men can not trust one another, and that this convention commends to the members of this church and their associates the exercise of that exact and scrupulous fidelity in business which is not only the foundation of prosperity in every community, but also a requirement for the favor and benediction of Almighty God, and which will be vindicated and rewarded surely in the due operation of his natural and visible laws.

The resolution, having been squelched by Bishop Potter, who was presiding, was lost for want of a seconder.

Protest Against Prohibition.

The German-American National Alliance is always strong on the subject of "personal liberty." In the session which is now meeting it has passed resolutions denouncing all "prohibitive and repressive temperance legislation," and going over the old arguments as to the impossibility of enforcing such laws, the demoralization resulting from the existence of unenforced laws, and the increase in the use of distilled liquors. The positive program of the Alliance was expressed in the following resolution:

We certainly abhor drunkenness and we are quite willing to lend a helping hand toward its prevention, but consider the efficacy of legislation to that end very limited. Progressing civilization and amelioration of economic conditions are the better means. We recommend, however:

1. The enactment and strict enforcement of a national pure food law as far as lies within the scope of national legislation.

2. Discrimination between distilled liquors and fermented beverages in license, excise and other fiscal laws, in favor of the latter, so that through their cheapness and popularity they will be more generally used in place of the others.

3. Reasonable regulation of the traffic in a manner which recognizes the social value of the saloon, and the effects of light drinks on sociality, and respects the views of the different parts of the people equally.

4. Strict and invariable enforcement of such regulations.

A resolution was also passed favoring the re-establishing of the army canteen, asserting that the doing away of the canteen, which was under official control and conducted in an orderly manner, had greatly increased the number of desertions and had proved to have a demoralizing effect upon the soldiers.

Some Comments.

With respect to the foregoing, it is perhaps pertinent to observe:

1. That the same argument which is applied against prohibition, that it cannot be enforced, may be applied against pure food laws. Such laws exist in many states. Enforcement of them is notoriously feeble and ineffective. If this condition could be remedied by making the pure food laws national in scope and putting the federal government back of them, as the resolution of the Alliance implies, might not a prohibitory law be better enforced if given national scope and federal backing?

2. If discrimination between alcoholic and nonalcoholic drinks in license and excise laws, in favor of the latter, does not greatly increase the consumption of the latter at the expense of the former, it does not seem quite certain that a recognition of the discrimination between distilled and fermented beverages in favor of the latter would solve the whole problem of getting people to quit drinking whisky.

3. The "social value of the saloon" lies not in the drinks which it dispenses. It has a social value, no doubt, but it is the most expensive club any man can join. If regulation must be based on a recognition of the "social value" of the saloon, it must also be based on recognition of the social burden of crime, vice and pauperism which the saloon imposes upon the community.

4. If our friends of the Alliance have any new plans for securing strict enforcement of laws, they should bring them forward so that they can be applied to the present laws. Otherwise the appeal, in this connection, for the enforcement of law, looks like an appeal for the relaxation of laws to the point where they will enforce themselves rather than for an increased efficiency in our judicial and administrative systems to the end that laws which ought to be enforced shall be enforced.

The Trials of an Emperor.

The love and respect for an old man is what is keeping Austria and Hungary from coming to blows. The situation is strained in the extreme and it is only the emperor's personal prestige that keeps the Dual Monarchy intact. It really looks as if even his personal popularity may not avail unless there be some concessions to the rightful demands of the Magyars. The natural unrest arising out of the relationships between two distinct races is increased by the spreading ideas of Socialism which are in the direction of universal suffrage and of course opposed to all the ideas of the "divine right of kings" which have hitherto prevailed. Everyone must feel a deep sympathy with the old emperor whose life has proven so tragic on its personal side, and whose problems do not lessen with his increasing years.

Another Peace Congress.

Nearly all the powers have accepted tentatively the invitations to attend the second Peace Conference, but a dispatch from The Hague states that the arrangements can hardly be completed before the end of next year. How much easier is it for the nations to delay in arranging for amity than in mobilizing their fighting forces!

Churchmen and Social Problems

The New York Diocesan Convention listened to addresses by Bishops Potter and Greer on two important subjects, but it cannot be said that the bishops answered the problems that were raised. Bishop Potter's theme was the observance of Sunday in rightful ways under modern conditions. Bishop Potter's laxity with regard to problems of drinking does not give us much encouragement to believe that he can successfully throw any helpful light on the Sunday problem, and he did not do so, so far as we have seen him reported. Bishop Greer discussed the inadequacy of the public school system, with its secular spirit, to give adequate training in ethics for present social needs, as recent revelations in the business world prove. The American bishops seem to pattern themselves very closely in many ways after their English brethren, who have made, within the last few years, desperate efforts to gain control of a large part of the educational system of England. One of the most bitter fights, out of which has come what is known as the "passive resistance," and which has led many Nonconformists to go to prison, and to the sale of their effects at public auction for conscience sake, has been induced by the effort of the English churchmen to force a national financial support for their denominational schools. The episcopate in this country can have no possible hope of bringing into effect such a condition here, but Bishop Greer's idea that for society's salvation the Church must again resume the task of supplementing the day schools' secularism with positive religious instruction, verges close on the Roman Catholic position.

The Cost of Insurance.

An elaborate article on insurance rates, by Prof. A. H. Willett, in the current "Political Science Quarterly," will be read with mingled pleasure and pain by every one who, like the writer, has a premium about due to one of the old companies. The author of this article makes no general denunciation, but conducts a careful argument to determine the cost of insurance. He concludes that, on the present mortality tables, and under the present methods of management, the premiums in most of the old-line companies could be reduced twenty or twenty-five per cent without endangering the stability of the companies. "But," he adds, "to bring insurance rates down to the present cost-level is only half enough. The cost itself ought to be lowered. It is demonstrable that some of the practices of insurance companies tend to increase their mortality loss, that a higher net rate of interest could be secured on their investments, and that the cost of administration is often extravagantly high. Improvement in any of these particulars would materially lower the cost of insurance, and make possible a further reduction in premium rates, resulting in a wider utilization of the benefits of insurance by people of small or moderate income."

A Remarkable Man.

General Booth is one of the wonders of this age. His welcome to London last month was one of the most remarkable tributes which that city has ever rendered to a human. The king himself took notice of the event, and ten thousand people gave a great demonstration in Albert Hall. It is indeed a different day from that on which William Booth started out with his blood-red banner and his tambourine lasses to turn the religious world upside down. While he has not converted everyone to his kind of a campaign he has won his way from contempt, and ridicule, and active opposition to be recognized as one of humanity's benefactors. General Booth is now 76 years old and is one of the most active men of the day. Through storm and sunshine, with only six really fine days, he has just made a tour of 2,250 miles in a motor car, delivering 95 addresses of one hour and twenty minutes each, besides many wayside speeches, and coming into the view of over four million people. Of course, there are some things about General Booth and his work that we do not like. For instance, his riding into the Albert Hall standing in his motor car and waving his hat in response to the uproarious enthusiasm of welcome, is purely spectacular. And his disregard of some features of the gospel message is perhaps no more striking than the negligence on the part of many Christian people who decry the particular methods of the Salvation Army. General Booth and his work have their weak sides, but as a humanitarian he has done a great work and set an example to the more respectable element in the churches who believe that religion consists in attending to certain forms and ceremonials, and leave out the heart of the gospel. Religion that is merely respectable will never win this world. If the Salvation Army had done nothing else than emphasize this fact, it would have justified its existence.

The Work and the Workers.

A writer in "The World's Work" disputes the common assertion that there are considerable numbers of unemployed men who are willing and able to work. The last census says that 6,500,000 persons who have, or have had, renumerative occupations were unemployed during part or all of the year 1900. This, on the surface, looks bad. But those six and a half millions include several classes of people who are not looking for work. They include the unemployed rich, the workers whose occupations by their nature do not continue through the year, the superannuated, those who are going to school for part of the year, and tramps who do not want work. The writer of the article narrates several experiments which have convinced him that, at least in prosperous times like these, the "army of the unemployed consists almost entirely of those who devote their best efforts to avoiding labor." But after all that does not solve the whole problem. A real social and economic problem is presented by the existence of a considerable group of men who are not willing to work. It is also a moral question. The society which produces these shirkers and deserters has some measure of responsibility for them. The social and economic order ought to furnish work for every man who wants it. Ought it not also to furnish every man with the stimulus and inspiration which will make him want to do his share in the world?

A New Era of Giving.

The announcement which will be found elsewhere, by G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, of the princely gift to Church Extension by Dr. Wm. G. Logan and wife, of Kansas City, will send a thrill of joy to the hearts of brethren everywhere. It is not simply the fact of the gift itself, though that means much to our homeless churches, but it is rather as a symptom and sign of the times that we hail it with joy.

This is the largest gift ever made to any of our missionary organizations. It would have been absolutely impossible a few years ago. We have been gradually approaching a condition that makes large gifts possible. We have only in recent years furnished channels large enough and strong enough to convey the outflowing streams of generosity to a needy world. We have now made it possible and safe for men of means to give large gifts for missions, for education, and for benevolence. This is a fact which needs to be more widely known and commented upon by both press and pulpit, for we take it that many among us are suffering spiritual impoverishment because they have not given of their abundance on a scale commensurate with their ability and responsibility.

One great gift inspires many others. It is especially significant that this large gift to Church Extension should be made by a citizen of Kansas City, where the Board of Church Extension is located, and by one who has intimate knowledge of the character of the men who constitute the Board and of their business methods. This fact is bound to inspire confidence in other capitalists who may wish to make a large investment of their means where it will be a source of perpetual benefit to mankind.

Moreover, a generous gift like this enlarges the ideas and stimulates the liberality of others. We give too sparingly, forgetting that he who sows sparingly shall reap sparingly, and that it is he who sows bountifully that shall reap bountifully. The example of Dr. Logan and his good wife ought to be contagious. We believe it will be.

The same motives which prompted this gift are at work in the hearts and minds of others, and we are inclined to regard this as the dawning of a new era of large giving for the extension of the kingdom of God among us. The solemn truth is that there must be a much larger number of such gifts than heretofore or we shall stand condemned in the eyes of the world, to say nothing of the eyes of God. We must give to save the world, and we must give to save ourselves from the curse and condemnation of covetousness.

Never did any cause offer better opportunities and make greater demands for liberal gifts than does our reformatory movement today. Its colleges, its missionary organizations and its benevolences are all in a condition to use wisely and safely and to the glory of God, large sums of money which may be committed to them, and we can not accomplish the great purpose of our being in the world as a religious movement without a larger liberality and a consecration of a much larger part of our means to the work which God has given us to do.

In view of all these considerations, therefore, we believe there is evidence of our having entered upon a new era of giving.

Is It Idolatry?

W. H. Hanna, of Laoag, Ilocos Norte, Luzon, P. I., referring to a statement in a sermon by Dr. Lyman Abbott, in which he characterized his boyhood conception of God, to whom he gave "a benign, fatherly countenance, long-bearded and white hair, and a body covered with flowing robes," as "idolatry," says: "In the early years of my ministry a brother preacher told me he had such an image of God in his mind when he prayed. I have been not only curious, but anxious, to know whether the above is idolatry, and I should like to have your opinion thereupon. I have wondered whether a profitable symposium could not be conducted upon the subject, 'The God to whom I Pray,' giving special attention to the matter of embodying the Heavenly Father, and the altered conceptions of God which study, reflection and experience have brought."

Our brother has suggested a very interesting subject for thought. Perhaps many of us have not stopped to formulate, in words at least, our idea of the God whom we worship. As to the crude idea which Dr. Abbott says he once entertained of God and which many children, no doubt, and perhaps some older people, have formed of the Infinite One, we would not call it idolatry. It is only an imperfect and very inadequate conception of God; but if this be idolatry then who of us can be sure that he is not an idolator, for all our ideas of God must fall short of the sublime reality? But it is not the mental image that is worshipped, but the Infinite Being whom our finite minds can not fully comprehend. There should be, however, a distinct effort on the part of Christians to spiritualize their conception of God. Perhaps it would be more strictly correct to say that we ought to Christianize our thought of the Heavenly Father. There have been many un-Christian ideas of God, which the church has outgrown. Jesus Christ is the only embodiment of the Heavenly Father, and all our knowledge of him is derived from our study of Jesus. He is the revelation of God, and in him we have the only true and worthy conception of the divine being. We fear this fact is not sufficiently understood or remembered. For this purpose Christ came into the world. "No man," said he, "knoweth the Father but the Son and he to whom the Son shall reveal him." Why, then, should we look in any other direction for our conception of the Father than to him who said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father"? "The Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," that is, the Father revealed by Jesus Christ, alone satisfies the deepest needs and the profoundest longings of the human heart. "In Christ God is good, holy, rich in all moral excellencies, free and fatherly in heart, abounding in love and helpfulness, and worthy forever to be loved, adored and trusted by all that he has made." Here the heart can rest, here it finds its peace and its perennial hope.

There can be no higher quest than the knowledge of God as revealed in Christ Jesus our Lord. We do well to direct our highest thought and our heart's purest affections toward this goal of all knowledge. "And this is life eternal, to know God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." To lead the trusting, seeking soul to a higher and deeper knowledge of Christ, who is the revelation of God, is the sublime mission of the Holy Spirit in the Church.

Present Work of the Holy Spirit.

> What truth has the Spirit, since the apostolic age, added to the truth contained in the New Testament? We challenge the world to the task of pointing out a solitary religious truth or principle bearing the imprint of the Holy Spirit, that is not contained in the Scriptures.—J. B. Briney in "Christian Weekly."

Our venerable brother, we fear, is chasing a phantom. He is challenging the world to do something which the work he is reviewing does not teach or affirm has ever been done. The trouble with our brother seems to be his inability to conceive of any work of the Holy Spirit in the present age except that of adding something new to the Holy Scriptures. If he could once get the idea that it is not truth in the New Testament, or in any book, that is going to save anybody, but truth in the human mind and heart, he might see a work for the Holy Spirit to accomplish in this age. Would he "challenge the world to the task of pointing out a solitary religious truth or principle bearing the imprint of the Holy Spirit" in the minds and hearts of people today that was not always, since the apostolic age, in the minds and hearts of the people? Certainly not! The end of revelation is not reached until the truth revealed has found its place within the hearts of men. It is as much the office of the Holy Spirit to bring this truth to bear upon the hearts and lives of men as it was to inspire holy men of old "to write the books of the Old and New Testaments. When this truth is once clearly grasped men will have no difficulty in recognizing the need of the perpetuity of the Spirit's presence and work in the church and in individual believers.

Have We Changed?

The following letter will serve as an introduction to what we desire to say in answer to the above question:

> During a recent conversation with an aged member of the Baptist Church I made the statement that I believed that the name "Baptist," and their position on the communion were the only vital points of difference between the Baptist and the Christian Churches. I tried to show him that in most essential matters these two religious bodies occupy substantially the same position.
> The older brother responded by this question, "Is it not true that the Christian Church is changing so that it is getting nearer the Baptist Church than it was some years ago?"
>
> It does not make any difference what I answered this brother, but I have been wondering since what I ought to have answered in order to have been perfectly truthful. What ought one to say when asked such a question? Perhaps a brief reply in The Christian-Evangelist might be helpful to others as well as to myself.
> Des Moines, Iowa. O. M. Pennock.

We ought to be the last people in the world to put in a claim that we have not changed, or to entertain the idea that we ought not to change. Growth involves continuous changes. The corn in the plant is very different from the full-grown corn in the ear, and there are many different stages between the young plant and the full-grown corn. And yet the germ of the full-grown ear is in the young plant, and needs only the proper conditions to develop into maturity. The life is the same, whether in germinating plant or matured fruit, but the life reaches its maturity through the process of changes.

Most certainly we have changed in this sense. We have certainly grown in numbers; in a clearer apprehension of our work in the world; in the knowledge of what is involved in the very nature and meaning of our Reformation; in organization for accomplishing these ends, and in the art of co-operation and of adjustment to our environment. All this involves a change of emphasis, a change of direction in our activities, more complex organization for the accomplishment of a greater variety of work, and that inevitable change of temper and spirit which would be brought about by these new duties and obligations, and by increased age and experience as a religious movement.

As the human body is continually changing, and yet is the same body, subject to the same laws of physical development, so a religious movement that has life and a mission in the world must necessarily change, but it remains the same body or movement, under the operation of the same laws of spiritual development. Our aim—the union of the people of God, and our method—the restoration of New Testament Christianity as the way to that end, and our basis of faith—the Christhood and divinity of Jesus of Nazareth, remain the same. There has been and can be no departure from these fundamental principles, though there has been and must continue to be a clearer apprehension of these principles and a better adjustment of our individual and church life to their requirements.

As to the inquiry of our Baptist brother about our "getting nearer the Baptist Church" than we formerly were, we should say it is evident that Baptists and Disciples of Christ are much nearer together than they formerly were, but this approximation to each other is the result of the approximation of each to the New Testament ideal of the church and to the mind of Christ. There are some, no doubt, in each body who have made little or no progress toward the divine ideals, and such remain as far apart now as they ever were. It is only as all Christians approach nearer Christ and nearer to his conception of the church, that they approach nearer to each other. We have now gotten far enough along, many of us, to co-operate together in many ways for common ends, and if this progress Christward continues it is only a question of time when our Lord's prayer for the perfect unity of his disciples will be fulfilled. Let us do what in us lies to hasten that day.

Notes and Comments.

In connection with the gift of Dr. Logan, announced elsewhere and commented on in our editorial, "A New Era of Giving," it is interesting to notice the gift of one of our preachers, David R. Pickens, of Tyler, Texas, whose recent gift of $10,000, supplementing a previous one of the same amount, makes $20,000 from this preacher—a gift as remarkable, in its way, as that of Dr. Logan and wife. It only corroborates our prophecy that we are in the dawn of an era of enlarged liberality which is to be marked by large gifts to our various enterprises.

The Religious Conference to be held at Urbana, Ill., on October 19, in connection with the installation of Dr. Edmond J. James as president of the institution, on "The Religious and Moral Education in State Universities," will discuss some topics of vital importance, and ought to prove very profitable. Prof. Shailer Matthews, of the University of Chicago, will preside, and among the speakers will be Professor Kelsey, of the University of Michigan; President King, of Oberlin College; President Bryan, of Indiana University; Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones and other men of note. We shall watch the result of this conference with interest, and shall give our readers a report of at least its leading ideas and conclusions.

Edgar D. Jones, one of our Cleveland pastors, after complimenting The Christian-Evangelist for issuing "the brightest and best convention number ever issued by any of our regious papers," adds the following fact which is not so gratifying: "During the progress of the convention I searched our Cleveland papers daily for some report of the hosts at San Francisco, but if a single item appeared I failed to find it. I was disappointed in this, since the Methodists a year ago at Los Angeles were accorded surprisingly full press dispatches." Perhaps one explanation of this fact is that we do not elect bishops, try heretics, or modify creeds at our national conventions, nor do other things that appeal to the sensationalism of the daily press, but the matter is well worth a little careful looking into to see whether or not proper pains are taken and plans made for conveying the news of such conventions to the daily press of the country. Perhaps there is an art here that we have not mastered.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair can do nothing less than lift its hat and make a profound bow of acknowledgment to its wide circle of readers for the numerous expressions of satisfaction and pleasure which they have derived from its perusal during the past summer. It appreciates this appreciation more than it dares to tell. Moreover, it is not less surprised than gratified at this universal expression of sentiment concerning its easy, offhand, unmethodical descriptions, reflections, homilies, and musings. Thousands of our readers have followed us during the summer, traveling with us in imagination out to the Pacific Coast, across the plains and deserts and mountain ranges; have shared with us our exhilaration and joy on the bosom of the mighty Pacific; have entered into the spirit and enthusiasm of our National Convention at San Francisco, admired with us the sublime mountain scenery along the way through the Sierras and the Rocky Mountains, and have returned with us to the cool and quiet retreat by the lakeside at Pentwater, and have even rested with us there as we walked through the still woods and along the resounding shore at Garrison Park. If in that way we have helped our readers to enjoy the summer's vacation, as they say, one of the objects of the Easy Chair, at least, has been accomplished.

St. Louis has one visitor that always brings with her royal gifts. It is the month of October! And not only to St. Louis, but to all the region roundabout October comes bringing clear skies, bright sunshine, cool, bracing atmosphere and a whole lapfull of summer products. The tardy vacationists who have lingered north for the autumn frosts come trooping home in the early days of October, and life—commercial, social, intellectual and religious—takes on a more intense form. Indeed, so many are the charms of the queenly month of October that those who have been away are almost persuaded on their return that St. Louis, after all, has the ideal climate! With all her other accomplishments, October is a rare artist. Already she has begun her work of decorating, and the trees and grasses and meadows are taking on their autumnal tints from her magic brush. The proud maple and the humble sumach are now flaming on the hillside and by the roadway, and later on the lordly oak and his congemers of the forest will don their robes of various hues, so as to keep in fashion. Welcome, bright, cheery October, whose mingled frosts and sunshine add new touches of beauty and grace even to the emerald robes of summer!

Speaking of October, it is also a revealing month in many ways, and this gives to it a soberer aspect. It not only tells what the summer has wrought in field and forest, in orchard and garden, but it is the beginning of a new fiscal year with our missionary organizations and with many of our business firms. In our religious work October brings the final summing up of figures which tells of success or failure in our plans and efforts to extend the kingdom of God. Our columns have already told the glad news of success attending all our missionary organizations the past year; some have attained the goal for which they were struggling and all have made a long stride forward. This is certainly gratifying to all who have shared in the fellowship of giving to these various organizations. It ought to be far otherwise to those who have stood aloof from the strenuous labors and anxieties of their brothers and sisters. Today brings us the final figures showing the result of our company's business for the past year and we, too, like our missionary organizations, with whose life and progress we are so thoroughly identified, can report substantial progress, as the year's business has gone considerably beyond anything in the previous history of the company. Our readers, we are sure, will rejoice with us, believing that our success means the larger success of the kingdom of God. When that ceases to be true, may the good Lord smite, with the mildew of his displeasure, the whole establishment!

We are entering upon a series of simultaneous evangelistic campaigns in a number of our larger cities. This is well. The cities are the strongholds of Satan, and they must be made the strongholds of righteousness. This will require a united and simultaneous movement on the part of our churches. In many cases it will require the united efforts of all evangelical Christians, regardless of our denominational divisions. The practicability of such union evangelistic meetings has now been demonstrated. The time is now here when our evangelists can take the lead in these union meetings, as they have done recently, with splendid results. That is what we have been urging for many years, as the logical result of our position as advocates of Christian union. Every union campaign against sin and unbelief is a convincing object-lesson of the value of union, and the folly of divisions that divide the people of God. Success to the simultaneous evangelistic campaigns, and may the union of the churches in these efforts be perfected by their union with Christ in a holy alliance against all the forces of evil!

To ride through Missouri on the rear end of an observation car on a glorious autumn day is to be impressed anew with the scenic attractiveness, material resources, increase of population, material development, and the imperial domain of the state. The Editor had been called to Kansas City to assist Bro. T. P. Haley in the formal opening of the completed basement of the new South Side Church on Linwood Boulevard and Forrest Avenue. It is always a delight to us to visit the brethren in Kansas City. The religious atmosphere among the churches called Christian in that city is charged with a good deal of electrical force. They are an aggressive lot of people, and they have learned the blessed art of pulling together. The occasion of last Lord's day was unusually interesting. The young church for which the veteran pastor, T. P. Haley, has been preaching for some time, had the courage and faith to undertake a great enterprise—the building of a splendid church edifice in one of the finest residence sections of the city. They have roofed over the basement and finished it up in most elegant style for an auditorium and will use it for all the purposes of the church until the structure is completed. It will be a fine stone building in modern style of architecture, costing from $50,000 to $75,000. A great and happy congregation gathered last Lord's day morning. In the afternoon at three o'clock there was a meeting of representatives of all the churches, and the pastors of the several churches occupied places on the platform. An appeal for funds to assist the brethren in paying their indebtedness resulted in pledges for over $5,100, which was regarded as very liberal in view of the amount which had already been given by the church. This congregation has a great future. In the evening we attended service at the Boulevard Christian Church of which Brother Combs is pastor, where Bro. Charles Reign Scoville is now conducting a great meeting, assisted by De Loss Smith as singer. We have no space to speak of the beautiful building, the great audience, the inspiring music, and the stirring sermon, resulting in fifteen additions that evening, making, with twelve in the morning, twenty-seven for the day, or nearly 150 during the meeting. On Monday morning we attended and briefly addressed the ministers' meeting. In the evening we attended and addressed the local Christian Endeavor Union of the city, leaving on the 10:45 train. It was a very busy, but delightful, visit in the rapidly growing city at the mouth of the Kaw.

Some Reasons for the Change of My

The address herewith printed was delivered at the Second Christian Church, Bloomington, Ill., on Lord's day, September 2, by Mr. Lyon, who was formerly a teacher in the Wesleyan University and more lately was pastor of the Laurel Methodist Episcopal Church in Springfield. Mr. Lyon formally on this occasion announced the fact of his change of church allegiance from Methodism to the Christian Church.

Were I to take a text, it should be John 17, for my main plea is for Christian union. I have nothing in my heart this evening but love for every man and woman of God, yes for all my fellowmen. I want to speak the truth in love as God has given it to all mankind. To be a Christian is to be a world citizen like the Christ who is our example; to be a world citizen like the great apostle Paul, who had a universal sweep of thought and love which knew no difference of faith.

What I have to say this evening is hardly a sermon. It is perhaps expected of me that I give at least a reason or two why I change. I have but one motive for changing, and that is, as the Father knows, my honest conviction as to the plain and simple teachings of the scripture, especially those of the New Testament. Much prayer, long and earnest study of God's word have so deepened my convictions that I can resist them no longer. I have counted the cost, the loss of friends, suspicion. There is now not one thing in sight. It is going from certainty as to position into uncertainty. It is passing from the greater in one way to the less. But all these things I count as nothing if only I can be truer to Christ's teachings and win more souls for his kingdom.

QUESTION OF BAPTISM.

Some of my friends know I have been slipping for years, fighting my way by inches, so to speak, for it is a difficult thing to give up old and cherished ideas—ideas around which the poetry of your early life lingers. If you never tried it you hardly know what it means.

But that which precipitated my action was finding myself decidedly out of harmony with the teachings of my church. Thus it was only fair and just to the church that I step out after I had fulfilled my obligations to the charge to which I had been appointed.

NOT A SUDDEN MOVE.

On the question of baptism I stood this year face to face with the authority of God or man. It had never before so vividly presented itself, for this was the first time I had the right to perform the act. Hitherto I had enjoyed the liberty of thought, which you know is in harmony with liberty to differ. Being dissatisfied with sprinkling in my youth, I was buried with my Lord in baptism at the age of 18. But now as an ordained minister I found liberty of thought in conflict with authority of opinion. I must carry out the decrees of the governing power. But God's voice rang in my ears, Rom. 14:23, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." According to this it would be a sin for me to do certain things required of me in which I had no faith, for I could not see that God sanctioned them in his word. I could not get away from that voice. I went to the old book as never before. In fact, I have practically been a man of one book this year. I could not find within the lids of scripture where pure water was sprinkled on any one for baptismal purposes. I found in John 3:5 where Christ tells how he was baptized. In explaining to Nicodemus what he meant by "being born again," he said, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God." Could language be plainer? He says, too, "I am the way." Then the devoted follower of Christ will surely go his way. Paul tells us in three places how he was baptized. Rom. 6:4, Rom. 6:5 and Col. 2:12. He says twice that he was buried with his Lord in baptism and the third time that he was planted with him. Now, what are the only possible ideas back of "born," "buried" and "planted"? Do you think children can err after they have learned the simple meaning of these words? It seems that the Holy Spirit is anxious to have us understand by his repetition and using such plain terms. Of course, we believe that these writers were inspired by the Holy Spirit. Even Peter tells how he was baptized by making baptism analogous to the flood enveloping the earth. (1 Peter 3:21.) Paul makes it emphatic in Eph. 4:5 that there is but one baptism; "one Lord, one faith and one baptism."

FORM IS IMPORTANT.

Then, again, of what is baptism a picture? Of the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus Christ. In other words, it is the Gospel appealing to the eye. The form of it then does matter. No other form will do this at all. In no other form are there a burial and a resurrection. We repeat it, then, the form does matter. Man has as much right to change the form of the Lord's supper as he has to change the form of baptism. One is just as sacred as the other. It is just as bad to jest about the one as the other. Christ was brought up under a multitude of institutions, but in instituting Christianity he left us only two sacred ordinances. He showed us by his own example just how he wanted them carried out. How can a man dare to change one of Christ's ordinances? We can not be reminded too often of Christ's great sacrificial love. Our only reminders are: 1. The Gospel preached to the ear. 2. The Gospel preached to the eye by immersion. 3. The Sabbath day changed to the Lord's day by Christ and the Holy Spirit. 4. The Lord's supper. Christ knew that we would need all these, or he would not have instituted them.

The form of baptism is largely a philological question. All of our standard Greek lexicons and best Greek professors translate baptizo "to dip, to plunge." It is not a question of interpretation, but of truthful translation. Even Wesley, Luther and Calvin all acknowledged that this is the meaning of the term. But John Calvin said the church, i. e., man had a right to change the form. But God says no, and then speaks of the penalties for adding to or taking from what is written in this book. Christ was right, the Holy Spirit was right, but John Calvin was wrong.

THE MAIN REASON.

What could I do with such an array of authority before me? I said, "Father, I will go thy way, let come what may."

I mention one more deciding influence. That which has had more to do with my decision than anything else is the plea for Christian union. From almost every denomination there comes up a cry pointing in this direction; especially does it come from far-off mission fields; but the Disciples of Christ are the only body of Christians who have this plea as their conscious purpose. A divided church is, to a large extent, helpless before united evil. What can division do with union? The sacred body of Christ, of his church, is dismembered, contrary to the divine commandment. The Holy Spirit must preside over the rent members of the body of Christ. No wonder so many voices from every quarter of the civilized world are pleading for some sort of union. These voices come from the pulpit, the press and the public platform.

[The speaker here cited the words of the noted Congregationalist minister, Dr. John Hunter, of Glasgow, Scotland, who has just written an epoch-making book entitled, "The Coming Church, a Plea for a Church Simply Christian"; and of Dr. S. Parks Cadman, of Brooklyn, who has been one of America's greatest Methodists.]

CHRIST'S WORDS ON UNITY.

But far above all the appeals that come to my ears and that which stirs my whole being to its depths, are the tender, pleading words of the blessed Christ just a little while before he went down into the midnight darkness of Gethsemane and Mount Calvary. It was on the eve of his betrayal. Listen to his precious words (John 17:20-22): "Father, I pray not for these alone, but for all them that believe on me through their word, even as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou didst send me. And the glory thou grantest me I have given them, that they may be one even as we are one." Six times in this, the second most touching prayer ever prayed, the loving Savior pleads for oneness of all of his followers. No doubt, he could look down the centuries and see their destructive divisions. Twice he gives as a reason for unity "that the world might believe that thou hast sent me." What does this mean? Could it mean anything else than that a divided church is a blow at the divinity of Christ? It is not so intended, but the fact nevertheless remains the same. Is it not evident from Jesus' words that he did not expect the world to believe in his divinity unless his followers should remain united? Nor did he expect the world to believe in the Father's love for them unless his disciples loved one another. When we consider that the most destructive attack on religion today is the subtle doubt of Christ's divinity, this question becomes a serious one.

IS IT POSSIBLE?

Some one may say that such an ideal is not possible. Then, was Christ a dreamer? He prayed that his followers might be one as he and his Father were one. Christ surely would not mock us. The church was one for some time after Christ's advent. It will be so again. God will answer his Son's prayer. "Nothing is impossible with God." The sublime faith of the Disciples of Christ during the past century will one day pass into sight.

The Holy Spirit is in perfect accord with Christ on this point when he speaks through Paul in 1 Cor. 1:10, "Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." Surely the Holy Spirit is not mocking us here with an unattainable ideal. There can be unity in essentials but liberty in nonessentials. Christ put very few things into his law of pardon and development. What would Paul say today if he should visit the United States and find one hundred and fifty-three or more violations of his divine command? What sort of a sermon would he preach were he here in this pulpit? Friends, can we pray for union and yet be a party? This is the question that has so stared me in the face.

THE DAY IS COMING.

But just now there is a somewhat hopeful outlook for a solution of this vexing question. The differences among the churches are coming to be looked upon as largely historical and not so real and important. The problems that produced the great rents of former times are becoming extinct. To a considerable extent a common spirit of worship and work pervades most denominations. We are coming in a degree to see how much alike we are and that denominational lines are no longer needed. Especially is this true on the mission fields. There it is compulsory. The tendencies now in the world's industrial and political activity are toward union. And of course unity is the great organizing principle of all intellectual activity. The spiritual is to be brought up abreast. A multitude of voices are asking how, how, how bring about this union and progress which will give the world a more full-orbed Christian character, one perhaps richer in types of doctrines and Christian qualities? It is clearly seen that the denominations need one another, need the strength of each assimilated into a common whole.

In what way can this goal be accomplished? It appears to me that the only feasible plan of union is for all the churches to answer in the pleadings of the Holy Spirit when he speaks through Paul that we "all must speak the same thing." Of course this can only be as creeds are laid aside and the Bible universally adopted as our only rule and guide of faith, especially that dispensation under which we as Christians are now living. It is hardly thinkable that the creed of any denomination would ever be universally adopted, but the precious words of our Father should appeal to every one as sufficient. I believe in improvement, but I do not believe in an improved Gospel. God who created such a perfect system of mathematics, of which man has found out a few things, who made such a wonderful system of science and philosophy, surely, surely has not given us a bunglesome system of revelation. No, in one thousand six hundred years he constructed a temple of truth and beauty, this old book, which has been the admired of the ages and which is so far above all creeds that there is no comparison. Majestically he has moved from types to anti-types, from facts to principles, and then from principles to their application until we have the greatest gift of heaven to man, with one exception, and that is Christ.

THE CHANGE OF CREEDS.

The old book never changes, but creeds crack to pieces by the onward march of thought. The old book with its divine spark seems to have an expansive power with the onward march of the centuries. It just fits the human mind in its development. God made man and knew just what would fit him. It harmonizes with the bedrock of principles of science. Even evolution in so far as it is an unfoldment of the principle of divine immanence is not out of harmony with God's sacred word. Does such a work where one spoke as never man spake, where the Holy Spirit reveals so plainly the plan of salvation and God's method

Our Own English Convention

By William Durban

Now for over twenty years it has been my privilege to attend the annual conference of the Christian Association of Great Britain. Is it not something for which any man might be profoundly grateful that nothing ever prevented attendance at these joyous occasions? The Semi-Jubilee of this Christian Asociation has just been celebrated by the gathering of delegates of our churches of Christ in the beautiful town of Cheltenham. It is now a quarter of a century since a little company of preachers and members of a few infant churches took a trip to a little place called Helsby, amongst the hills and woods of Cheshire. These founders of the new work hailed chiefly from Chester, Liverpool, Wigan and Southport. On a beautiful summer afternoon in a lovely spot the Christian Association was inaugurated. It began in sunshine under the canopy of heaven, and it has been visited ever since by abundant sunshine of heavenly favor. Of course twenty-five years have witnessed many changes, many developments, many losses, many gains.

THE QUEEN OF THE COTSWOLDS.

Most of the churches of this association are located in beautiful places. Southport, Southampton, Chester, Margate, Cheltenham, Gloucester, Ingleton, are charming towns, reckoned amongst the most attractive in England. Cheltenham is lapped in the fair scenes of the Cotswolds Hills. It is a great sanitarium, a favorite residential neighborhood for retired military, naval and official families, and is also the seat of splendid academical institutions. Its parks, public gardens, mineral waters, and exquisitely verdant surrounding highlands combine to make it a fashionable resort. Here is the church of Christ which was founded by H. S. Earl. Now H. S. Earl was one of the little Helsby pioneer band who cradled the Christian Association at the ecclesiastical picnic already referred to. Brethren W. T. Moore, J. M. Van Horne, J. H. Garrison, and others, will vividly recollect when that event happened, even though it was twenty-five years ago, for they are still alive and well, as is Brother Earl, though some have passed higher.

A MONUMENT TO H. S. EARL.

"Palmam qui meruit ferat!" That is a fine old classic motto. Let it apply here. I am now preaching occasionally at Southampton, where the pulpit is for the time vacant through the transfer of L. W. Morgan to Hornsey. Well, it must not be forgotten that H. S. Earl started the movement at Southampton. His efforts resulted in the formation of one of our most powerful churches. After a few years there he pioneered at Cheltenham, preaching to large audiences in the Corn Exchange. He was very popular in that town. The church now has a building of its own, and this is the scene of the faithful ministry of Brother Versey, who was a young student in Dr. W. T. Moore's missionry training class; went to Jamaica and labored for a time amongst the colored churches in that island; and since returning to England has ministered with steadfastness and success at Lancaster till he was requested to go to Cheltenham, where he succeeded T. H. Bates.

THE CONFERENCE PERSONNEL.

I always attend these conventions with mingled feelings. Joy predominates, but there is a note of sadness too. Always some faces are missing, not because of mere absenteeism from ordinary causes, but also because dear familiar friends are gone off to other lands, while others have departed this life. On this occasion we had to regret the departure for America of those esteemed workers whom I mentioned in my recent letters. The gaps are severely felt. We were cheered by the presence of some beloved missionaries in transitu. Miss Craven, though not belonging to our particular society, but to the London Missionary Society, delighted the assembly with an address on the wonderful island she knows so well. Bro. C. E. Randall was with us from Jamaica. I enjoyed some long talks with him, which made me more restless than ever to see the Caribbean Paradise. Intense interest was created by the address delivered by Bro. Alexander Paul, formerly a Hiram student, who has been some years in China, and is on the point of sailing for his far-off field again. It is disappointing that Professor Paul, who has been conducting at Hiram College the largest missionary class of students in the world, was to arrive at Liverpool on his way to China just a few days too late for the conference. I hope to see him as he passes through London. I wish that all our missionaries who come through England would arrange to see me. I am an enthusiastic friend of missionaries. (Let it be noted that these two Apostles Paul are not related to each other by any family connection.) We also had with us one whose name I specially wish to mention, as he purposes passing on to America, and will be heard of amongst the American churches. Lawson Campbell is just now in England. He is one of our young Australian preachers, wishing to see both Britain and America. He is highly commended by Brethren Gore, Ewers, and others, for the useful evangelistic work he has accomplished at the gold fields of Kalgoorlie and Coolgardie. His conversation, as well as his public talk, made an excellent impression.

CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

The president, E. H. Spring, chose as his subject, "The True Revival." The address was a somewhat combative one, dealing powerfully with the ecclesiastical demerits of the various popular sectarian organizations. We are accustomed to the full, flood "springtide" of protest, argument and denunciation of error, as well as to a trumpetblast proclamation of genuine Gospel truth whenever Brother Spring speaks. He is a splendid pulpit polemic, and is regarded with universal esteem for his utter fearlessness. I noted that his masterly address did not gain in the hands of the reporters of the local press, for they took care to put in the thorns without the roses. Reported in that style a masterly oration becomes quite a different thing. My own part at this conference was small. I gave an address on the Simple Life, showing that it is not the life of simpletons, and that simplicity and earnestness go together in genuine Christianity. A notable feature in the conference was a long and able paper on "The Modern Religious Movement in France," by Mlle. Schweighauser, our accomplished Alsatian Sister. The new president is Mark Wayne Williams, the minister at West London Tabernacle, who is becoming a power among us.

A SILVER WEDDING.

A most pleasing episode occurred. It fell to my lot to be asked by the ladies of the C. W. B. M. to present publicly to Mr. and Mrs. Joe Coop, of Southport, a silver kettle thus inscribed: "Presented to Mr. and Mrs. Joe Coop on the occasion of their silver wedding, Aug. 25, 1905, by friends assembled at the Semi-Jubilee Conference of the Christian Association held in Cheltenham, as a loving token of appreciation of their constant devotion to the interests of the churches of Christ." Never was a token of Christian love more profoundly deserved.

The Preacher and Church Management

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. POWER

How to manage a colt, how to manage a husband or wife, how to manage a church, are questions for which no definite rule can be given. The business side of the kingdom can not be ignored. Our Lord's first recorded words we have in his answer to Mary, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" Everything pertaining to the Father's house was his concern. Paul's declaration that beside those things that are without, "that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches," evidently refers to the ceaseless service of the true minister of Christ in all temporal as well as spiritual interests of the kingdom. "After ten years out of the seminary, what is your greatest need?" is a question some time ago put to twenty-five ministers. Eight answered, a better knowledge of the English Bible; eleven, deeper personal experience of God; but thirteen replied, more practical ability in preaching and pastoral work. All agreed in desiring more spiritual gifts and more practical ability, and the inference would be that the theological seminaries and Bible colleges do not equip students in these two respects for the work demanded of ministers of the gospel.

The preacher must be a practical man—a man of affairs. He is not "a business man," in the ordinary sense. His name to a mining, oil or lumber scheme as a promoter is and ought to be evidence enough that one is not safe in putting his money in such stocks. He is not the man to follow in conducting coffee plantations in South America, or silver mines in the planet Mars. His line is always a safe one, and when he sticks strictly to business—his business—you may have confidence in the outcome and are both safe and sane in making the largest possible investment in his enterprise. The successful preacher is a manager, and should be trained in the skill of management.

First of all, a church should be organized. We are workers together. Politics are organized, business is organized, labor is organized, religion must be organized. The church of Christ is the highest, most perfect form of organization. The individual congregation must be organized. The Sunday school, the young people, the charities, the music, the worship, the devotional meetings, the missionary activities, the social life, the reformatory work, the personal service, must be organized; and men and women and children must be trained to develop the vastly increased power which is found in singing and praying, studying, worshipping, giving and evangelizing together. The pastor is the ordained leader. He must organize, manage, direct. Like a great manufacturing establishment, like a great department store, the various lines of service must be fixed and those that serve appointed to the several places, taught, trained, set to their tasks, stirred, made responsible, called into co-operation. All the members of the church are in a sense deacons—ministers in the service of God. Primarily this was the office of those who looked after the secular affairs of the church, received and disbursed moneys, kept the church's accounts, dispensed its bounty to the poor, and provided everything necessary to its temporal good. The bishop or elder was supposed to care for the souls, the deacons for the bodies, of the Lord's people; but even with this distinction the preacher must of necessity be the chief deacon, the cardinal deacon, the minister.

In the exerise of this function the preacher is not to lord it over God's heritage, nor is he to bear more than his part of the responsibilities and labors of the church. Management signifies administration, superintendence. It is the use of manus, the hand, in the original meaning, as in the management of a house, or the management of an engine. The great work of the ministry is to train and develop the church so as to make it an organized force in advancing the reign of Jesus Christ among men. It will not do for the pastor to say he has no gift for organization. He must have it. He is in line of succession to men who were instructed and trained to fish with nets and to arrange companies of thousands into orderly groups and feed them. He is not to construct a machine after his own designs and run it with his own motive power, developing on his own part self-will and self-sufficiency, and on the part of the people criticism, idleness and irresponsibleness, but is to lead, and preacher and people must be in co-operation.

First, then, he must know the field and the forces. We would have fewer failures in the ministry if the preacher would study folks more and books less. The greatest of preachers and shepherds said of himself: "He calleth his sheep by name and leadeth them forth." Every man, woman and child the pastor should not only know by name, but, knowing their gifts, their needs, their adaptations, he should place them, use them, lead them forth in the fields of service and pastures of plenty that are suited to them. The preacher who prays and plans will never lack for people saying: "Here am I; send me." I said to Russell Conwell, after listening to his story in the Temple: "How do you do it? What is the secret?" He said: "I don't know." So far as the human side goes, one word expresses it—management. Neither Oberlin nor Felix Neff is credited with a great sermon, yet such a man lives in the hearts of the people and does more for their spiritual welfare than men of the most splendid talents and commanding eloquence. Know the people. Christ we preach, warning every man and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus.

Secondly, study details. "Watch thou in all things; do the work of an evangelist," is a good bit of counsel. "Make full proof of thy ministry." There are "diversities of gifts," and there are "differences of administration." The preacher must be in close touch with all the departments of the church work, and his influence must be felt for good in all the ordering of his religious household, as that of a father in his family. I know preachers who never attend the meetings of their church boards, who are not seen in the executive committee of the Sunday school, who do not think it necessary to be with their young people in their committee work, who never look in upon the choir or the sessions of the women, who imagine they have nothing to do with heating and ventilation, or the larger problems of parish ways and means, who leave the missionary matters and benevolences to others, and ignore all "temporalities" and housekeeping arrangements as foreign to their functions, and rather glory in the allegation—"the preacher knows nothing about business." The fact is the whole organization, spiritual and secular, is under his oversight and he should familiarize himself with all the details of church management. One of our Washington churches had a most outrageous misappropriation of funds. Thousands of dollars were squandered through a trusted treasurer. The custom was for the sexton to toss the offerings into a bag, and hand them to this individual and the custom of the trusted individual was to blow them out at the races. They put him in the penitentiary. When one of their leading men told me the story I asked: "How many of you do you think should have been locked up with him?" The pastor of that church soon had to seek another field of labor.

Finally, manage without the appearance of management. The preacher is in no sense a boss, a dictator. Because he is supposed to be wise and just, true to the teaching and spirit of Christ, and loyal and devoted to the interests of the church, the people give heed to his counsels and fall in with his plans. It will not require many months, or even days, of service on the part of a pastor to convince his people that he is unselfishly seeking their highest good; and when once satisfied on this score they will believe in and listen to him. The sheep know the voice of the true shepherd and they follow him, "when he putteth forth his own sheep he goeth before them." Watching, feeding, guarding, teaching, knowing their number, names, nature, weakness, wants and dangers, and dying if need be for them, the sheep implicitly trust his leadership. Let the preacher ever remember he is the servant of the people. "Who then is Paul and who is Apollos but ministers by whom ye believed?" The province of government is to subserve the wishes and interests of the people. The best government is that which takes in the consent of the greatest number of the governed. The common mind is the material of the commonwealth and the masses are the majesties. Solon among the Greek sages was of opinion that truest government was that in which the collective body of the citizens have a part, and Lincoln talked of government of the people, by the people and for the people. This is instructive—

"So work the honey bees,
Creatures, that by a rule in nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king, and officers of sorts,
Where some like magistrates correct at home;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad;
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds,
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent royal of their emperor,
Who, buried in his tent, surveys
The singing mason building roofs of gold;
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burthens at his narrow gate;
The sad eyed justice with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone."

Church government embodies the same idea that nature teaches, the idea for which Tell and Hampden and Washington fought, the idea of a society under the law of Christ the head and with the larger liberty of the Gospel of Christ. "We are one body in Christ and every one members one of another." The preacher after all is simply a member of the body, charged with certain functions, as the eye or the foot or the hand, and in harmony with the laws that govern the body and in accord with all the members of the body he is to fulfill his office. Let him learn to manage himself and the duties of his high calling, and he will have no difficulty in church management.

Universal Mistakes in Exegesis

By I. B. Grubbs

There are some passages and expressions of scripture that are misunderstood and misapplied universally almost, if not altogether. We instance here 2 Cor. 5:7, and may call atteniton to others hereafter.

In the verse referred to occurs the statement, "We walk by faith, not by sight." This is constantly quoted as teaching the contrast between the principle that regulates the course of the Christian, and that which regulates the course of the unconverted. It is represented as setting forth walking by faith as a higher principle, in contrast with walking by sense, or the sight of temporal things.

I have in mind a good sermon by an able preacher, which is based upon this understanding of the statement in hand.

The only trouble about the sermon is that it does not fit the text. The sermon would have admirably harmonized with a verse a little further back. "We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. 4:18). Now, as by faith we look at the unseen, according to Heb. 11:1, it is clear that faith is implied in the passage just quoted as a higher principle standing in contrast with the sight of things temporal as a lower principle. But this is not the contrast in the statement, "We walk by faith, not by sight."

Here, unquestionably, faith is the lower, and sight the higher, principle, according to the context. It is not the sight of the temporal or worldly that is here referred to, but the sight of the glorious and the heavenly. Note the verse that immediately precedes, and the one that immediately follows, and see how they both stand connected with the statement in hand.

The passage reads, "Therefore we are always of good courage, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord (for we walk by faith, not by sight)—we are of good courage, I say, and are willing rather, to be absent from the body and at home with the Lord." Clearly the meaning is that whilst we are at home in the body, and absent from the Lord, we are simply walking by faith in him, and not by the sight of him and of the glory of his presence.

With Paul, we would rather be at home with the Lord, and walking by the glorious sight of his person and majesty, than simply to be walking by faith in him while sojourning here in the body in our absence from him. According to the contrast, then, in this passage, sight is the higher, and faith the lower, of the two principles contrasted.

"GOLD GOLD"

"Good," He Says, "But Comfort Better."

"Food that fits is better than a gold mine," says a grateful man.

"Before I commenced to use Grape-Nuts food no man on earth ever had a worse infliction from catarrh of the stomach than I had for years.

"I could eat nothing but the very lightest food and even that gave me great distress.

"I went through the catalogue of prepared foods but found them all (except Grape-Nuts) more or less indigestible, generating gas in the stomach, (which in turn produced headache and various other pains and aches) and otherwise unavailable for my use.

"Grape-Nuts food I have found easily digested and assimilated, and it has renewed my health and vigor and made me a well man again. The catarrh of the stomach has disappeared entirely with all its attendant ills, thanks to Grape-Nuts, which now is my almost sole food. I want no other." (CONTINUED FROM PAGE 1321.)

of development, does such a work divinely gotten up need one hundred and fifty-three or more systematizations of it? Do these creeds make it plainer or do they confuse us? God wanted his people to understand him. Hence he talked very simply to them, using the plainest language and figures. We get into the woods by going into theology. No creed short of this one given by God himself can be authoritative and binding on men. Of course Christ is the creed of the church, but the Bible is the best expression of him. To a divine command men will submit, but not to a changing opinion about a divine command.

CHURCHES MUST ACT.

Let the churches but submit to the authority and spirit of Christ, and union will soon be a reality. Let Christ's way be the only way, and not be seeking after a more convenient way. If we have the spirit of Christ we have his mind, we do things his way, obey his commands his way, and have his love for one another as he has loved us. Think you not that this would bring about union? Such a spirit would inculcate a spirit of prayer, a spirit of freedom, yes, even a spirit of sacrifice. The law of sacrifice is the law of self-realization. Do you see Christ there in Gethsemane sweating, as it were, great drops of blood? Do you see him on the road to Calvary carrying that great heavy cross? Look at him on the cross sacrificing even his life. Friends, when we have such a spirit, unity will not be wanting. Paul gave up his doctrines, his position, his all, for Christ and preached unity, as did Christ all his life. Father, we will all do so when we get as much in earnest as Paul was and love our fellow man as Paul did.

What little I may know, what meager powers of speech and energy I may have, I want ever to use for God's glory, for the furtherance of this great plea and for helping my fellow man into the light of the Gospel.

As Becometh Christians.

By Hugh Wayt.

As a religious people we claim to accept the holy scriptures without any additions, subtractions or modifications. Is it really true? There is progress in the revelation of the perfect plan of salvation. Moses was the mediator of a good covenant. Christ is the mediator of a better covenant (Heb. 8:6). Under the Mosaic code, the people were required to give one-tenth. If it required one-tenth to be a Jew, and revelation is progressive, does it not require more than one-tenth to be a Christian? Can any people claim to be orthodox who give less? The poor widow cast in all the living she had. If it had been wrong Jesus would not have commended her. Out of our abundance we cast into the treasury of the Lord, but do we give as becometh Christians?

Current Religious Thought.

Referring to the subway tavern of Bishop Potter, the Cedar Rapids (Iowa) "Republican" says:

> A prayer and a benediction and the singing of the doxology do not change the nature of the ingredient which biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder. A prayer will not take the delirium tremens out of the 'steenth bottle of whiskey. It will not take the bloat, the puffiness and the coarseness out of kegs of beer. No one but Bishop Potter was so deceived. Every one else seems to have known better than he. He has now learned what the rest of the people knew all the time, that a saloon is a saloon whether it is in the gilded subway of New York or the Bowery. The devil is right there on hand, and there is no use in trying to substitute Christ in his place. Not even a bishop with his consecration can do that.

Is this Christianity? is the question implied in the following editorial in "The Columbia Herald."

> Two preachers called on "The Herald" one day last week. This is not unusual, for preachers often do that. But the little incident following this call was unusual. One of them asked for a copy of an exchange, and while it was being looked up for him, he attached two stickers containing Bible texts to the front of a large and very expensive map of Boone County.
> The stickers were very nice, but if they had not been discovered and removed before the gum dried, the map would have been ruined. If the course of Christianity is to be helped by such methods, why not carry it a step further? Let the sticker-preacher make a sandwich man of himself and parade the streets with appropriate texts decorating his shirt front.

Rev. Dr. John E. White, D. D., has been made a "bigger Baptist" by attending the Baptist World Congress in London. He explains it thus in "The Baptist Argus":

> The little Baptist carries a little yardstick. I used to have one. I went up to John Bunyan and measured him and said, "A splendid hero, but a poor Baptist." I went up to Chas. H. Spurgeon and took his measure and said, "A great preacher, but a poor Baptist."
>
> I blacklisted the whole tribe of English Baptists and put them out. That was the way I expressed my own simon pure orthodoxy. It is the heroism of the little Baptist to straighten up his brethren by knocking them out. He preaches obedience to Christ with his fists or with his yardstick. Now if I am a bigger Baptist I will not do that way any more.

One of the addresses at the Baptist World Congress was on John Bunyan, as the "Baptist faith incarnate," by Dr. John Clifford. The following paragraph sets forth the essential points of faith thus incarnated:

> Although we Baptists do not agree with all that Bunyan taught, we stand firmly by these essentials: (1) The primary place he assigns to personal and individual experience of God, of his grace, of his love and power in all things appertaining to the religious life; (2) the necessity for a "regenerate" church membership, or what Bunyan calls "a converted state," of a serious quest for the deepest and highest things of the soul and of God; (3) and the out-and-out repudiation of all ceremonialism as religion, or as having any vital connection with religion. We refuse to yield an inch to the authority of the priest, the tyranny of a hierarchy and the substitution of symbols and ritual for faith and love, for doing justly, loving mercy and walking humbly with God. Here on this green we declare our faith, renew our covenant and offer ourselves anew to our redeeming Lord.

FITS MANY

To Leave Off Coffee and Use Postum.

Postum Coffee shows its great nourishing power in many ways.

"I was nursing my baby six months ago," writes a young matron, "and I found that tea and coffee did not agree with me. I grew nervous and weak, my appetite was not good, and besides, baby was cross and fretful. He didn't seem to get proper nourishment from my milk, and friends said: 'You must wean him, he is starving.'

"I gave up tea and coffee and tried cocoa, chocolate and milk instead, but still baby didn't seem to thrive. At last, on the advice of a friend, I began to use Postum Coffee, and I can truly say that the effect was wonderful! Both baby and I began to improve in appetite, spirits and flesh immediately. In three months my boy weighed 20 pounds and he is as good a baby as a mother could wish to have. My drinking Postum did it.

"I cannot recommend Postum Food Coffee too highly to nursing mothers. It is better in flavor than the other coffee and is far superior in nutritive qualities, supplying just what the child must have, as no other food can do." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason—explained in the quaint little book, "The Road to Wellville," in each pkg.

Our Budget.

—We have just received the following telegram from Benj. L. Smith: "Add $1.000 to our last year's receipts." This will give great joy to the brotherhood all over the country. It means that the American Christian Missionary Society has more than reached the $100.000 mark. The actual figures are $100.323.03. The Foreign Society received $255.023; the Board of Church Extension, $90.055, and we report this week the Christian Woman's receipts, which are $175.450. When the state missions and the miscellaneous and the gifts for education and benevolence are reported we shall have had the greatest year in our history from the standpoint of gifts.

—Saratoga, Cal., has called Frank E. Boren.

—A new church will soon be completed at Era, Tex.

—J. W. Towry has removed to his new field at Goodland, Kan.

—Geo. A. Campbell will remain with the Austin Church, Chicago.

—The church at Lyons, O., is now ministered unto by Nicholas Zulch.

—W. H. Fields has taken charge of the First Church at Wheeling, W. Va.

—C. O. Burton will relinquish his pastorate at Roachdale, Ind., in December.

—Joel Brown is in a promising meeting with L. H. Humphreys at Longmont, Col.

—R. A. Omer has begun a meeting for E. T. McFarland, of the Fourth Church, St. Louis.

—Clarence E. Wagner has accepted a call to remain with the church at Shelbyville, Mo., a third year.

—Clark Braden will begin a series of lectures on Mormonism at our church in Seiling, Okla., Oct. 13.

—The brethren at Mexico, Mo., hope to dedicate their new $30,000 house of worship early in December.

—The new building of the Whitney Avenue Church, Kimmel Hall, Wash., is to be completed at an early date.

—The work at Prescott, Ia., will now be in charge of E. E. Mack, who has for two years been at Algonac, Mich.

—Prof. Clinton Lockhart will soon issue from the press a new book, "The Messianic Message of the Old Testament."

—Our church at Connersville, Ind., will be dedicated next Lord's day. It is one of the best church edifices in the state.

—J. K. Hester, who found the altitude at Cripple Creek too high for his family, has gone to revive the work at Sterling, Col., where a good lot has been purchased.

—A debt of over $1,100 at Athens, Tex., has just been liquidated, and W. O. Stephens reports that the congregation is happy.

—Frank Shane, of Camargo, Ill., has closed his work and is now in the field for evangelistic work. He should be addressed at Mason, Ill.

—At the late district convention held with the church at Bearden, Tenn., I. A. Myhr, state secretary, made an encouraging report of progress.

—Dexter Christian College can provide work in the buildings for several young men who will in this way pay their tuition while attending college.

—W. E. Rambo and wife will not return to India, having tendered their resignations. They have placed their two oldest boys, Philip and Victor, at the American University, Harriman, Tenn.

—Clarence Mitchell writes that the new church at Mannington, W. Va., will be dedicated October 15, by President Cramblet, of Bethany.

—In another column we publish a notice of the meeting held by S. J. Vance, of Eldon, Mo., who has done a good work for the congregation at Eugene. Under the wise counsel of their pastor, Brother Burks, and an efficient officiary, a house of worship must now be undertaken, as there is no church building of any sort in the town and no congregation of any consequence except our own. Brother Vance, we understand, is going to give some time to evangelizing this fall.

S. J. VANCE.

—George A. Farley reports that the brethren at Muskogee, I. T., hope to begin building in the near future. There are frequent additions to the membership.

—The dedication of the new church at Bethany, Ill., will take place on Lord's day next, when J. Fred Jones, the state evangelist, will have charge of the services.

—Washington Christian College is enjoying its best session. An able class of students is gathered there for college work and the benefits of the national capital.

—R. W. Clymer has resigned at the First Church, Scranton, Pa., where he has served for several years, during which period the missionary offerings have been multiplied tenfold.

—The Indiana Christian Sunday School Association, which will be held at Greenfield, October 17-19, will carry out an admirable program. The Editor is hoping to be present.

—J. T. H. Stewart was badly hurt the other day by a runaway horse, and the meeting in which he was engaged at De Soto, Mo., was prematurely closed at the end of two weeks.

—W. W. Burks was presented with a handsome gold watch by his church at Mason City, and Sister Burks was also remembered prior to their departure for their new field at Nevada, Mo.

—J. E. DeGafferelley, the efficient minister at Sandoval, Ill., and Miss Martha Ruddick, a worker in our church there, were married on September 28, J. F. Rosborough, of Centralia, officiating.

—We have received copies of testimonials about the excellent character and the work of H. A. Davis, who has just resigned from the pastorate at Sullivan, Ill., after two and a half years of service.

—W. F. Flower is doing pioneer work in Indian Territory where in many towns one of our preachers has never been heard. He goes to a new town and preaches until he organizes a congregation and then builds them a house. T. W. Cottingham says he would be a splendid evangelist for some living link church or individual.

—Our church at Grant City raised $1.200 on local debts last Lord's day. The brethren are going to clear off all incumbrances and have a clear field to aid all missionary enterprises. W. L. Harris is the pastor.

—"The West Virginia Christian" has passed into the control of Brethren B. E. Haynes and Orilas G. White. The former is engaged in the real estate business at Parkersburg, W. Va., and the latter is pastor of our church at Huntington, W. Va.

—The convention of Christian, Macoupin and Montgomery counties will be held at Litchfield, Ill., October 30, 31, and an excellent program has been arranged for it. The church at Litchfield will entertain. M. S. Johnson is chairman of the committee.

—W. H. Hedges, who has been supplying at Bellefontaine, O., since W. T. Groom left, will begin his work with the Lindenwall Church, at Hamilton, O., next Lord's day, and on the same date LeRoy Brown, of Connersville, Ind., will take up the work at Bellefontaine.

—We regret to learn that R. S. Smedley, after five years of field work in western Oklahoma, has resigned. Brother Smedley has done such efficient work and has served our cause so nobly in this teritory that it will be very difficult to find a man to take his place. He would like to preach one-quarter or one-half time for churches within one hundred miles of Geary, on the main line of the Choctaw, Northern, or Rock Island Railroad. Address him at Geary.

—"I want to congratulate you on the Convention Number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I dare say no paper ever issued such a full and complete report of any of our conventions in the past. Our entire brotherhood owe you a rising vote of thanks. WALTER M. WHITE."

San Francisco, Cal.

A rising vote is what THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST likes. The brethren will now please rise, and while on their feet advance on the enemy—"the world, the flesh and the devil." Forward, march!

—A note from S. M. Conner, Burlington, Ind., says: "My wife went home Sunday, October 1. She had been an invalid for years and a great sufferer most of that time." Gone home! That is the beautiful, scriptural way of thinking and speaking of death. Our invalid sister has gone home to be free from pain and affliction forever. Our sympathies are extended to our bereaved brother in his loneliness, and our congratulations to her who has passed through death into the larger and the more glorious life.

—The Missouri Ministerial Education Society is now the successor to The Students' Aid Fund. It has been incorporated, and its acting officers are: President, J. B. Jones, secretary, W. J. Lhamon, and treasurer, A. W. Kokendoffer. The officers are solicitous for the payment of pledges made at Columbia two years ago, and for new contributions looking toward the enlargement of the cause of aiding worthy young men toward a ministerial education. Let the prayerful brotherhood rally to this work.

—In a personal letter from W. J. Lhamon, dean of the Missouri Bible College at Columbia, he says: "Our work opens very well. We are going to have a number of good classes. I had 250 last Sunday morning. About forty in the Normal Academy have signed up for work. Between twenty and thirty are coming for Evidences, nearly as many for Literature of the Bible. Professor Sharpe has some good classes in his department. We have some excellent ministerial students, and the future looks bright. You will be pleased to know the committee of deans of the university has reported favorably in reference to the granting of certain credits. They appointed a committee of two to draft the matter for final presentation to the Board of Curators. We have every hope of the concession. Final favorable action will immensely help our work. Our building is nearly full, and we have a fine lot of boys in it."

—Audrain county, Mo., reports one of the best county meetings in the twenty-five years' history of its organization. It was held at the Macedonia Church. One hundred and ninety dollars were raised in cash and pledges to help the weaker churches. The preacher helpers were: R. D. Chinn, W. H. Hook, W. H. Kern, J. M. Blalock, J. D. Greer, E. M. Smith, W. B. Taylor, J. H. Wright, A. W. Kokendoffer and L. H. Harbord. Thirteen churches of the county were represented, and most of these pledged to take the offering for state work.

—Our congregation at Peru, Ind., celebrated its twelfth anniversary on October 1. While it was a day of rejoicing there was also an element of sorrow in it, inasmuch as it was the occasion of the farewell sermon of the pastor, J. L. Thompson, and in the afternoon the funeral of the youngest daughter of "Grandma" Wilkinson. Charles M. Fillmore, who organized the church, preached in the morning. During Brother Thompson's twenty months' pastorate there were 98 baptisms and 36 other additions. At this anniversary occasion there were six additions.

—J. W. Harrison and wife are making good progress in their journey across the continent, and at last reports were on their way to Springfield, O. They had a delightful time at Columbus, where on the morning of their departure they were surprised by finding a number of parcels containing necessities and luxuries, placed there by the church janitor and provided by the members of Bro. W. S. Priest's church. It is the purpose of the aged couple to pass through St. Louis, and we may be able to give our readers a further account of the trip when we have seen and talked with these Christian travelers.

—A definite move has been made toward the erection of a new building for our congregation at Danville, Ky. The question has been thoroughly discussed, and the board decided to leave the matter entirely in the hands of the congregation. When the pastor, H. C. Garrison, made this announcement a committee was appointed to see what funds can be raised by voluntary subscription. It is thought that about $40,000 will be required, and possibly some Missouri admirers and others may wish to have some little interest in what would greatly help Brother Garrison in his admirable work at Danville.

—J. E. Lynn, of Warren, O., writes: "Spent Sunday, October 1, with the church at Mansfield, O., where ten years ago I began my ministry, during which their church building was erected and where Brother Brown is now the successful pastor. The occasion was the reopening of the church after extensive repairs. Everything looked as fresh and new as on the day of dedication and the hearts of the people were full of joy. Brother Brown is the right man in the right place. His first year's work with this church has been richly blessed. Beginning with a great meeting the enthusiasm has been carried into every department of the church, which has accordingly gone forward with great energy. It is a pleasure to spend a Sunday with such a church and such a pastor."

—The Central Christian Church at Dallas, Tex., celebrated on October 1 the fifteenth aniversary of the pastorate of M. M. Davis. "The Dallas News" of October 2 contains the anniversary sermon preached by Brother Davis on the occasion. It is a splendid sermon, too, and shows that the veteran pastor has lost none of his ability as a sermonizer. We congratulate him and his church on this long and successful pastorate, during which the elegant church bulding, costing over $65,000, has been erected and paid for, and the pastor preached 2,082 sermons and had from all sources 2,918 additions; the total amount of money contributed during the period is $185,024.8[illegible]. There were 208 additions during the year which has just closed. This is a record of which any church and pastor may well feel proud.

—We call to the attention of the brethren in the neighborhood of St. Louis the rededication of our World's Fair pavilion which has been removed to Old Orchard and re-erected there to serve the purpose of a permanent church. We believe the brethren all over the country will be interested in this occasion, as the building may be termed historical. The dedication will be on Lord's day, October 15, at 3 o'clock. T. A. Abbott will officiate, assisted by the newly called minister, R. L. Wilson, and many of our brethren from St. Louis. The Old Orchard congregation will provide luncheon free of charge for all who will come. Congregations are urged thus to come in a body direct from their morning worship. Take the Meramec Highland car, alighting at Oakwood station, Old Orchard, and walk three short blocks east.

—From "The Bisbee Daily Miner" we learn that our congregation in that Arizona town is growing numerically and spiritually, though it is in a homeless condition and worshipping in the public library building. We make the following quotation: "The new pastor, Daniel Trundle, has been at the helm about a month, and is very much pleased at the outlook. The Christian Endeavor is a wide-awake, enthusiastic body of young people, and is becoming quite popular. But the feature of activity of this little congregation most deserving of praise is the way in which it conducts its Sunday school. The little ones are kept interested and at work with considerable energy. Many people will be surprised to learn that Bisbee has the distinction of having the largest Sunday school in Arizona, this school being entitled to the banner. Since the arrival of the new pastor there has been a large percentage of gain in its ranks."

—By consulting the report on another page of the Church Extension Society's receipts for the month of September it will be noticed that churches, as churches, have sent during the last month $4,000 less this year than last September, and that there are 196 fewer churches contributing. This falling behind is due to three stormy Sundays, no doubt, and the lateness of the return of many of the brethren from the National Convention. More than 1,400 promised to take the offering and thus far only 608 have fulfilled the promise, so that there are more than half this number still to hear from. The demands upon the fund are great. Over 500 congregations are ready to build and do their utmost to help themselves when the board can aid them. The lack of the necessary funds has compelled the board to cease granting loans, and they cannot go ahead until more money is in hand. Those who delay, therefore, sending in their offering are delaying aggressive church building in districts greatly in need of church homes.

Opening of Christian College.

The fifty-fifth opening of Christian College took place on Thursday morning of last week. There was a large audience present, and the exercises were of an interesting character. Several members of the new faculty took part, and all these more than met the expectation of the audience.

Apart from the music and elocution program, the exercises consisted of short addresses by W. S. St. Clair, Prof. C. M. Sharpe, C. H. Winders and the President, Mrs. W. T. Moore. Mrs. Moore emphasized the importance of trying to make the coming year beautiful, and she said in order to do this we must have a beautiful ideal. This ideal should be the Christ. To imitate

A $10,000 Gift to Church Extension.

D. R Pickens and wife, of Tyler, Texas, last week gave another $10,000 to the Board of Church Extension on the annuity plan. This makes $20,000 given to Church Extension by Brother and Sister Pickens, they having given $10,000 a few years ago. At their death this $20,000 will be known as the David R. and Melissa Pickens Memorial Loan Fund. According to the Church Extension plan, by which money constantly repeats itself in arithmetical and geometrical progression, this $20,000 fund will build forty churches every five years. This gift should be an inspiration to others. Mr. Pickens and wife were both born in Kentucky, and their ministry of twenty-five years in Georgia and Texas in pioneer days and later proved to them the immense disadvantage of having no Church Extension fund to back up their evangelistic work and the advantages of such a fund now to our newly organized missions. Mr. Pickens was also impressed with the fact that when a church is helped by a loan from our Church Extension fund it is not beggared or humiliated, but can ask for and receive the help in a manly and businesslike way because it proposes to give good security and pay it back again. It is thus taught self-dependence.

The businesslike way in which the money is handled, the prompt return of the money by the missions borrowing it, so that it may go out again on its good mission, and the slight loss of but $563 in handling $914,000 in loans to these mission churches, caused Brother Pickens to consider his $20,000 an absolutely safe investment.

$175,409 FOR THE C. W. B. M.

The total receipts of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions for the missionary year ending September 30, 1905, were $204,797.15. The actual receipts were $175,408.98. The amount paid into the general fund was $136,844.93, a gain of $24,962.37 over any year in the history of the organization. For 1905-6 the aim will be $200,000 in actual receipts.

During the missionary year just closed this organization sent three missionaries to Jamaica, five to India, four to Mexico, three to Porto Rico, and three to South America, a total of twenty missionaries, besides the new workers employed in the home field. This is the largest number of workers that has yet been sent to the field by any of our missionary organizations in one year.

Church Extension Receipts.

Amount contributed,	1904	$14,054.30
" "	1905	9,979.02
Loss, ...		$4,075.32

It will be noticed that we have lost 196 contributing churches and $4,075.32 from the churches as compared with last year, but we have gained $9,110.93 from individuals, not including the W. G. Logan gift of $50,000, estimated conservatively. When the property is sold we will add whatever amount it brings beyond $50,000.

Sixty thousand dollars of our September receipts is in improved real estate and good securities, which cannot be used for building churches until the property is sold. In the meantime the board is greatly in need of cash. No loans have been granted for three months and none are likely to be granted for the next three months, because of lack of funds. The churches, as churches, have sent $5,000 less than last year, due to the first three Sundays of September being stormy and the preachers not returning from the convention at San Francisco in time to take the offering in September. The board believes that this deficit will be made up in October. The preachers will not allow this collection to go by default. Over 1,400 churches have promised to take the offering, and thus far only 608 have responded with offerings. Every Sunday in October should be used until the churches have done their duty for Church Extension. There are over 500 churches ready to do their utmost to build as soon as our board can help them. This should be sufficient inspiration for the churches and all the friends of Church Extension to send liberal gifts. Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

VELLASTIC UNDERWEAR.

A New Kind of Undergarment that is Fast Coming into Universal Use.

In the stores this winter may be seen the new style of underwear made by the Utica Knitting Company, and known as Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece Underwear.

By reason of its low price—fifty cents a garment—and its superior quality, this line of underwear is coming into great demand.

Its elasticity, which results from its rib feature, combined with its warm fleece, makes Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece especially desirable for persons whose work involves much bodily movement or exposure to the weather.

Vellastic Utica Ribbed Fleece Underwear always retains its shape and elasticity in washing, and the fleece its downy softness.

Men's garments are a revelation of comfort to men who wear them for the first time.

Men's and women's garments at 50c each; children's sizes in union suits, 50c, in two piece suits, 25c the garment.

Interchurch Conference on Federation.

The Interchurch Conference on Federation, consisting of about five hundred representatives from twenty-eight Christian churches in the U. S. A., will meet in Carnegie Hall, 7th avenue and 57th street, New York, N. Y., Wednesday, November 15, to Tuesday, November 21, 1905.

The representatives are requested to present themselves at Carnegie Hall on the morning and afternoon of Wednesday, November 15, where the chairman, secretary and other members of the committee of arrangements will receive them and furnish them with credentials and other documents.

The railroad arrangements for the conference are in charge of the chairman, who can be addressed at the Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, Pa., room 515. The secretary can be addressed at the office of the executive committee, 90 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

ECZEMA FOR EIGHT YEARS

Felt as if Burning Up from Itching and Pain. Speedily Cured By Cuticura.

"Cuticura cured me of a terrible eczema from which I had suffered agony and pain for eight years, being unable to obtain any help from the best professional treatment. My scalp and face were covered with sores, and I felt as if burning up from the itching and pain. Cuticura gave me relief the very first day, and made a complete cure in a short time. My head and face are now clear and well." (Signed) Miss Mary M. Fay, 75 West Main St., Westboro, Mass.

Our Greatest Gift to a Missionary Society

Dr. Wm. G. Logan and Wife Give $70,00 for Church Extension

HIS REASONS FOR MAKING THE GIFT.

"First—I believe the Church Extension plan is the best conceivable for aiding our missions to build. A loan at a low rate and on long time does not beggar a church.

"Second—I have been studying the management, and find that the plan works beyond what we had any right to expect when it was organized seventeen years ago. The fact that the Board has handled over $900,000 in loans to 927 mission churches scattered over the United States, with a loss of but a little over $500, is wonderful.

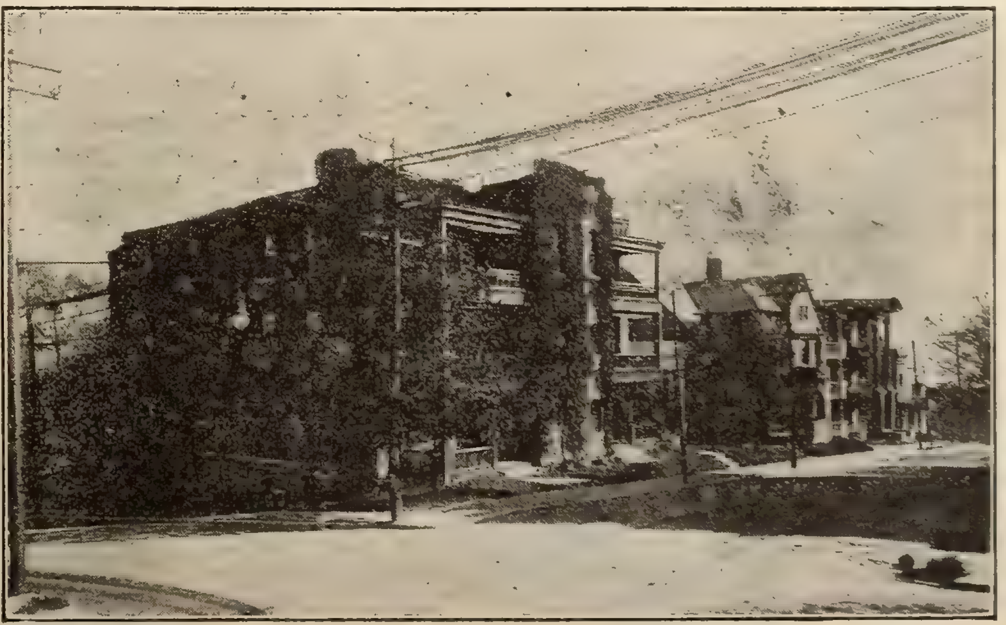
"Third—I have known the men for years who are managing this fund, and consider them eminently capable and worthy of confidence and help."—W. G. Logan.

Dr. Wm. G. Logan and wife, of Kansas City, Mo., have deeded to David O. Smart, Langston Bacon and Fletcher Cowherd, members of the Board, in trust for the Church Extension fund, improved real estate in Kansas City, Mo., which he values at $70,000 (seventy thousand dollars). The property consists of three flat buildings, having accommodations for eighteen families. The gross income from the rents is $7,500 per annum. The Board pays an annuity of $4,000 a year to Dr. Logan and his heirs. The buildings are first class, strictly modern and well located at the corner of Sixteenth and Wyandotte streets, on the west side, in a good residence neighborhood. The building with columns is just finished, at a cost of $26,000. The lot on which the three buildings stand fronts 235 feet on Wyandotte and 140 feet on Sixteenth street. This gift to Church Extension is the largest ever made to one of our missionary societies. Brother and Sister Logan have given half they own to aiding our homeless churches. This property will be sold as soon as possible because it is the desire of Dr. Logan that the money shall go to work building churches; however, it will not be sold at a sacrifice, for it is a fine investment for some one, being close enough to the business section of the city to rent well, and yet not so close as to be unhomelike. The circumstances of the gift ought to appeal to wealthy brethren seeking a good investment with a profitable and sure income, to buy, so that the Board may get the cash with which to build churches.

DR. WM. G. LOGAN.

MILDRED T. LOGAN.

FRONT VIEW OF THE THIRD FLAT SHOWN IN THE DISTANCE IN THE OTHER PICTURE.



THIS PHOTOGRAPH SHOWS THE THREE FLATS CONSTITUTING THE GIFT.

This fund will be known as the "Dr. William G. Logan Trust Fund," for the purpose of aiding in the erection of church buildings by making loans therefrom under the control and direction of the Board of Church Extension of the American Christian Missionary Society.

Dr. W. G. Logan was born in Lincoln county, Kentucky, November 24, 1831. He will, therefore, be 74 years old next November. Mrs. Logan was born in Kentucky, and her friends will remember her as Miss Mildred Arnold, of Jessamine county. The two were married in 1853. Dr. Logan was a graduate in 1852 of the Kentucky School of Medicine of Louisville, which is now the medical department of Kentucky University. He came to Plattsburg, Mo., in 1852, and to Kansas City in 1882. He has been a very successful practitioner, and has been a careful and economical liver. Dr. Logan and wife are members of the First Church of Kansas City, Mo.

Dr. Logan has been a regular contributor to Church Extension for years. In sending personal gifts, he accompanied them with a kind and encouraging word. He received literature from the office from time to time, and studied the annual reports of the Board for years. The reasons he gave to the corresponding secretary when he announced his intention to create the Logan Fund are interesting.

I feel like saying here that the fact of this large gift being made by a man in Kansas City, who has given careful study to the work of Church Extension, who has known the members of our Board for years, and has himself been a successful investor, is significant, and is a deserved compliment to the men whom the brethren have elected to manage this sacred trust for the Disciples of Christ, and for the use of our worthy missions that are struggling to build. It ought to be as easy for our missionary societies to get large gifts as it is to get small ones, provided only that our boards will do great things. Let other great gifts follow to help realize the new watchword of the Board of Extension —"A Million by the close of 1909."

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Eighth Indiana District Convention.

The Eighth Missionary District of Indiana held a very interesting convention at Greencastle on Sept. 27, 28. The district comprises six counties in the central part of the state and has about seventy five congregations of Disciples.

C. W. Cauble, minister at Greencastle, had everything in readiness to give the many delegates who attended a royal welcome. Everything possible was done to make our stay with them a pleasant one.

The program was well carried out, the various departments of the church being well represented.

The evening addresses were given by J. O. Rose, state corresponding secretary, and E. E. Moorman, minister of the Danville church. Both speakers emphasized the importance of state missionary work.

Others who delivered addresses were T. A. Hall, H. G. Murphy, I. N. Grisso, L. V. Barbre, E. L. Day, J. M. Weddle, Mrs. S. K. Jones and Miss Mattie Pounds.

E. L. Day, of Brazil, was chosen president, and L. V. Barbre, secretary, of the district. The next convention will be held at Clinton. C. O. Burton, secretary.

A Voice from the South.

I held a three weeks' meeting in Athens, Ala., with Thos. Lenox, minister, who, with his good wife, is held in highest esteem by the church and people generally. There were large audiences and eight additions to the membership, four of them by baptism. The state convention meets at Athens in November.

Another three weeks' meeting at College Park, Atlanta, Ga., with W. A. Chastain, minister, was my second meeting with this man of God. There were seven additions to their fellowship, three being by baptism. Several visiting ministers were present at one or more of the services, and assisted in song and prayer and exhortation; among them were: J. H. Wood, of Augusta; J. F. Lambert, of College Park; H. C. Dodson and brother, of Red Oak; H. K. Pendleton, A. E. Seddon, G. H. Hinnant, A. F. Lee, G. W. Mullins, of Atlanta; Bernard P. Smith and F. L. Adams, of West End. Georgia is a ripe field for real mission work.

September 7, I began a ten days' meeting in beautiful and classic Talladega, Ala. This meeting was crowded in before a union meeting, because it was my only time there. We had very large audiences and eight additions to the membership; five by baptism. I believe many friends were made for the cause. Our church is less than one year old there. S. P. Spiegel sang three nights during the meeting. Mrs. Spiegel played the piano. Brother Cuthrell begins his ministry with Talladega and Oxford October 1. They have a bright future.

The Convention Number of The Christian-Evangelist was great. I almost sat in the convention hall while reading it, having been deprived of the happy privilege of attending the convention.

I am now in a month's meeting in Savannah, Ga., with Bro. A. R. Miller. Having heard much of his deep piety and of the consecration of that church I anticipate a great meeting.

November 4, I am to begin a fifty days' meeting in Pensacola, Fla., if the yellow fever does not prevent. So far the yellow fever has not interfered a particle with my appointments this summer, and I have made a very good record. I fear for Pensacola. They have the most malignant type of fever on the coast. At this time they have made a record of 25 per cent fatalities. We have but few brethren there. They were so hopeful for a great meeting. This is a sore trial to them, but I pray that their faith fail not, and that they may be spared to see the victory of faith. For if we must postpone our meeting I am going to them as soon as I can.

On account of a previous engagement I was denied the privilege of taking part in the great simultaneous meetings planned for Kansas City, Cincinnati, and Pittsburg. I was invited to assist in the three cities. But the work to be done in the south—and the workers so few! O. P. Spiegel.

Missouri.

Are you getting ready for the state day? Remember it is Lord's day, November 5, 1905. You ought, brother, minister, to send in the order for your supplies at the earliest date. We are out of collection envelopes, but have placed the order, and if you will invest a penny in a postal card and send it to 311 Century Building, Kansas City, Mo., and tell us how many pastoral letters you want, and how many collection envelopes, the pastoral letters will be sent at once and the envelopes at the earliest moment. A special edition of the October number of "The Missouri Christian Message" is being gotten out, and also of the November issue. If you will say in your postal, which I pray you send at once, how many of these you will distribute they will be sent to you. We want to help you make this the greatest offering your church has ever made for state missions.

Ten thousand dollars ought to be the very least we would be at all satisfied with. When Admiral Togo went into the fight in the Sea of Japan, he signaled from the masthead, "Japan expects everyone to do his utmost." This is all we ask of you, preachers and churches in Missouri; but this much we do ask. It is unfair, unjust and un-Christian to demand of the State Board the doing of certain work and then, by indifference or sheer neglect, fail to furnish the means. T. A. Abbott.

Nebraska.

The state evangelist, R. F. Whiston, is now at the little town of Vesta, where we have a small body of people, but have had no organization. A house not used for several years is standing about eight miles in the country, and it may be we can move it into the town. An organization will be effected.

R. D. McCance, recently of South Dakota, now a resident of Cozad, Neb., is in a meeting for the State and District Boards at Magnet. S. A. Kopp is the regular preacher and this is a mission point of the State Board. This is the first meeting since the organization, about three years ago.

F. L. Pettit and T. A. Lindenmeyer will exchange meetings, the Auburn meeting being first and commencing October 9. Brother Pettit had eight additions at regular services at Auburn during September, five by baptism.——D. A. Youtzy, of Plattsmouth, and E. G. Hamilton, of Unadilla, exchange meetings in their respective fields. Youtzy began at Unadilla Oct. 5.——Good word is received from outside sources of the work at Louisville, now being cared for half time by A. L. Ogden.——Samuel Gregg will be available for a couple of meetings. His address is Minden, where he is the regular preacher.——Melvin Putman is in a meeting at Greenwood. W. B. Harter is the preacher there.——F. E. James is in a meeting at Chester.——De Forest Austin's meeting at Douglas closed with 44 additions. Brother Sabin, of that place, has purchased a new tent and will furnish it to Brother Austin for tent meetings. The plan now is for Austin and McVey to hold one meeting in northern Kansas and one in southern Nebraska, and gradually work southwest to southern California for the winter, then back to western Nebraska in the spring and summer. This team ought to add one thousand souls to the churches in this way.——Thos. Maxwell has left Ulysses and began work at York. Brother Maxwell is highly beloved in Ulysses. Naturally they did not enjoy his leaving them. The church and friends tendered him and his wife a reception and added a nice token of regard. Brother Maxwell is the reeording secretary of the N. C. M. S.——N. T. Harmon has resigned at David City, and, if reports are to be credited, will evangelize this winter. It is proper in this connection to say that the Brother Harman, of Broken Bow, who was reported by the newspapers as having organized another denomination, is not related to the three Harmon brothers so well known in Nebraska. It will be remembered by readers of this letter that L. F. Harman came to us last winter from the M. E. Church, and was commended to the pulpit supply committee by some of our own brethren who knew him. He it is who located at Broken Bow. He denies that the new movement is a new church. He is not now preaching for our church at Broken Bow. Of the merits or demerits of his movement we do not wish to speak here, but merely to satisfy some questions that have come up as to who it was that was meant in the dispatches.

The time of year for getting together the apportionments for the state work is fast approaching. Lord's day, November 5, is Nebraska day. The increasing demands upon the state make it imperative that we should give increasingly, and the large returns for labor, business and farming make it possible for us to give abundantly. Larger apportionments, increased individual giving, and perhaps a living link church or individual, are the immediate necessities. We will soon send out the appeal to the churches. We earnestly hope that the churches will make this interest the first interest during October and November. Envelopes and other literature will be provided for the offering and for its preparation.

The state minutes are soon to be off the press. It is hoped that they will be satisfactory in point of make-up as well as in the information they offer.

Burton H. Whiston has resigned at Bennett, to take effect soon, and is just now in a meeting at Rising City.——L. C. Swan will spend his vacation in northwest Nebraska.——That Cotner University should open with a considerable increase in enrollment was to be expected. The future of this school looks bright. Its clean record and conservative stand for plain Bible Christianity, as well as for a high standard of excellence in its curriculum, has won for it many friends. We are going to get at it soon and make Cotner the best school among us. Why not? The rails are being laid on the Interurban. Don't shout!

Illinois.

About thirty miles south of Springfield are three churches in the fertile prairie: Atwater, Waggoner, and McVey. These are all ministered to by W. H. Applegate, who lives in the snug parsonage of the first place. This whole region is practically under our care. Did it ever impress you that, when a whole section of country is depending upon us for instruction in divine things, a very grave responsibility is laid upon us, and one for which we must answer unto the great Shepherd? It was here that Mother Davis lived who left the college $2,000, many years ago. Though she has gone, her money lives in a thousand young people for whom it helped to provide a Christian college and in the work of more than a hundred ministers now in the pulpits of America and in foreign fields. Who can estimate the accumulated interest on such a sum, in the hands of him who multiplies still the loaves and fishes, with which to feed a starving world, until the judgment day? Oh, that we were more willing to invest in the world's higher life, in providing and training men to go with his message to the ends of the earth!

Litchfield, a city of 7,000 souls, has a good church of 225 members, with a Sunday-school of 175, a Christian Endeavor of 57, and a C. W. B. M. of 22. M. S. Johnson is the faithful, energetic minister, under whose teaching 49 have been added to the church in the year and a quarter of his ministry. The commodious house was erected four years ago, under the ministry of C. D. Purlee, now in Kansas.

The church at Long Point occupies a beautiful new house of worship. Its hundred members include an unusual number of young families who can be a great power in the Master's service. F. W. Sutton, since his graduation in June, has lived with them. He has succeeded in raising nearly all of the $600 indebtedness remaining on the church property and already they are planning a day of rejoicing. This is an excellent field, and a church of great strength and spiritual power can grow up here with proper co-operation and training.

C. L. Stauffer preaches half time in Dana, where, in the midst of worldly influences a devoted band is struggling to give the community the light of the gospel of Christ. Although their preacher is in college, he is rendering them very valuable service and is much loved and esteemed by the church.

At Roanoke a winning conflict is waging, with Brother McBean, a senior in Eureka college, leading the victors. Few churches have had a harder struggle or have more persistently pressed forward, with difficulties without and within. The Lord is with his people and he will crown the faithful.

College opens with a most excellent class of students. Canada, England, Japan and Australia are represented, besides many states and the District of Columbia. Lida's Wood, our delightful home for our young ladies, has never been so well filled since its reconstruction some ten years ago. A good room in Burgess Hall has been set apart especially for the young ladies for study, rest and comfort. Our faculty has been strengthened in various ways and forms a corps of teachers of which any college might justly feel proud. A good many improvements are being made. Our trustees are determined, by the support of the people, to enlarge the influence and opportunities of our already well equipped college to afford the very best for our young people.

The Great Awakening at Oakland, California.

The cause of New Testament Christianity has just received a great uplift in the city of Oakland through the evangelistic campaign of Charles Reign Scoville. The meeting was extensively advertised and great audiences assembled. There were 145 additions, some from other churches but many from the world. One young Catholic lady remarked, "I never had a chance to hear the Gospel before," when she made her confession. There are many striking instances of the power of the pure Gospel. One man whose wife wanted him to unite with the Norwegian Lutheran Church said he would do no other than be immersed after hearing Brother Scoville. A family of five with membership in three different churches all came together on the one faith, one Lord, one baptism, on the last night of the meeting.

Among the confessions and baptisms were those of the renowned Oliphant Sisters, singing evanglists, who have held meetings all around the world. They were members of one of the denominations, and while spending a short time at their home here, assisted in the music at the meetings, rendering duets occasionally in their usual impressive manner. Being present, of course, they heard "New Testament" preaching, and became much interested, especially in the subject of baptism. Seeing the beauty of "our plea," and recognizing its power, they yielded to the gospel with no attempt to "argue it away." On the Friday night following the close of the meetings a reception to new members was held, at which time our beloved pastor, Bro. Thomas A. Boyer, publicly received the Oliphant Sisters into the membership of the church. They will retain their membership in the First Christian Church of Oakland, and continue their evangelistic work far and near. It is the intention to soon have a public ordination of these good women, setting them apart to the ministry of the Church of Christ. And it may be that a series of meetings of a week or so may be conducted by them in the Oakland church. They are ready at any opportunity to tell why they took the step of changing their church relationship.

The raising of the money for a lot for a new church seemed a very easy matter. The church and pastor worked heartily in co-operation with the evangelist. The soil had been faithfully prepared by Thomas A. Boyer, who has the love and good will of not only the membership, but the entire community as well.

Quickly Cured

Suffering for Years, and Bed-Ridden, a Contractor of Marion, Indiana, is Cured by the Pyramid Remedy.

Trial Package Mailed Free to All Who Send Name and Address.

"I was troubled with piles for several years before I would let it be known. But at last they became so severe that I could not walk and I had to take my bed. I tried everything and anything the doctors prescribed, and took their treatments for a long time. But nothing ever did me any good. I had seen your ad. in different newspapers, so I got a 50-cent box and began using them. From the very first I got quick relief and by the time I was starting on my third box I saw I was cured. I have not been troubled with them since. Now you can use this as you please, because it is genuine. Yours, T. A. Sutton, Stone and Cement Contractor, Marion, Ind."

Instant relief can be gotten by using the marvelous Pyramid Pile Cure. It immediately reduces all congestion and swelling, heals all sores, ulcers and irritated parts.

The moment you start to use it your suffering ends and the cure of your dread disease is in sight.

The Pyramid Pile Cure renders a surgical operation foolhardy. Don't hack to pieces those tender muscles which must be intact if a satisfactory cure is to be obtained.

The Pyramid Pile Cure is put up in the form of "easy-to-use," especially made, suppositories. They are soothing, painless, instant and certain.

A trial treatment will be sent you at once by mail, in plain, sealed wrapper, without a cent of expense to you, if you send your name and address to Pyramid Drug Co., 5321 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich.

After you receive the sample, you can get a regular-size package of Pyramid Pile Cure at your druggist's for 50 cents, or if he hasn't it, send us the money and we will send it to you.

BETTER THAN SPANKING.

Spanking does not cure children of bed wetting. If it did there would be few children that would do it. There is a constitional cause for this. Mrs. M. Summers, Box 183, Notre Dame, Ind., will send her home treatment to any mother. She asks no money. Write her today if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child. The chances are it can't help it.

DR. BYE, Cor. 9th & Broadway, Kansas City, Mo.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

We are so glad to hear from our county manager of Ralls, that she has begun her work, by reorganizing the auxiliary at Center, with the following as officers: Mrs. V. A. McManis, Mrs. Ed. Keithly, Mrs. W. R. Netherland and Mrs. Sears. There are six members and four "Tidings," but more are to be added.

The St. Louis Union held its September meeting with the Second Church and it would take the whole page of The Christian-Evangelist to tell one-half the good things there. First, to be regretted was the absence of the district manager, our faithful Sister B. F. Davis. The secretary filled the vacancy as best she could. The reports for the year show advance in most lines. Most of the auxiliaries reached their apportionments, but only three gained a place on the district roll of honor. The motto and rally cry adopted were as follows: "Keep close to God," and "Faithful, forceful, fruitful."

One pleasure was the presence of Miss Caroline Pope, who is on her way to India. She ought to be an inspiration to every woman in our city to greater and more consecrated service through all the years. We send her with our best love and earnest prayers. St. Louis has also been blessed with a short visit from Mattie Burgess, who tarried a day or so, on her way to India. She has our prayers and our hearts.

Apportionments will reach the auxiliaries before this letter. They are calculated to be in time for action at the October meeting. If any auxiliary feels that it has been apportioned too high let us hear at once. If we have not asked you for enough we will gladly raise the figure. First Church, St. Joseph, reports 117 members and 90 "Tidings." Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

Texas Christian University.

Texas Christian University opened its annual session September 4 with a substantial increase in enrollment. The coming year promises to be the best. Improvements of various kinds were made during the summer. The towers and other external changes on the main building were completed, laboratories received additional equipment, and the space devoted to some of the growing departments was enlarged. Several new pianos have been purchased, and the new pipe organ, secured just at the close of last session, is now ready for use.

Prof. Haraldt Techan, of San Francisco, after spending 14 years in Germany as a student of music, now holds the position of director of the College of Music. Professors Elliott and Horne are new instructors in the Normal and Preparatory Departments.

College spirit is manifesting itself in the renewed activity among the various literary societies, and in the enthusiastic efforts on the athletic field. The Christian organizations—Sunday school, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Mission Board, etc., are planning for a vigorous campaign. E. C. Boynton, by the unanimous vote of the congregation, will continue as pastor of the University Church. John S. Sweeney is scheduled to lead the forces in a meeting next November.

A number of brethren have purchased lots and houses near the university recently, and others are planning to do so soon. North Waco is now a part of the city of Waco. The post office is North Waco Station. Our city has recently secured a new trunk line railroad. This and other acquisitions promise rapid growth for Waco.

Panhandle Christian College, at Hereford, which is a part of Texas Christian University, opened under favorable circumstances.

The brethren will also be pleased to know that Carlton College, the splendid institution at Bonham, is now an assured part of Texas Christian University. The funds necessary to effect this arrangement have been secured, and the transfer of the property will be made at once. Thus Texas Christian University is lengthening her cords and strengthening her stakes.

Waco, Texas. Frank H. Marshall.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

[Telegram.]

Columbia, Mo., Oct. 9.—Our meeting with C. H. Winders eight days old; 104 additions, 19 yesterday.—Brooks Brothers.

[Telegram.]

Kansas City Mo., Oct. 8.—Scoville and Smith are here; 23 Friday night; 30 today; 148 in 18 days.—George Hamilton Combs.

[Telegram.]

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 8—Nineteen churches in Cincinnati start the campaign with enthusiasm. Additions everywhere. The new church in Evanston, Claude Hill, evangelist, leads the list with 14 additions. —A. M. Harvuot.

[Telegram.]

Canton, Ohio, Oct. 8—Meeting seven days old; 155 added; 41 today at two services. No invitation at Bible school. All available standing-room accupied every night. Nine hundred and forty-one in the Bible school. Baptism preached in many churches to-night.—Welshimer and Kendalls.

ARKANSAS.

Little Rock, Oct. 3.—One hundred and twenty-one additions the first five weeks. Interest good. Go next to Pittsburg, Pa. —R. H. Fife, Edward McKinney.

CHINA.

Shanghai, Sept. 7.—Our work is doing well—12 baptisms since our return in the winter.—W. P. Bentley.

ILLINOIS.

Heyworth, Oct. 7.—Our meeting with Harold E. Monser four weeks old; 23 additions, crowded house and increasing interest.—J. P. Givens, pastor.

Quincy, Sept. 29.—The First Church has had twelve additions at regular services in September. The Bible school attendance last Lord's day was the largest in its history.—Walter M. Jordan.

Lincoln, Oct. 5.—Closed a meeting of 19 days at Cooksville. Nine additions by confession and baptism, and five otherwise. S. Elwood Fisher, of Fisher, did the preaching.—T. T. Holton.

Sterling, Oct. 6.—Just closed a Bible institute of two weeks by Bro. K. P. Taylor. Very good results. A man about 50 made confession and was baptized last night.—Jas. W. Johnson.

Princeton, Oct. 3.—One addition. Audiences increasing, especially so since the church declared against receiving money from the saloons through the city administration for building sidewalks on church property.—Philip Evans, minister.

Saybrook, Oct 2.—Our revival service, in whch we were assisted by Brother Lorton, of Mt. Sterling, closed after three weeks' duration. There were four confessions and three added by former relation. The church is lifted up spiritually. —James N. Thomas.

An Only Daughter Cured of Consumption.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidently made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two 2-cen tstamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures Night Sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address CRADDOCK & CO., 1032 Race St., Philadelphia, naming this paper.

Grayville, Oct. 3.—I am assisting Bro. E. A. Johnson in a little meeting. Fourteen adults added to date—nearly all confessions; one old man 73 years of age and two bright young men who will enter college to prepare for the ministry. We continue another week, then to Olney, to help Charles Coleman in a four weeks' siege. I then return to Carmi, where our fine stone church building will be nearing completion.—Frank Thompson.

INDIANA.

Huntington.—Two additions from the Catholics on October 1, making about 300 added during the year.—Cephas Shelburne.

Fowler, Sept. 30—Seven additions to date. Will begin at Boswell, Oct. 8 V. E. Ridenour singer.—S. F. Rogers, pastor.

Flora, Oct. 2.—One addition from the Presbyterian church. We begin a meeting Oct. 15, with T. J. Legg, evangelist.—A. B. Houze.

Kirklin, Oct. 2—Three were added at regular service yesterday—two by confession and baptism, and one by letter.—A. W. Crabb, minister.

Pleasant Grove, Sept. 29—An eleven days' meeting; one added by confession and baptism. The cause is weak, but the membership is striving for greater things. —A. W. Crabb, minister.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Nowata, Oct. 7.—Had a good meeting of ten days with Bro. W. F. Flower; 28 additions to the congregation; 17 were baptized.—T. W. Cottingham.

Lindsay.—Preached five evenings at Pleasant Grove. Six added—three by baptism, three by commendation. We set in order the congregation at Paul's Valley and had two confessions. Our work here in the last three preaching days (I preach here twice a month) has resulted in 14 additions, exclusive of the six above mentioned. On the third Lord's day I preached at Erin Springs and continued a few evenings, with one addition from the Baptists and one by commendation.—L. B. Grogan.

IOWA.

New Liberty, Oct. 4—Our meeting starts off very well, five confessions to date.—H. A. Northcutt, evangelist, F. W. Collins, pastor.

Allerton, Oct. 3.—On Sept. 24 there were four additions; one from the Baptists, one by statement and two by confession.—R. H. Ingram.

Henderson, Oct. 3.—A four weeks' meeting here with B. E. Youtz, evangelist, of Des Moines, resulted in two additions, one by baptism and one by statement, and the church greatly strengthened spiritually.—Roy H. Polly, minister.

Mystic, Oct. 2.—One confession at regular service. Our work here grows in all departments. Expect to begin a meeting Nov. 12, and will want a good singer to help me.—C. E. Chambers.

Elliott, Oct. 4.—Four weeks' meeting, with Joel Brown as the evangelist, closed last night with 52 additions—37 by baptism, seven came from the Baptists, eight were members in other places. We had constant and willing help from the other churches. The town paper was of great help to us in many ways.—Sam. B. Ross.

A new Cure for Rheumatism of which any suffering reader can have A Box Free!

On the theory "that seeing is believing," John A. Smith, of Milwaukee wants every one to try his remedy for the cure of rheumatism at his expense. For that reason he proposes to distribute 25,000 free boxes among all persons sending him their address. Mr. Smith had suffered all the agony and torture from rheumatism, tried all the remedies known and yet utterly failed to find relief.

At times he was so helpless that he had to take morphine and after considerable doctoring he gave up in despair. He began studying into the causes of rheumatism and after much experimenting, finally hit upon a combination of drugs which completely cured him. The result was so beneficial to his entire system that he called his new found remedy "Gloria Tonic." Those of his friends, relatives and neighbors suffering from rheumatism were next cured and Mr. Smith concluded to offer his remedy to the world. But he found the task a difficult one as nearly everybody had tried a hundred or more remedies and they couldn't be made to believe that there was such a thing as a cure for rheumatism. But an old gentleman from Seguin, Texas, wrote him saying if Mr. Smith would send him a sample he would try it, but as he had suffered forty-one years and wasted a fortune with doctors and advertised remedies, he wouldn't buy anything more, until he knew it was worth something. The sample was sent, he purchased more and the result was astonishing. He was completely cured. This gave Mr. Smith a new idea and ever since that time he has been sending out free sample boxes to all who apply. In Prosser, Neb., it cured a lady of 67 who had suffered 52 years. In Fountain City, Wis., it cured Hon. Jacob Sexauer, a gentleman of 70, who suffered for 33 years and whom seven doctors had called incurable. In Perrysburg, Ohio, it cured a gentleman 70 years old. In Marion, Ohio, it cured Mrs. Mina Schott after suffering 13 years, she then cured an old lady 82 years old. In St. Louis, Mo., it cured Mr. F. Faerber of the Concordia Publ. House. In Philadelphia, Pa., 4521 N. 19th St., it cured Mrs. R. E. Thomas, after suffering from swollen joints and violent Sciatic pains; she now enjoys excellent health. In Bennington, Vt., it cured an old man whom the best physicians of Worms and Frankfurth, Germany, called incurable. This old gentleman had walked for 20 years on crutches, both legs having been lame. He can now walk like a young man. Even prominent physicians had to admit that "Gloria Tonic" is a positive success, among them Dr. Quintero of the University of Venezuela, to whom it was recommended by the United States Consul. In thousands of other instances the result has been the same. It cured many cases which defied Hospitals, Drugs, Electricity and Medical Skill, among them persons over 70 years old. "Gloria Tonic" is put up in tablet form and contains neither alcohol nor acids.

Mr. Smith will send a trial box also his illustrated book on rheumatism, absolutely free of charge to any reader of The Christian-Evangelist, for he is anxious that everybody should profit by his good fortune. Mr. Smith's address in full is:

KANSAS.

Buffalo, Oct. 3—Closed a meeting at Coyville with 28 additions—17 by confession and baptism.—Gilbert Park.

Galena, Oct. 6.—We began a meeting with F. L. Moore, minister of the First Christian Church, Galena, Oct. 2.—J. P. Haner, evangelist.

La Harpe, Oct. 4.—A three weeks' meeting, with the "Martin family" as evangelists, resulted in 58 additions—35 confessions and 23 by letter and statement.—U. G. Miller, pastor.

Beattie, Sept. 29.—Eighteen additions—two United Brethren, three Baptists, one Lutheran, one Free Methodist, six baptisms and two reclaimed and the rest by letter and statement. Meeting ran 23 days; 14 days of rain and floods. Mayetta, Kan., next address.—Atwood and Gardner.

Asherville, Oct. 2.—I preached at Fairview church, ten miles northwest of here, yesterday; my first services there; three confessions and baptisms. I preach here next Lord's day and go to Fairview again in two weeks.—G. P. Clark, pastor.

Chanute, Oct. 3.—Meeting eight days' old, 12 additions to date, four the Sunday before beginning, making 16 all told. Our pastor, G. W. Kitchin, is doing the preaching and the church is helping.—Jno. W. Martin, Jr.

KENTUCKY.

Mays Lick.—Closed with 32 added—26 by baptism. Fourteen here in three days—11 by confession.—James Small.

Artemus, Oct. 2.—There were 16 more people who joined our church in the service last night. This exactly doubles our membership to date. Have never had such a meeting in the new church. Tom Myers told "the old story."—Ben Herndon.

Poplar Plains, Oct. 3.—Recently closed a short meeting with the Pleasant Valley church with three additions; have also lately held a two weeks' meeting at Mt. Carmel and baptized eight and received another by statement. Bro. Geo. D. Wyatt is serving this church very acceptably.—T. B. Howe.

MICHIGAN.

Paw Paw, Oct. 4.—There have been seven baptisms in the past two weeks at regular services.—C. M. Keene.

MISSOURI.

Bolivar, Oct. 4.—A sixteen days' meeting at Brownington; eight additions. Four here by letter since last report. Begin a meeting Oct. 15. I would like to employ a leader of song.—J. H. Jones.

Shelbyville, Oct. 2.—One addition by statement.—Clarence E. Wagner.

De Soto.—Our meeting with J. T. H. Stewart was prematurely closed on account of Brother Stewart's being hurt by a runaway horse. There were four additions—three by letter and statement and one from the Baptists.—J. W. Bolton.

Wheatland, Oct. 2.—Meeting begun Sept. 29 will continue indefinitely. Expect J. H. Jones, of Bolivar, here to assist. J. D. Babb, of Buffalo, closed a two weeks' meeting last night at Weaubleau where I am pastor with 19 added—two from the Baptists, two from the New Lights, and 10 or more baptisms; others by letter and statement. Dallas, Polk and Hickory counties held good conventions last month. J. D. Babb is our evangelist, and wants some one to take his place the first of December.—S. E. Hendrickson.

Windsor, Oct. 3.—One confession.—W. A. Fite.

Lemonville, Oct. 2.—At Lemonville, where I preach on Sunday afternoon twice a month, we began a meeting one week ago. Five to date—three confessions, two from M. E's. More to come.—J. B. Lockhart.

Kansas City, Oct. 2.—Three additions at the Forrest avenue church not previously reported—one by obedience and two by letter. Our churches begin a series of meetings Oct. 22.—H. M. Barnett.

Albany, Oct. 2.—Meeting opened yesterday. J. P. Garmong, of Des Moines, is our singing evangelist. Six additions in the last month.—C. T. Mattox.

Hume, Oct. 1.—I closed a meeting at Foster, one of my regular appointments; 16 baptized, three reclaimed and three by letter. I am now in a meeting at Sprague.—J. W. Rogers.

La Monte.—Meeting one week old. Two confessions. C. E. McVay leads our song.—I. H. Fuller.

Richland, Oct. 2.—Yesterday was a great day at Dixon, with five accessions to the church, two confessions, one by relation, and a Free Baptist preacher and his wife. The church at Dixon is doing nicely. The Pulaski county convention will be held at Crocker this year, Nov. 17 19.—J. R. Blunt, pastor.

Ash Grove, Sept. 25.—I began here July 1, for full time. We have had 20 additions to the church, all adults—12 by confession, three from the M. E.'s., five by letter, twelve were men. All departments of church work are in best condition.—William Mondy.

Middletown, Sept 30.—J. J. Lockhart, the pastor, held a meeting resulting in 18 additions—15 by confession and baptism. The singing, which was a very prominent feature of the meeting, was in my charge.—W. E. Chamberlain.

Eugene, Oct. 6.—S. J. Vance, of Eldon, has just closed a 16 days' meeting with us in which there were 55 additions by baptism and otherwise. The meeting was a blessing to the community and a great spiritual uplift to the church. A faction here has created division four times in the neighborhood of Eugene and once at Eugene, but now we have an organization of 83 members as a nucleus around which we hope soon to build up a strong and united congregation in Eugene. Brother Vance had to leave the meeting for his Sunday work at Eldon, but returned, and the result was as announced. He is a workman of marked ability, drew large audiences, and had the closest attention. His wife adds to his efficiency by her gentle Christian spirit.—S. O. Burks, pastor.

Tipton, Oct. 1.—A four weeks' meeting, held by Evangelist H. A. Northcutt, closed Sept. 17, with 54 additions; 38 by confession, nine by letter, three from the Baptists, two from the Methodists, one from the Presbyterians and one reclaimed. Twenty-three of these were young men. We organized a C. E. Society. Each department of the church has been greatly strengthened. We expect to have Brother Northcutt hold us another meeting in 1906.—F. W. Patterson, church clerk.

NEBRASKA.

Douglas, Sept. 27.—The Austin-McVey meeting just closed. Resulted in 44 additions.—C. W. Longman.

OHIO.

Hiram, Sept. 30.—A. A. Doak, pastor at Kent, closed a three weeks' meeting at Mantua Center, Sept. 3. There were 14 confessions and one by statement.—C. Clayton Cunningham, minister.

OKLAHOMA.

Grand, Sept. 27.—Six confessions and one reclaimed from the Baptists.—R. L. Alcom.

Chandler, Oct. 2.—The first annual convention of the Disciples of Christ of Lincoln county, was held here Sept. 29 to Oct. 1. By the help of Brother Monroe we organized the county and decided to employ a living link evangelist for our county, We begin another series of meetings Oct. 15. Bro. C. C. Gardner, of Marion, Ind., will have charge of the music.—J. E. Dinger, minister.

It's "Orthodox."

I have just read your recent work on "The Holy Spirit." My orthodoxy has never been called in question and I pronounce it orthodox through and through. From this decision there is no appeal! Only the heresy hunter can find anything to criticise. I was not in the least surprised to see the reverent spirit in which it is written, nor the way in which it walks in the old paths made plain by holy men of old who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. McKinley on Duty and Destiny.

EDITOR, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Just a word to you to let you know that there are many persons who read your paper whose prayers are offered that you may long remain with us at your post of duty. To quote from the lamented President McKinley:

"Duty determines destiny. Destiny which results from duty performed, may bring anxieties and perils, but never failure or dishonor. Pursuing duty may not always lead to smooth paths. Another course may look easier and more attractive, but pursuing duty, for duty's sake, is always sure and safe and honorable. It is not within the power of man to foretell the future and to solve unerringly its mighty problems. Almighty God has his plans and methods for human progress, and not infrequently they are shrouded for the time being in impenetrable mystery. Looking backward we can see how the hand of destiny builded for us and assigned to us tasks whose full meaning was not apprehended even by the wisest statesmen of their times." M. M. GLADSON.

Rooted and Grounded.

I have read with peculiar pleasure your highly interesting account of the San Francisco convention and the journey to and from that city. I am one of the "stay-aways"—not from choice but necessity. There is only one thing on earth that could afford me more satisfaction, and that would be a visit to the Holy Land—the home of my forefathers, the Jews, and rendered forever sacred by the presence and labors of the dear Jesus and his immediate followers. The convention is over and I have missed the fraternal greetings of the grand men and noble women who are pushing forward the Master's cause. I want them to know that I am in full sympathy with the work, and that my prayer for their success is unceasing. I am profoundly impressed with the wonderful results accomplished, and the still grander successes that are sure to come. The one great desire of my life, to visit Palestine, has never been within reach, and I cannot now hope for its realization. Thank God, there is one place I can go, and one meeting I can attend! In the New Jerusalem I shall "see the King in his beauty," and there I will clasp hands with all, whether Jew or Gentile, who have faithfully followed the precious Savior.

As the years go by I am more and more "rooted and grounded in the truth." It cost me a good deal to be simply a Christian; but the sacrifice was willingly made, and I have never seen a reason to regret it. The Bible makes me what I am, and I could never be anything else. If it were possible for the brotherhood to turn against me and persecute me, I would just have to stand and take it; for no other church connection to me is possible after having learned this way.

I am accounted "too old" to be of much use; but as a volunteer evangelist I can do something for the cause I love better than life. My work at present is among a people who need to be carefully instructed; hence large visible results are not to be expected. To make the best of the situation in which I am placed and do all the good possible is my aim. D. M. BREAKER.

COLLIER.

W. S. Collier died at his home, Watseka, Ill., Sept. 19, at the age of 69 years, five months and four days. He leaves a wife, four sons and four daughters. He was a soldier in the sixties and a Christian longer.

KIRK.

Margaret Isabel Kirk was laid away in the beautiful Oak Hill cemetery, Taylorville, Ill., Aug. 26. She was one of the sweetest Christian women it has ever been my privilege to know. The pastor was assisted by Rev. George Lockhart, of the Presbyterian church. Z. MOORE.

MAYNARD.

John H. Maynard passed peacefully away at Sparta, Mich., on May 15. He was born in Seneca county, N. Y., Nov. 29, 1830. He married Miss Mary A. Williams in 1849. Three children were born to them, all of whom were with him at the last, a son, R. A. Maynard, of Denver, Col., and two daughters, Mrs. N. H. Hinkson, of Grand Rapids, and Mrs. A. N. Welch, of Clinton. He became a Christian and united with the Free Baptist Church in 1862. In 1863 he was ordained and until the time of his death he labored faithfully in that denomination as a minister of the Gospel of Christ. Until 1875 he was located at Macon, Mich. In February, 1875, he became pastor of the Sparta church, which at that time consisted of only about twenty members, a mere handful of workers. At the present time there is a membership of over one hundred and sixty and the church stands among the first of the denomination in the state, made so principally through the unceasing efforts, for over thirty years, of John H. Maynard. For several years he was secretary of the state association of Free Baptists and at the time of his death was a member of committee on ministry. At their last general conference he was one of the main movers toward the union of the Free Baptists and the Church of Christ. He worked untiringly in the cause of temperance, giving liberally in both time and money for the overthrow of the liquor traffic. Because of his wonderful influence for good upon all those with whom he came in contact, he will be remembered as the "Grand Old Man" of Sparta. He is survived by his wife, three children, and a number of grandchildren and great grandchildren. ROY H. HOLMES.

REESE.

Elder John H. Reese was born in Glen, Montgomery county, N. Y., Jan. 9, 1829, and passed to rest Aug. 19, 1905, aged 76 years, seven months and 10 days. In 1850 he moved to Michigan, where he resided, excepting four years, 1868-1871, which were spent at Bethany College, West Virginia For twenty-five years he followed teaching, preaching and farming in Cass and Berrien counties, after which he went to Bangor. He organized the church of Christ in Bangor and was its pastor for twenty-five years, and those who have been with him in church fellowship all these years know of the kindly, loving spirit manifested at all times. Under his labors the church prospered. Here he retired from pastoral duties, but not from preaching, because he loved the Gospel, and continued to preach the message of love when opportunity afforded, until laid aside by paralysis about eight months ago. The night prior to his stroke which disabled him, he was at his post of duty, leading the prayer meeting service in the church. He had a strong mind and was a close observer and a critical student of the Bible. He has left to perpetuate his memory "The Chart of Universal Church History," upon which he spent considerable time and study, also his beautiful painting entitled, "Solomon's Temple," which he accomplished at the age of 71 years. It took him seven months to place the latter on canvas and it may be said to be a masterpiece. His earnest, Christian life was a source of inspiration to all who sat under his ministry. He appeared to rally considerably from the first stroke of paralysis, but was rather suddenly prostrated again by another attack, which in about five days terminated fatally. He leaves to grieve for his departure a loving companion, one son, Boyd E Reese, of Missouri, four sisters and three brothers, besides numerous relatives and friends. At the funeral services T. W. Bellingham officiated, assisted by Elders L. J. Branch, A. J. Morris and Gardner, of Lacona.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga, Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

WORSDELL.

William Worsdell was born in Cincinnati, O., Dec. 20, 1849, and died in Vermont, Ill., June 18, 1905, aged 55 years. five months and 29 days, the cause of his death being typho-malaria fever. He came to Vermont in 1866 and united with the Christian church at the age of 18 years, under Brother Royal. In 1881 he married Elizabeth A. Riggs and to this union were born four children, Rebecca, Ralph, Lillian and Hazel, all of whom, except Lillian, who died in infancy, are living. Besides his wife and three children Mr. Worsdell leaves to mourn his loss his brother, John J. Worsdell leaves to mourn his loss his brother, John J. Worsdell, of Vermont, Mrs. Charlotte Andrews and Mrs. George Swartz, both of Monmouth, Ill. Early in life he took up school teaching as a vocation and later on was connected with several prominent business colleges. About twelve years ago he devoted his life to the cause of the Master and it was his express wish that he might die in the work. His wish was granted. At the time he was stricken with his final illness he was pastor of the Christian churches in Cherokee and Byron, Okla. His life was one of faithful service for the Master and for his fellow men, and the example of patient and self-sacrificing Christian service which he leaves behind him is a fitting tribute to his memory.

REBUILDING THE TEMPLE.—
Ezra 3:10-4:5.

Memory Verses, 3:10, 11.

Golden Text.—The temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.—1 Cor. 3:17.

Cyrus, king of Persia, not only permitted the Jewish exiles to return to their own country, but he encouraged the restoration of their religious observances. The prophets of the exile had represented Cyrus, whose appearance put an end to the rule of the Babylonian oppressors, as the special instrument of God for the restoration of Judah. He is mentioned by name as "my shepherd" (Is. 44:28) and Jehovah's "anointed" (Is. 45:1). The references to him and to the use which the Lord intended to make of him (for example, Isaiah 45:4, 5) are entirely consistent with the fact that Cyrus, while favoring the Jews, remained a worshiper of the deities of the polytheistic cult of his own country.

The first party of Jews returned from Babylon in 536 B. C. It was a small company in comparison with the magnitude of their task—only forty-two thousand to occupy the land and restore it. They brought with them the temple vessels which Cyrus sent, but probably little wealth that would be available for general uses. The inventory of live stock (Ezra 2:66, 67) is certainly not impressive. It was a weak people going back to a land of ruined cities, abandoned farms and a temple utterly destroyed. Their first care was, of necessity, to make for themselves habitable homes in their respective towns. Then the altar was set up and the feast of tabernacles was observed. Then they made an offering. Then they began to rebuild the temple.

The order of these events is significant. The people did not wait for the completion of the temple before beginning worship. They began with what they had. In the very midst of the ruins an altar could be set up and God could be worshiped. Beginning with the worship of prayer and praise they went on to the worship of giving and made a free-will offering to Jehovah. In other words, they started a building-fund. And then they began to build. The order may be commended to the favorable consideration of communities which contemplate starting a church. Not a building first, and then religion as a consequence of the building. But religion first; then generosity as a result and expression of it; then the house as a manifestation of religion and an effective instrument for its maintenance and propagation.

The foundation of the temple—or, as we would say, the corner stone—was laid with due solemnities and celebrations. There was rejoicing that the house of God was again to stand in the holy city, but mingled with the general joy were the laments of the older men who remembered the greater glory of the former temple.

Opposition to the enterprise came from jealous neighbors, the gentile peoples who had come in to fill up the vacancy which the exile had made and the degenerate and mongrel Jews who had been left when the others were taken to Babylon. First there was an offer of assistance, in which was doubtless veiled a plot to frustrate the whole plan. Failing in that, since Zerubbabel and his counselors refused to accept help from the ungodly (the "tainted money" principle, perhaps), they sent to the king of Persia false representations that the Jews were rebuilding with a view to revolt. Cyrus was no longer on the throne, and his successor listened to the story, found by looking up the chronicles that Jerusalem had a record for revolt, and ordered the work to be stopped. The work was stopped "until the second year of the reign of King Darius" (Ezra. 4:24) when, under the stimulus of the prophets Haggai and Zechariah and with the royal permission, the building was completed.

THE SAVIORHOOD OF CHRISTIANS.—
James 5:19, 20.

Christ Uses His Disciples in Saving Men. We are workers together with God in the redemption of the world. The followers of our Lord are commanded to go into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation. It has pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe. The church is the body of Christ, and is to do his work among and for men. The living voice must be heard, and the living example looked upon, before the hearts of men can be won to our Savior. Says Dr. Pierson: "The Gospel needs a voice; a book will not do. Behind the Bible must be a believer, behind the Gospel a gospeler, or herald. God wants witnesses who speak what they know. . . . . As water can be conveyed only in vessels or channels, the believer must become the means of communication, impression and salvation." If Christ indeed dwells in us, then he can manifest his presence through us unto the world. If our friends and associates are ignorant of our Christian faith and hope, it is to be feared that we have little of either. For faith and hope are by nature contagious, and will communicate themselves readily at every opportunity.

In Saving Men, we are Saving our Brethren. The ministry of Christ is to "bring many sons unto glory." See Heb. 2:10. The prodigal is still the Father's child, wayward and wicked, lost through sin, but ever a child, for whom the Father's heart yearns, and for whose salvation the Elder Brother was willing to offer up his life. In helping to save men, then, we are but enlarging the circle around the Father's fireside, and reviving unto life those who had died to their native heritage, and finding those who had become lost to the fold in which they had been cherished and nourished as tender lambs.

We thus Save Precious Souls from Death. What would we not do to save from death the bodies of those whom we love? How abhorrent to our affections is the silence and stillness that comes over our loved ones when the hand of death is laid upon their brows! And how we dread the swift corruption that compels us to hide away in the grave the form that but yesterday moved among us with such grace and beauty! Death is indeed an enemy whom we both fear and hate. But what must be the death of the soul, in the eye of him to whom spiritual things are as manifest as are physical to us. The silence and stillness of spiritual death, which hears not the voice of God, and answers not the loving call of the Lord of life, are a thousand times sadder than the failure of our physical powers through disease and death. And the corruption of the spirit, through sin loved and practiced, affords an infinitely sadder sight to our heavenly Father. Jesus would never have come to earth to deliver us from material sickness and death, for he himself submitted to die the death of the body, and he left the world full of disease and death at his departure. His mission was to save from that eternal death that sin induces in the soul, and to bring to man the life that is life indeed.

We Cover a Multitude of Sins. Some people like to uncover sins, and show how evil are the lives of those about them. Others seek to hide sins, and thus deceive others as to their existence. The true disciple of Jesus Christ seeks to cover the sins of men by bringing them to the Savior, whose atoning blood is sufficient to cover all sin with the mantle of divine forgiveness, and make the vilest soul whiter than the snow. When we have persuaded a sinner to turn from the error of his way, we have rescued one of God's children from eternal death, and given him that entrance into the grace of God which restores the lost purity and felowship which belongs to the children of the Most High. What a wonderful work are we permitted to do, as disciples of the beloved Savior!

THE SONGS THAT HAVE HELPED.—Eph. 5:12-20; Col. 3:15-17.

For the Leader.

If all things else connected with the devotions of the church were blotted out, our hymns would hold what was in most that was lost. If all history, and even the Scriptures, should be destroyed, and we should take the hymns of the Christian centuries, and, while our memories were fresh, try to restore the loss from the hymns, do you not think we would find most of it there? Indeed we would. What would the church service be without the hymns? What would the hours of grief be without the sweet song to cheer us? What would the oppressed do with no freedom to sing out the grief of their souls? Prayer and song, how the two furnish us unto strength and joy! In this practical age, when all the poetry has about gone out of our souls, we need to turn to the subject of hymns, the department of sacred poetry, and build again in our hearts the thrones of devotion and the altars upon which the fires of hymnology flame out. In our meeting this evening let us realize all the lesson committee had in mind for us when this topic was selected for our consideration.

For the Members.

1. We must not let hymn singing with us sink to the level of a mere performance. Singing is just as real as speaking. We must feel this. Why should it not be so? We have come to a pass difficult for us, but it is not impassable, or it would not be styled a pass: To get over the habit of thinking we should mean what we say in our talks, and, yet, pay no attention to the meaning of our words when we sing. This is a real difficulty. The sooner we begin to agitate the matter the better it will be for us. We must get over the pass. And the best way is to begin to think when we sing: "Now, I mean this, every word of it, and I am saying what I mean as much as if I were speaking."

2. If we are to make our speech in hymns to be real, we must give attention to utterance. Have you ever had one sing in your Endeavor meeting who was not understood? The words were not enunciated so any unfamiliar with the piece could understand. Those who listen under such circumstances can get little good; and those who sing have yet to show that they get any more out of it than a mere tonal exercise. When we take away utterance from the hymns and still argue for the devotion in them by claiming that musical tones are parts of a universal language, and that there is worship in the piece whether the words are understood or not, let us turn to prayer, which is only another form of devotion, and see if there is much devotion to us in the mumblings and ravings of some one who is muttering in signs and syllables of an unknown jargon. Our words must be distinctly uttered.

3. In order to get the most out of religious music, we must come to the understanding of the fact that it is a field of music of itself. Schools of music should give preparation to their pupils with this in view. It is one thing to sing at society functions, and it is another thing to sing at midweek prayer meeting. It is one thing to sing in opera, and it is another thing to sing in a revival chorus. It is one thing to be an opera soloist, and it is another thing to be a sacred soloist. "Well," says some one, "I thought every one knew that." To be sure, most people are supposed to know it, but just about one in a thousand of our cultivated singers acts as though he knew it when he goes out into the world to sing. It is the fruitful cause of much of the fun-poking at singers of cultivated voice. If a voice is natural, and if it has been naturally developed, it is not going to grate upon nature. When the rude son of nature sits on a back seat and comes as near to an explosion as possible without exploding over your effort to sing, you may be doing the stunt according to approved methods, but you may be sure your methods have been wrongly named.

4. This was not intended for a lecture on music, for the writer makes no claims to the ability to do such a thing, but he feels like a common person, such as make up the rank and file of our societies, and he feels that he can testify to whether certain ways of singing, as well as certain hymns, have helped him. For this reason he has let the discussion drift into a consideration of methods more than hymns, hoping to be thus able to do more good by such a course. It is to be hoped that music committees will give attention to this. And let leaders pay attention to the preparation of the lesson. Especially let them see that the musical part is as much real as the other parts. For this particular meeting let there be the best of preparation. The favorite hymns of those present might be called for, and four or five old hymns might be taken as a basis for a devotional meeting of unusual interest. Take the hymns in the daily readings, and a sketch of each one of these hymns, if at all possible; mingle description with execution and interpretation until the interest is at a white heat. This can be done. It will make a meeting that your members will not soon forget. Then have a section of the meeting devoted to hymn experiences, in which persons may rise and, in a word or so, tell what hymns have helped them and why and where.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Am I trying to make music a ministering spirit to the sorrowing and sinful into whose lives I have chanced to be thrown?

Family Circle

The Northerner.

By Harry Clarke Hubler.

The college campus was very quiet. It was almost midnight. With the exception of a small coterie over in front of Old East, the other students had retired to their rooms, and I was hastening to follow their example when the old gentleman accosted me from the chapel steps.

"Young man, what is the name of yonder building?"

"Bosler Hall," I replied.

"And that one over there?"

"Denny Hall."

"Changed, much changed," he muttered.

"You're a stranger?" I asked.

"Well, yes, I'm a stranger," he answered, half to himself. And then he added absently, "It was before the war."

"I don't think I understand. Were you a student here?"

"A student, but not a graduate," he replied sadly. "I left college in my junior year, not to return until today."

"The college wasn't so large then—before the war," I ventured.

"No, not quite so large, perhaps, but our love for the old place was just as great. And those days, they were far different from the present ones. This was common ground for North and South. Here met the sons of Puritan and Cavalier. And just before the tempest broke, the issues of the day became the all-absorbing topics. At club and boarding house—everywhere, we discussed states' rights and slavery with a warmth that more than once caused us to come to blows."

For a little while we both were silent, listening to an old college melody that the boys were singing.

"I'll tell you a story of those days, if you choose to hear," said he, when the last notes had died away. Then without awaiting my reply, he motioned me to a seat beside him on the moonlit steps.

"In the year 1860," he said, "the two literary societies had their respective halls on the third floor of Old West. I was a member of Belles Lettres—at one time president. We debated the questions of the day much as I suppose you do now. But sometimes the discussion warmed until hot words passed, and the feeling thus aroused did not die with sunset.

"One morning the news reached us that Lincoln had been nominated for the presidency. It happened that the society met that afternoon. The question for debate was whether a state had the right to secede from the Union. A young Virginian argued the affirmative, and by some mischance, the negative was upheld by a Northerner. The news of the morning had caused bitter feeling, and brought forth bitter remarks from the Southern students. This bitterness was carried into the debating hall and soon crept into the discussion.

"'I deny the right of any man or set of men to say that a state shall not secede,' declared the Virginian. 'And he who asserts that the general government has the right to prevent secession is a tyrant.'

"'That is a lie,' burst from the Northerner.

"The young Virginian turned toward his opponent, who had risen to his feet, and half raised the book which was in his hand, as though to hurl it. For a half-minute each met the other's eye unflinchingly—then the meeting was adjourned.

"That was the last time that either man stood in that hall. When, white and silent, they passed over the worn sill that bright May afternoon, they passed out forever.

"That night, on the stroke of twelve, two students stood beside a boulder at the northwesterly corner of Stony Lot. A moment later two more appeared, carrying a small case. The moon was very bright, much as it is tonight, and a faint breeze was blowing from the west. Few words were spoken. Silently they paced off ten paces. The men tok their positions—the Southerner toward the west, the Northerner nearer town. A night bird was flying hither and thither overhead, and over in the distant wood a whip-poor-will was calling. The swish of the wings and the mournful call intensified the awful stillness of the night.

"'Are you ready?'

"The arm of the second was slowly raised—'Fire!'

"Two shots rang out.

"Erect and immovable one figure stood, with the smoking pistol in his hand, his face doubly white in the pale light of the moon.

"The other sank slowly down unconscious, the blood streaming from his head.

"'Take care of him,' directed the Southerner briefly, pointing toward the lifeless form of his adversary.

"Then he disappeared.

"Slowly and laboriously the two seconds bore the wounded man back to his room.

"On the fifth day after, the president of the college heard a light tap on his office door.

"'Come in,' he said.

"The door opened, and he saw a girl of eighteen standing on the threshold, slender and tall, with eyes of liquid brown. Her cheeks were red and her delicate features beautifully molded. From under her hat crept masses of dark, unruly hair.

"'Are you the president?' she asked, timidly.

"'I am,' replied he. 'Won't you be seated?'

"Shoving aside his papers, he turned toward her expectantly.

"'I have come to see my brother Robert,' she explained. 'Father is dead and—buried. Robert doesn't know it. I sent him telegrams, but I'm sure he didn't get them, because he didn't come. Can—can you tell me where I'll find Robert?'

"The president saw tears in the brown eyes.

"'There, there—don't cry,' he said. 'We'll find Robert. There has been a mistake somewhere. That's all.'

"'I—I was afraid something had happened,' she answered, smiling through her tears. 'You are so kind. I'm sure now that everything is all right.'

"'Yes, we'll find him,' assured the kindly man, smiling back at her. 'But I don't think you told me your name.'

"'Oh, didn't I?' she said, as the color surged over her cheeks and forehead. "Please pardon my forgetfulness. My name is Margaret Forrester.'

"The president paled a little and a pained look appeared on his face. His voice was very low when he spoke.

"'Your brother's name was—'

"'Robert Forrester.'

"The pfesident turned away and was silent. Over on the campus some of the tudents were playing ball, and their shouts and cheers floated in through the open window.

"The girl listened, trying to detect her brother's voice.

"'Possibly, possibly you were right, my child,' said the president finally, in a low, unsteady voice. And as he turned toward her, she saw his eyes were moist.

"'Is he dead?' asked she, pale as death.

"'No, he's not dead.'

THE ROOT OF THE MATTER

He Cured Himself of Serious Stomach Troubles, by Getting Down to First Principles.

A man of large affairs in one of our prominent eastern cities by too close attention to business, too little exercise and too many club dinners, finally began to pay nature's tax, levied in the form of chronic stomach trouble; the failure of his digestion brought about a nervous irritability making it impossible to apply himself to his daily business and finally deranging the kidneys and heart.

In his own words he says: "I consulted one physician after another and each one seemed to understand my case, but all the same they each failed to bring about the return of my former digestion, appetite and vigor. For two years I went from pillar to post, from one sanitarium to another. I gave up smoking, I quit coffee and even renounced my daily glass or two of beer, without any marked improvement.

"Friends had often advised me to try a well known proprietary medicine, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and I had often perused the newspaper advertisements of the remedy but never took any stock in advertised medicines nor could believe a fifty-cent patent medicine would touch my case.

"To make a long story short I finally bought a couple of packages at the nearest drug store and took two or three tablets after each meal and occasionally a tablet between meals, when I felt any feeling of nausea or discomfort.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week to note a marked improvement in my appetite and general health and before the two packages were gone I was certain that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets was going to cure completely and they did not disappoint me. I can eat and sleep and enjoy my coffee and cigar and no one would suppose I had ever known the horrors of dyspepsia.

"Out of friendly curiosity I wrote to the proprietors of the remedy asking for information as to what the tablets contained and they replied that the principal ingredients were aseptic pepsin (government test) malt diastase and other natural digestives, which digest food regardless of the condition of the stomach."

The root of the matter is this, the digestive elements contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest the food, give the overworked stomach a chance to recuperate and the nerves and whole system to receive the nourishment which can only come from food. Stimulants and nerve tonics never give real strength, they give fictitious strength, invariably followed by reaction. Every drop of blood, every nerve and tissue is manufactured from our daily food, and if you can insure its prompt action and complete digestion by the regular use of so good and wholesome a remedy as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, you will have no need of nerve tonics and sanitariums.

Athough Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have been in the market only a few years, probably every druggist in the United States, Canada and Great Britain now sells them and considers them the most popular and successful of any preparation for stomach trouble.

"'Oh, something has happened,' she cried. 'Tell me, sir; please tell me what it is.'

"The president thought a moment.

"'There was some trouble between him and another student,' he replied slowly, 'and he has gone away.'

"'Why did he go?' she asked. 'Robert was not one to be afraid. Why did he go?'

"The president saw that she could not be denied.

"'It was a duel,' he explained.

"'And he is wounded?'

"'No, not he.'

"'He wounded, he—he killed——' Her beautiful eyes were wide open, her face bloodless and tearless.

"'The young man lives, as yet,' the good man hastened to say. And then he added fervently. 'We all hope and pray that he will recover.'

"The minutes dragged slowly by, and the birds sang just outside the window, and the happy voices of some children playing on the lawn drifted in with the western breeze. The president knew how deeply the young heart must be hurt by this new sorrow, and his whole soul went out in sympathy. But he said nothing. He, too, had suffered, and knew from experience there is no sympathy like silent sympathy.

"'Where is the man?' she asked presently.

"'He is here.'

"'In this house?'

"'That he might not be disturbed, I had him brought here.'

"'I must see him.'

"'He is very ill, my girl, very ill. They allow no one, not even me, to enter the room.'

"'But I must see him. Please take me to him,' she pleaded with her eyes suffused with tears. 'Oh, I must see him.'

"'Why do you wish to see him, my child?' asked the president. 'You can do him no good.'

"'Please, please take me to him,' was her reply. 'I must tell him that Rob is sorry—for I know he is, and—'

"'But he is unconscious,' the president objected. 'He could not hear your voice. He is very near the crossing.'

"'Oh, he mustn't die!' cried the girl as though her heart were breaking. 'He must live, get well again! Why, if he died my brother would be stained with blood. My brother would be a—a—but he shall not die! I'll nurse him back to life and health again. I'll stay by his bedside night and day that he may live. I'll do it for Rob's sake.'

"The president dashed a tear away, then rose, and taking her hand in his, led her up to the sick chamber. The white-capped nurse signaled silence, then led them to the bed where the student lay. The poor, wan face was white as the coverlet. He looked as though death had already claimed him. Around his head was bound a wide white bandage. He did not move.

"The girl stepped softly to the bedside, and there knelt down. Only the great Father knows how fervent was the prayer that came from that poor troubled heart; how agonizingly she pleaded that that life might yet be spared. 'Oh, God,' she said, 'he must not die, he must not die!'

"When she arose she was alone with him for whose life she had just been pleading. The white face on the pillow turned uneasily as she looked down upon it, and the eyelids slowly opened.

"'Bob, old boy,' the pale lips murmured, 'I'm sorry.'

"'And Bob is sorry, too,' she whispered, kneeling beside him.

"'He is?' was the faint response.

"'Oh, yes, he's very sorry.'

"'Then it's all right—all right.' And he relapsed into silence again.

"Margaret heard a slight rustle behind her. It was the nurse, who moistened the bandage and drew up the coverlet, then, putting her arm around the slender waist, she drew the weeping girl away.

"For long weeks Rob's sister watched beside the wounded man, while the death angel hovered close overhead. Then, by almost imperceptible degrees, strength came back again, and health with it. One day the surgeons pronounced the patient out of danger.

"That evening, as the Northerner lay looking out toward the west, where the clouds were assuming the gorgeous tints of sunset, his young nurse came softly into the room and sat beside the bed. The red, horizontal rays of the declining sun seemed to surround her head with a halo. He thought he had never seen her look more beautiful.

"'I am going away tomorrow,' she said, after a little while.

"He gave a start of surprise. Somehow it had never occurred to him that some time she would leave him.

"'Are you joking?' he asked.

"'No, I'm in earnest,' answered she. 'You are out of danger, the doctors say, and I must go back to Virginia.'

"'But the doctors are wrong sometimes,' he objected.

"'In this case I think they are right,' she smilingly responded.

"'Why must you go? Why can't you stay and see me through?'

"'I must go back. I must find Robert and tell him that—that you're not dead.'

"'You don't know where he is.'

"'I'll find him,' she replied.

"They looked out toward the west for several minutes without speaking.

"'Margaret, I wish you would always stay.'

"She shook her head.

"'But you saved my life. I need you,' he insisted.

"'I can not stay,' she answered in a low, firm voice.

"'Can't you love me?' he questioned.

"'It would bring only pain and sorrow to love one who was my brother's enemy,' replied she.

"'I'm not his enemy,' he cried. 'I'm sorry from the bottom of my heart that trouble ever arose between us. But it had its blessing, too,' he added quickly, 'because it brought you to me.'

"'But he's your enemy, perhaps, for he doesn't easily forget.'

"'If he knew that I regretted what was said and done, I'm sure that we'd be friends again.'

"'Perhaps—I pray you would,' she added earnestly.

"'Come, Margaret,' he pleaded, 'tell me that some day you'll stay with me always.'

"A beautiful flush mantled her cheeks as she felt his thin, weak hand close over hers, and for a moment she allowed it to remain. Then she arose, and he saw a light in her wonderful eyes that thrilled him.

quarrel is no more,' she said, 'come to Virginia.'

"The next day she was gone.

"Thereafter he received a letter at infrequent intervals telling him something of her life on the old plantaion, but nothing beyond what friend would write to friend, and never a word about her brother. He understood that she hadn't found him.

"Finally the dark war clouds that had lowered over the land so long burst in all their fury, and Virginia became a bloody battleground. The Northerner no longer heard from Margaret, and when the tide of battle rolled across her state he trembled for her safety.

"He was in Virginia, but he was there a soldier. Once or twice he thought the march would bring them near enough to the Forrester home for him to satisfy himself that she was safe. But the direction always changed, and he continued to march and fight, ignorant of how she fared.

"Then came Gettysburg. The Northerner was there. He saw the brave sons of the North and the South meet in the bloodiest struggle of the war. He was at the 'Bloody Angle' when Pickett's men marched forth to almost certain death. He saw the charging columns torn into fragments by shot and shell, yet they pressed on. As they drew near the Union line their colors fell. A brave Southern officer snatched them up and advanced them before his troops, cheering them on. Their ranks were shattered and broken, yet they pushed forward after their flag. They had almost reached their goal when suddenly the officer was seen to fall. He was desperately wounded, but he still held the colors up defiantly from where he lay, until his weakening hands refused to hold them longer, then they drooped and fell beside him.

"The Northerner sprang over the stone wall to seize the fallen flag. Just as he had laid his hand on the staff, he looked at the upturned face and staggered back, trembling in every limb. It was Robert Forrester. In an instant he was on his knees beside him.

"'Bob—look—do you know me, Bob?' cried he.

"The dark eyes slowly opened..

"'Do you know me, Bob?' pleaded the Northerner.

"'Yes, I know you, Jack,' was the faint response. 'It's no use—no use,' he added, as he saw his old classmate trying to stanch the flow of blood. 'I'm done for, lad.'

"'I'll go for a surgeon,' said the Northerner, springing to his feet.

"'No, no, don't leave me,' said the wounded man, faintly. 'It's no use.'

"He closed his eyes a moment as Jack moistened his lips and bathed his head from his canteen.

"'Jack.'

"'Yes, Bob.'

"'You'll have to put your ear down close, for my voice is getting weak.'

"'I can hear you, old boy,' said the Northerner, bending close over him.

"'I thought I'd killed you. Can you hear me?'

"'Yes.' The Northerner's voice was choked.

"'I'm so glad I didn't—so glad!' he murmured. 'I'm sorry that anything came between us. Forgive me—Jack!'

"The Northerner was sobbing aloud.

"'I've—a sister. Tell her—I thought—I was a—murderer. That's—why—I didn't—come home.'

"Over toward Round Top a regiment was cheering.

"'The — charge — failed. We — part— friends. Don't—forget—to——'

"Jack put his ear close down, but heard only one word, 'Margaret!'

* * * * *

"One day, just after Appomattox, the Northerner stood in the Forrester drawing-room, awaiting some one. He was in his uniform. His face was serious, yet not altogether sad, for there was gladness mingled with his sorrow. Presently he heard a rustle, and Margaret stood in the doorway.

"She recoiled a step in surprise.

"'Is it Jack?' she asked.

"'The very same,' he replied, coming up and taking her hands in his.

"'And—and is the quarrel ended?'

"'It is, Margaret.'

"'And you saw Rob?' she inquired, with a sudden yearning earnestness that startled the Northerner.

"'Yes, I saw him,' replied Jack.

"'Is he coming home?'

"'I'm afraid not, Margaret,' said he.

"And then she saw the moisture in his eyes and understood.

"'Tell me all about it,' she whispered brokenly.

"Two days later they were walking under the shadow of the maples. The next day he was to return North.

"'I've come to Virginia,' said he, after a long silence.

"'Do you like it here?' she questioned.

"'Next to the time of my long illness at the college, five years ago, these last three days have been the happiest of my life.'

"'I'm glad you like Virginia,' she said.

"'There's something I'd like much better even than coming to Virginia.'

"'Something you'd like better?' she inquired wonderingly.

"'Yes—to take you North with me,' he said.

"'But why should I go North?'

"'Why, surely you have not forgotten that I love you!' exclaimed the Northerner.

"'You said so once, but it was possible that you had changed,' was her response.

"He caught her in his arms.

"'And now you will go?'

"'I'll go,' she said."

* * * * *

The tale was done. Long since the boys over in front of Old East had sung their good-night song and gone to their rooms. From a distant tower boomed the stroke of one. We both sat silent for a little time, then the old man rose to go.

"I'm very glad that we have met," said I, extending my hand. "I wish that I could meet Margaret and the Northerner."

His hand closed firmly over mine.

"Margaret is up there," he said, simply, pointing toward the starry heavens. And then he added in a low voice, "I am the Northerner."—Epworth Herald.

AN UMBRELLA INTERVIEW.

In an article on "Writing for a Living," in The World's Work for October, Gilson Willets tells the following anecdote of a memorable interview with Russell Sage:

In that early morning of my writing life, and in the evening of my day, I interviewed Russell Sage. The editor who gave me the assignment had said: "Persistence and impudence will do it." I rang the bell at No. 506 Fifth Avenue. Mrs. Sage opened the door, and behind her I saw the gaunt form of Mr. Sage. "Well, well, what is it?" he asked, rubbing his hands as if they were chilly. I told him what I wanted, and he replied: "You must excuse me." Putting on his weather-beaten derby, he added: "I am going out."

I told him I would go out with him. He smiled as he buttoned up his faded overcoat and stepped out. It was raining. I asked him to take my umbrella, for it was larger than his, and as we turned into Forty-second Street we exchanged umbrellas. He was going, he said, "just down the street," to Dr. Paxton's Presbyterian Church, to prayer meeting. At the church door he said: "Good-evening! We part here."

But I, too, went in to prayer meeting. When Mr. Sage bowed his head so did I. The meeting over, I rejoined him at the church door. I had prayed in that meeting, and now my prayers were answered. For, as we walked back through the rain to his house, Russell Sage answered my questions "for publication." We both forgot the exchange of umbrellas, and the skeleton of his umbrella is still in my attic.

A WASTED LIFE.

In his fifteenth anniversary sermon at Dallas, Texas, October 1, Bro. M. M. Davis, pastor, told the following suggestive incident:

In 1860 a gentleman from New York traveling through the south met a girl of great wealth and beauty and married her. The girl was good, and her tender heart was always in sympathy with the suffering, and her pure young life was wholly given to the Christ and his church. But in New York her wealth and beauty drove her into the mad whirl of fashionable life. Her home was a palace; her equipage was one of the most attractive in the park, and her beauty, her charms and her dresses were described in the society journals, and she became drunk with admiration. She dressed and danced, and hurried from ball to reception, and from opera to dinner. When tired of the pleasures this side the sea she went to London and Paris. Neither she nor her husband had any other idea of life than that of enjoyment.

About twenty years later, when returning from California, she was in a railroad wreck and received a fatal injury. She was carried into the little village station and the doctor was called. She was suffering no pain, and her only consciousness of injury was her inability to move. She said to the doctor in imperial tones: "I must go home to New York." "It is impossible," replied the doctor. "You can live only an hour, and if you are moved you will die sooner." She was lying on the floor. The brakemen had made a pillow for her with their coats. She looked about the dingy room, with its rude walls and tobacco stained stove. Then turning to the doctor she said, "I have but an hour, you tell me?" "Not more than that," he replied. "And this is all that is left me of the world," she continued. She then threw her arms over her face and was quiet for a time. Then she turned to the doctor in a frenzy and said, "To think of all I might have done with my money and my time! God wanted me to help the poor and the sick; it's too late now. I've only an hour Why, doctor, I did nothing—nothing but lead the fashion! Great God! Now I've only an hour!"

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

A Week With the Woodneys.

FIFTH NIGHT (CONCLUDED).

G. C. D. Woodney's was brilliantly illuminated when Mace and Ed came back with the mandolin-string. A great chandelier in the front hall was doing all it could to make you forget the absence of electric lights in the village. Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, looking from the parlor window and seeing the young people rush up the porch steps, turned to her guests and said, "My son is so full of life and high spirits! He is just like all the Dobneys."

Old Mrs. Woodney was a little ruffled by this remark, and answered, "I think him a perfect Woodney."

"Who—my son Ed?" cried Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, who in her maidenhood had been a Dobney. "No, indeed! He has not a single characteristic of the Woodney family. I have often pointed it out to George. I say to George, 'Our Ed is nothing like the Woodneys. Strange that he didn't take after them in some respect!' And it is curious. Oh, no, Ed is a Dobney."

"Well, he has the name—that's something!" rejoined the old lady, as Ed and Mace sought the piano, where the mandolin was awaiting its string.

"Do you know," said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, "that my husband—your nephew George—seems absolutely devoid of what I may call family allegiance. Perhaps it is because all his life he has been thrown with the Dobneys. I can't get him interested in the Woodneys. Sometimes a Woodney passes through the village—generally a drummer, or a seed-man or the like—and I say, 'George, you'd better hunt up that Woodney and see if he's any kin.' 'Oh, I haven't time!' George says."

Jennie made a movement as if about to speak, and her mother suddenly hushed and looked about for silence. Then Jennie: "The Dobneys are awfully nice people in this county. They own more land than anybody."

"Yes," resumed her mother, after waiting to be sure that the spring had ceased flowing, "the Dobneys are very influential."

"Jennie," said old Mrs. Woodney, "you should be proud of your Woodney kin, for the Woodneys are very fine people. They may not own much land, but Jerry Woodney was a representative from Virginia, Thomas Woodney ran for senator in this state, and Humboldt Woodney wrote an 'Early History of Kentucky.'"

"The Dobneys," said Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney, "have always been very rich people." She said no more; she was content to let it go at that.

"I do not care for books," said Jennie, thus disposing of Humboldt Woodney with a breath. "It always seemed to me so—I don't know how to express it—like waiting on people, to be an author. It's a kind of a servant, you know."

"Yes," said Mrs. Geraldine, smiling, "like a servant hunting a job whom nobody will hire. Now I am going to begin a book pretty soon. I have been waiting for a central idea; as soon as I find it, I'll commence."

Mace and Ed began to play a duet. Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney and Jennie listened with rapt attention to Ed's performance, while Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, her husband and old Mrs. Woodney gave undivided attention to Mace's accompaniment; nobody spoke a word until those places were reached where one performer rests. During these brief passages, the near relations of the one not playing, indulged in small-talk until that one came to the end of the rest. The music was simple and popular, and it was not difficult for Mace to follow the air by ear. Ed was pleased with her manner of falling in with his mandolin, and when the evening came to a close, these young people were delighted with each other. When the family went home, Ed accompanied them to their gate, chatting gaily, and causing his companions to laugh in a free-hearted way. They had wanted Jennie to come with them also, but Jennie never liked to do anything, so she had stayed at home.

"Good-night, Ed," said old Mrs. Woodney as they parted; "you may take my word for it, you are a perfect Woodney!"

"Remember, Mace," said Ed, after bowing gallantly to his great-aunt, "the music club is to be organized at my house, next Tuesday night."

"How could I forget it?" cried Mace. Ed walked briskly home, humming the last air he and Mace had played together.

"By the way," said Mr. Woodney, suddenly, "I wonder why Bob Enderthorpe hasn't come to read law to me? He seemed delighted when I proposed it."

Mace wondered how anybody could think of law or of Bob Enderthorpe. Her mind was still in a blaze of lights, fine carpets and pictures, statues, costly furniture—in short, illuminated with the rich furnishings of G. C. D. Woodney's house. The merry, eloquent voice of Ed sounded in her ears. Ah—a life like that—music, beauty, luxury—that was what she wanted!

"Well," said Mrs. Geraldine Woodney, "we've had a pleasant evening, but it's nice to get back home again." They passed through the bald yard with its ridiculous patch of hard-gotten grass. Mace looked at the green cottage, the small window-panes, the door opening flat upon the naked ground. She said nothing.

"Yes," said old Mrs. Woodney, "my nephew has a fine farm, but the house has too much Dobney about it. He must be half Dobney himself, for he couldn't get back to bid us farewell."

'Mother," said Mace, suddenly, "let's go in by the parlor door. Somehow I don't want to look at that pump in the front room."

Mrs. Geraldine laughed, but Mr. Woodney became grave. "My dear," he said, "let us never leave home, if we return to it discontented. Can we begrudge anyone their riches when we have such a wealth of love?"

"I don't begrudge them anything," said Mace; "it was just a feeling—I don't know why it came. But I don't want to see that pump, father."

"Come around the house, then," said Mrs. Geraldine, leading the way.

"As for me," said old Mrs. Woodney, stopping at the front door, "I dislike the pump as much as any one; but I'm too old to risk breaking my neck over that new porch with its pit before the door."

Mace and her parents went around the house. Suddenly Mrs. Geraldine cried out, "Look! look!"

"What is it?" demanded Mr. Woodney, alarmed.

"What can it mean?" cried Mace in despair, as she stared at the front porch.

"Mother!" cried Mrs. Geraldine Woodney. "Bring a lamp, quick!"

"Geraldine—" pleaded Mr. Woodney, "Mace—what has happened?"

"We are undone!" cried Mrs. Geraldine, too excited to heed her blind husband.

"What can we do?" exclaimed Mace. "Where can we put anybody?"

Mr. Woodney wrung his hands in despair.

"Benjamin," said his wife, observing him, "here is a large trunk standing on our front porch. A trunk! Well, the house won't hold any more people. I'll just run off." Old Mrs. Woodney now opened the parlor door and held up a lamp, whose beams revealed a tall leather trunk. "What does this mean?" she cried, starting back, as if gazing upon some hobgoblin.

"Mrs. Woodney," called a voice from the side fence. It was Miss Polly Day. "D Tumbleton drove that trunk up to your back door soon after you went out to supper. He wanted to get into the house, but I told him it would be safe on the porch. He said he had already been paid for bringing it."

"Whose trunk is it?" demanded Mrs. Woodney.

"I don't know," said Miss Polly. "Aren't you looking for company?"

"We are not. I wonder where that D Tumbleton is?"

"He went back into the country where his father is building a barn. He said there was no mistake, that the trunk was sent to you from the station." When Miss Polly had gone back into the house, the family gathered about the trunk. It told them nothing.

"Without doubt," said old Mrs. Woodney, suddenly, "cousin Sarah Tom Woodney is coming to visit us. You know the joy of her life is to surprise people. And a more dissatisfied guest, mortal never had. Nothing suits her, and she works the people she stays with, till they are skin and bones."

"I don't believe it is cousin Sarah Tom's trunk," said Mrs. Geraldine. "I was reading a story this very day where a trunk was sent just like this, and it had dynamite in it, and when they moved the trunk—"

"How can we get it into the house?" said her husband. "We'll have to bridge over that hole in the porch-floor."

"It will never come into my house," cried Mrs. Geraldine, "unless it passes over my—"

"It must be meant for the other Woodneys," said Mace. "You know Mr. Worth Acre's grandfather's daughter—"

"Mace, you are too complicated," returned her mother. "Anyway this gives me my central idea for my novel, and if I make a hit, you'll bless the day this trunk came!"

"Can we go to bed," said old Mrs. Woodney, "leaving this thing standing out here in the dark at our very door, not knowing what is in it? Sometimes people are cut up and put in trunks! Dreadful things have happened with trunks. Can we leave this one here and go to bed?"

"I can," said Mrs. Geraldine, "but if anybody wants to sit up with it, they're welcome. Remember, Luther will be here all day tomorrow, and we must be rested to give him our whole attention."

Mace clapped her hands. "Oh! I had forgotten brother's Sunday visit!" she cried. "It seems a year since I saw him. I wonder if this could be his trunk?"

"He never had a trunk in his life," returned her mother, "but if he had, he wouldn't bring it to spend Sunday, when he just rides over from the Mancey's farm."

"Maybe David Woodney has died at last, and left us something," suggested old Mrs. Woodney. "You know how much he thought of us, and how old he is."

"But he didn't have anything to leave," her son objected.

"He might have had a trunk," said Mace. They went to bed with the mystery unexplained.

Business Notes.

The Cradle Roll seems likely to take its proper place among the good introductions for quickening interest in the Primary Department. Samples.

In one shipment this week we sent out thirty-six Oxford Bibles, averaging $2.00 each. Our stock is complete. Any information furnished.

Have you read the advertisement of the pure books offered in this week's paper, such books as are helpful and spiritual in thought and mediation, and at only $1.00?

See the advertisements in this week's issue and write us for such books or equipment as will put yourself right or your work in good shape for great things for Christ.

Any book in the market will be supplied with pleasure, but to save time for you, give the name of the publisher or author, or both, and the book will be sent you promptly.

For devotional books, "Alone with God," "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," and "Heavenward Way," 75 cents each, or $2.00 the set, postpaid, have not been surpassed among any religious people.

Every school should have a normal or teacher supply class from which all new teachers, or substitute teachers, should always be taken, and this class will be right in line by using The Christ, of the Normal Outlines.

To read one of E. L. Powell's sermons out of "The Victory of Faith," is to fill you with a longing to read the other nineteen, all of which are among the very best. In fine binding, the book is quoted at $1.00, postpaid.

"Mr. World and Miss Church Member" is nothing but good for the "weak-kneed" Christian and will tend to stir such to a proper appreciation of how their conduct appears from a distance. Your one dollar is well spent for it.

Our Wedding Certificates and Booklets, running in price from 15 cents to $5.00, are all very acceptable, but some are much prettier than others, and are much more finely bound and cost much more for material and workmanship.

Remember, by quietly selecting your "Holiday" presents now, we will add any name in gold on any one dollar book, will enclose any card or words, will give you every preference possible if you will only see to it before the rush.

Our school superintendents can present their pupils a very pretty pin in sterling silver at 35 cents; in rolled gold (guaranteed) at 40 cents, and in solid gold (guaranteed) at 85 cents, with cross and crown and the words "Christian S. S." on them.

To the many new friends coming to us under the increased circulation of The Christian-Evangelist: Command us for any information about anything connected with any department of church work. Our 128 page catalog will be gladly sent you on application.

The revised New Testaments, at 7 cents each, or in cloth at 15 cents, or in cloth and primer type at 35 cents, postpaid, are the cheapest New Testaments on the market, and when these are gone probably no more can be had at the price. They are the 1881 revision, or the English revision.

By the constant support of our customers this company reports the best year's business in its history, and at our annual meeting this past week, words of appreciation and thanks were spoken. For such kindness we promise, if possible, to serve you better, one and all, in the future than we have done in the past, and to this end, we are constantly adding the newest and latest features in the printer's art. Our friends deserve and shall have this.

The Normal Instructor, in seven parts, is the thing for this winter, as it will prepare your teachers for their work in 1906, when the entire year's lessons are on the Life of Christ. The Normal is in seven parts at 15 cents each, the first part being on The Book; the second, on The Christ; the third, on The Church; the fourth, on The Land; the fifth, on The Institution; the sixth, on The History, and the seventh, on The People.

Our "Saturday Evening Talks" for boys and girls on Little Kings, Little Queens, Little Generals, Little Orators, Little Statesmen, Little Presidents, make a fine present for your children or pupils, and are so handsomely made, bound and illustrated that they are an ornament in any room. They are filled with the very best along such lines as tend to ennoble the children with pure thought, noble deeds and honorable service. They sell at 40 cents each, or $2.00 for the set, prepaid. Fine for Christmas.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

Current Events.

Some New Immortals.

The second quinquennial election of candidates for the Hall of Fame in New York University, resulted in the choice of three women and five men, as follows: Maria Mitchell, scientist; Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke College; Emma Willard, pioneer in the education of women; Louis Agassiz, Alexander Hamilton, John Paul Jones, John Quincy Adams and James Madison.

The Gang and the Party.

The representatives of the ring, which is now making the fight of its life to regain the corrupt control of the municipal machinery of Philadelphia, have been most anxious to enlist the services of eminent Republicans in the campaign. The only plea which the ring can make with any semblance of plausibility to a decent man is that it stands for the Grand Old Party, and that defeat in the election would be a triumph for the enemy and would have significance for national politics. This ought not to be plausible, but to many people it is. It is encouraging to observe that some of the Republicans of national eminence who had expected to take part in the campaign have recalled their engagements and others have refused to make engagements in Pennsylvania. Senator Foraker has cancelled an appointment, at the same time giving a clear statement of his reasons for doing so. He is convinced that if he should go there "it would be interpreted as having direct reference to your local troubles and differences, with which I cannot with propriety have anything to do, instead of national politics, about which and in behalf of your state ticket I was invited to speak." So it would. That is why they wanted him. It is also why they wanted Secretary Shaw, Secretary Taft or any other member of the cabinet. But the word has been passed around among these administration leaders that the cloak of their influence and respectability is not to be thrown about the disreputable gang which masquerades under the name "Republican" in Philadelphia. They are ready enough to support the party, but they do not care to support the gang. When the leaders feel that way about it—the men who are fully and publicly committed to their partisan position—it is time for the intelligent voter to write out and sign for himself a declaration of independence from the spell of party loyalty in campaigns where nothing is involved but local issues and questions not of politics but of public and private morals.

The Bankers' Convention.

The American Bankers' Association was in session at Washington, D. C., last week. The convention received some wise advice from Secretary Shaw who advised the bankers not to be anxious about large dividends as a bank less than any other commercial institution, could afford to sacrifice absolute security for an increase of its gains. Such advice rightly directed before the Chadwick episode might have saved trouble. The convention discussed many important matters of financial policy. There was no proposal of any general change in the present currency and banking system, but it was suggested that the substitution of a permanent nonpartisan commission for the single office of comptroller of the currency would obviate the danger of political abuse of the functions which that official now discharges and would be more likely to insure a wise and uniform dealing with the banks. The resolution in favor of a ship-subsidy was somewhat outside of the technical limits of the convention's territory. The American Bankers' Association is an association of estimable, substantial and judicious gentlemen, but even their volunteered endorsement does not win us to the idea of ship subsidy.

Insurance Items.

Mr. Charles E. Hughes, attorney for the insurance investigation committee, whose thorough and fearless work in that capacity has earned universal praise, has been offered the nomination for mayor of New York by unanimous vote of the New York City Republican convention. He declines the nomination on the ground that his most pressing duty is the continuation of the insurance investigation unembarrassed by political complications.

The Missouri State Superintendent of Insurance has demanded of President John A. McCall, of the New York Life, that the $148,702.50 contributed by the company to the campaign funds, be repaid to the treasury of the company. If this is not done, he threatens to revoke the campaign's license to do business in the state. He also states that the license will be revoked unless the directors elect a new president, vice-president and financial committee as soon as possible.

The Mutual Life has also been contributing to campaign funds, the disbursements being charged to "legal expense." It has apparently been customary for the companies to make, under this head, large disbursements for which no account was ever rendered and no vouchers received.

The President and Railroads.

It was recently announced that, on his fall tour through the southern states, the President would personally pay for the special train which he is to use, in spite of the long-established precedent which permits the chief executive to accept such services gratuitously from a railway company. This seemed very appropriate, especially on the eve of a session of congress in which the railroad interests are pretty sure to be arrayed against the administration on the most important measure under consideration. But now comes a disquieting story, published first in the "Railroad Gazette," and reprinted far and wide, professing to give an exact description of one recent instance in which the President traveled free. The President's representative, it is said, informed the railway president of the proposed trip, gave specifications as to date, route and stops, requested a special train including a certain particular private car for the President's use and certain special supplies for the commissary department. In sending back the detailed plan and time-table for the trip the railroad official stated that a "nominal charge" of $50 a day would be made for the use of the train, fully manned, equipped and provisioned. To this the President's representative is said to have objected that the government would not, and the President could not, pay for special trains. And in the end, the train was furnished free. We hesitate to believe this until it is proved, but we have not observed any denial of it. Something like it must have occurred on those many occasions when Presidents have made free use of special trains, but we have been cherishing the hope that the overtures were made by the railroads; or that there was needed only a hint that the President wished to travel, the question of compensation being delicately ignored by both sides; or at the very least, that the President, or his agent, was not brought to the point of protesting against payment after ordering the goods. Fifty dollars a day is a remarkably cheap rate for a special train. It is only one-third of the President's salary per diem and, though the salary is really too small, we think he might have afforded it. The root of the whole trouble is that, as things are now, the President is expected to do an amount and a kind of traveling which he cannot pay for out of his salary. (Of course fifty dollars a day would not really pay for a special car, not to mention a train.) It is part of the President's duty to travel, and to travel in some dignity and state, and the government ought to pay for it at the regular tariff rate, as any corporation pays the necessary traveling expenses of its representatives.

The Canteen Once More.

It is in the air that an effort will be made in the approaching session of congress to repeal the anti canteen law and secure the re-establishment of the post-exchange where the men may secure beer and light wines. The anti-canteen measure never had a great many friends in the army and its passage was secured only by the vigorous effort of religious, temperance and reform organizations. It is doubtful whether it has secured many new supporters, or has even held all of its old ones, since it went into effect. The reports which one sees in print indicate that the abolition of the canteen has effected an increase in drunkenness, disease, disorder and all other evils which follow from dissipation. The explanation given is that, when the post exchanges, where men drank mild beverages under some supervision, were closed, there were opened in the vicinity of the army posts low resorts where the men drank worse and stronger beverages without supervision and in bad company. The reports may not be wholly true. At least they need confirmation. If the statistics prove the reports of increased drunkenness, etc., to be true, it does not at once follow that this is a necessary result of abolishing the canteen. It may perhaps be due to needless and culpable laxity in enforcing the regulations. Or it may be due—as it certainly is, in part—to failure to make any adequate provision for club-rooms and post-exchanges on a temperance basis to take the place which the canteens undoubtedly filled in the social life of the army-posts. We would find it very difficult to believe that General Wade, Gen. Fred Grant and the other eminent army men, not to mention civilians, who wish the canteen restored, are moved by the desire to secure more drinking by the soldiers. It is equally impossible to ignore the fact that the liquor-dealers, who are habitually opposed to every effort for the promotion of temperance, are all in favor of having the canteen restored. It is not a question to be decided on a purely theoretical basis. What we want is the policy which will produce the best results. But it requires some breadth of vision and depth of insight for an adequate measurement of results. Meanwhile, we are, as we have been, against the licensed saloon either in the army or out of it.

Campaign Contributions.

As the New York insurance investigation proceeds, one begins to observe that the point which Judge Parker made in his famous New York speech, a short time before the election last fall, was not wholly without foundation. He was, of course, approaching the subject from the other point of view and showing the demoralization of politics resulting from large contributions to campaign funds by corporations. Just now, when we discover that the New York Life contributed $50,000 to the Republican fund, we are thinking more about the waste of the policy-holders' money than about the corruption of politics. Both sides of the matter deserve consideration. The appalling thing about it, from the policy-holders' standpoint, is that the managers of the great insurance companies seem to have lost all sense of obligation in the control of trust-funds. The funds of an insurance company are trust funds as truly as is the endowment of a college. The directors and officers of an insurance company are bound by honor to serve the interests of those for whom the funds are held in trust, as completely as the trustees of a college are bound by honor to let no consideration of personal advantage influence their handling of college funds. It is true, as a recent essayist said, that the typical and characteristic sins of our time are not the crimes of violence and passion but result from unfaithfulness in those fiduciary relations the complexity of which our modern civilization has so vastly increased.

On Consumption.

There would be no such thing as tuberculosis to day if all the "cures" announced had been cures. Yet we have gone a long way in stopping the ravages of what is one of the most widespread scourges, and it is interesting to note that it is along the lines of natural treatment rather than medicinal that the advance has been made. Among the things strongly brought out at the international tuberculosis congress, just held in Paris, was a denial that consumption is hereditary. Great interest was manifested in suggestions made for the protection of school children, and it was proposed to institute books of record showing the state of health of the children in order eventually to separate the pupils into categories by dividing the affected from the healthy. The delegates discussed the varied forms and chemical aspects of consumption. It was admitted that a specific curative medicine had not been discovered, but the palliative qualities of certain remedies were recognized.

Two Votes for the Married Man.

Mr. Goldwin Smith's views are not always optimistic and frequently prejudiced, but he has just made a suggestion which we approve and which we believe would do very much towards preventing rash movements in the direction of forcing strikes. Mr. Smith, in addressing the Convention of the Canadian Trades and labor Union, said that we cannot dispense with capital and its guidance. Arbitration by law he thinks has been found to fail. Capital can not be compelled to pay wages it can not afford to pay and men can not be expected to take lower wages than they can obtain elsewhere. Two recommendations he made: First, that the votes for strikes should be taken by ballot, and second, that every married man should have two votes. Both these suggestions are reasonable. Where the ballot is cast intimidation loses its force, and a married man has very much more at issue as a result of the strike than the single man who has but himself to think about. It is the wives and children who are the greatest sufferers from strikes, and it is the married man who finds it most difficult to obtain profitable employment, for, necessarily, he cannot go far afield in search of this as the unmarried man can.

Keep Them Running!

"We have them on the run and we must keep them running." Such is a sentence in an editorial in the "Philadelphia Press" and it is a result of a canvass made by that newspaper in view of the coming election in that city. That canvass indicates that the general trend of public opinion is strongly in favor of Mayor Weaver and the city party. The machine claims only a six thousand majority. Six thousand in a city of more than one hundred thousand Republican majority! This will indicate certainly a Waterloo for the machine, and yet it is wise counsel that the newspaper offers when it calls on the citizens to keep the ring of plunderers "running." We can only be sure of the effects of the uprising of the people when the ballots are cast and the men of honesty and good repute go out at the head. Systematic organization is needed. The citizens of Philadelphia have the opportunity to show what they stand for and we trust that the trickery and knavery which they have tolerated so long will at last be thoroughly routed.

A Notable Gathering.

One of the most significant and important gatherings of Christian people ever held in the history of the world will convene in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Wednesday evening, November 15, and continue to Tuesday evening, November 21, next. It is an Inter-Church Conference on Federation. In other words, it is an assembly of men representing Protestant Christendom to grapple with the problem of Christian unity and co-operation. It is estimated that not less than seventeen millions of Protestant Christians will be represented in this great gathering, including every evangelical body in Christendom.

Dr. J. Cleveland Cady, president of the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers, will occupy the chair at the opening session, and after devotional exercises there will be the reading of a letter of greeting from the President of the United States, followed by addresses of welcome from his honor, George B. McClelland, mayor of the city of New York, and other distinguished speakers. The Thursday forenoon session will be presided over by the Rev. Washington Gladden, D. D., at which there will be made the report of the executive committee; a paper on "The General Movement of the Christian Churches Towards Closer Fellowship," by the Rev. Wm. Hayes Ward, D. D.; another on "The Preparatory Work of Recent Years in Advancing This Movement in the United States," by the Rev. E. B. Sanford, D. D., secretary of the executive committee and general secretary of the National Federation of Churches and Christian Workers. "The Open Door of the Christian Churches" will be discussed by the Rt. Rev. Wm. Neilson McVickars, S. T. D., bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Rhode Island. This will be followed by three ten-minute addresses.

We cannot give the space to all the topics, sub-topics, and speakers of the following sessions: On Thursday afternoon the general topic for discussion will be, "A United Church and Religious Education," presided over by the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, in which a number of distinguished speakers will discuss the various phases of this general subject. Thursday evening the topic will be "A United Church and the Social Order," presided over by the Rev. Jas. D. Moffat, D. D., and the topic is to be discussed by a number of distinguished men in civil and religious life. On Friday morning Rev. Edw. G. Andrews, D. D., presiding, the topic will be "A United Church and Home and Foreign Missions." There are six short addresses on this subject, followed by discussion. Friday afternoon Rev. David S. Bauslin, D. D., in the chair, the topic will be "Present Practical Workings of Federation," discussed by a number of able speakers. Friday evening Hon. Henry Kirke Porter will preside, and the general topic is "A United Church and the Fellowship of Faith." On Saturday morning Rt. Rev. Ozi William Whittaker, D. D., bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, will preside and the topic will be "The Essential Unity of the Churches," which will be discussed in fifteen-minute addresses by a number of strong men. On Lord's day, November 19, it is requested that the general topics in the pulpits be on the subject of Christian Union. There will be an interdenominational gathering of young people at three o'clock in the afternoon. On Monday forenoon, Rev. A. W. Wilson, D. D., presiding, the topic will be, "What Practical Results May be Expected from this Conference?" This question will be answered in several fifteen-minute addresses. In the afternoon the topic will be, "A United Church and Evangelization," which is discussed by five prominent speakers, followed by voluntary discussion. On Monday evening the session is to be presided over by his excellency, Frank W. Higgins, governor of the state of New York. The general topic will be, "A United Church and National Life," and such men as the Hon. Peter S. Grosscup, the Hon. Albert J. Beveridge and the Hon. David J. Brewer, of the Supreme Court, will speak. Tuesday morning the topic will be, "A United Church and Christian Progress," and on Tuesday afternoon the theme will be "The Kingdom of God the Transcendent Aim of a United Church," at which time addresses will be given on the "Ideal State," the "Ideal Church" and the "Ideal Society." The conference closes on Tuesday evening, November 21, with a reception to the delegates to the conference at the Waldorf-Astoria by the denominational social unions and church clubs of the city.

When we have mentioned these topics and indicated some of the speakers it would seem superfluous to urge the importance of such a meeting, and our duty, as advocates of Christian unity, to be present in great numbers to show the reality of our desire for the oneness of believers. Among those on the program we notice the names of B. B. Tyler, F. D. Power and Prof. H. L. Willett. It is safe to say, in advance, that many statements will be made in the conference that will not meet with our approval, but it is quite certain also that vastly more will be said exactly in line with what we have been saying so long, and with so much emphasis. After all, the most important consideration, and the most cheering fact, is that behind this notable gathering of distinguished men from all Protestant Churches of America is the deep and abiding conviction that our denominational barriers must not be permitted longer to hinder the advancement of the kingdom of God, and that Christian people must co-operate as Christians in spite of their differences, if we are to deserve the blessing of the great Head of the Church and accomplish our mission in the world. No doubt our conception of unity is a little more radical and goes down deeper to the heart of the difficulty than that of many others who will be in that conference, but we have no right to assume that we are more honest or sincere than others, nor can we doubt that the Lord himself, by his gracious Spirit, will guide such a conference so as to promote the unity of his Church and the advancement of his kingdom.

President McGarvey on the Holy Spirit.

In his department of biblical criticism in the "Christian Standard" President McGarvey, of the Bible College of Kentucky University, continues his criticisms of the recent work by the Editor of this paper on "The Holy Spirit." He begins a two column article, entitled, "Garrison on the Holy Spirit," by saying, "I don't wish to appear as hunting for faults in Brother Garrison's book, but its teaching is in so many particulars antagonistic to my convictions and to the settled convictions and teaching among the brethren, that self-defense prompts me to say much more about it than I have thus far said." The statement reveals the consciousness on the part of our brother that his criticisms do have the appearance of one "hunting for faults" in the work he is criticising, and many have so expressed themselves to us concerning them. We do not believe, however, that this is the spirit in which Brother McGarvey is writing. We believe he states above the real truth as to his motive in writing. We are more convinced than ever, however, that Brother McGarvey has neglected the study of this great subject. It is impossible to account for some of the remarkable statements in this article on any other hypothesis.

We are not at all concerned to defend the book that is under criticism, for it is defending itself remarkably well, but we are deeply concerned that the view of the Holy Spirit which Brother McGarvey presents in this article shall not prevail among the brethren, and we know, as a matter of fact, that it is not shared by the great majority of the leading men of the brotherhood. The truth is, if anyone had charged Brother McGarvey in our hearing with holding the views expressed in his last criticism of the book in question, we should have defended him against the charge!

In the first place, the author of the book is charged with "gross misrepresentation" in saying that some superficial thinkers among us had narrowed our position on the subject of the operation of the Holy Spirit by affirming "that the Spirit of God operates only through the written words of the Bible." Referring to this statement, he says: "In all my reading and in all my hearing of public discourses, I have never met with this affirmation, and I have never heard of its being made. I think I can safely challenge Brother Garrison to produce it from any written document that has appeared from the pen of any of our brethren." This is a most astonishing statement, coming from one who is supposed to be familiar with the teaching of our brethren on this subject. The chief criticism that has been made against the work referred to has been from men who hold that very view. It is only a few weeks since we published certain questions and statements from Bro. Clark Braden in which, in stating his own position, he said: "Spirit alone in inspiration and revelation. Word alone in the work that religion now does for man." He also asks: "How can a superhuman Spirit comfort a human spirit, strengthen a human spirit, help a human spirit, aid a human spirit to understand the scriptures or any idea, do any rational moral work for a human spirit, that the ideas of the scriptures do not do for it, except by revealing additional ideas or making a better expression of the ideas of the scriptures?" Nor is Brother Braden alone in holding this view. We think it is substantially the view held by Brother Briney, and these men have no doubt a considerable following. We are perfectly willing to leave our readers to decide whether this statement, therefore, is a "gross misrepresentation" or not.

But the most astonishing statement in Brother McGarvey's criticism is the following:

> There is scarcely any negative position more solidly established among those who have been our teachers, than that Christians ought not to pray for the Holy Spirit. To do so is to doubt the divine assurance that he who believes and is baptized shall receive the Holy Spirit, and that he shall abide with him. But in the book before us the reverse of this is taught, and those who accept its teachings must feel as the author does, that we have all been neglecting a most important duty and privilege in not praying the Father to give us his Holy Spirit; or perhaps he would have us pray the Spirit to come to us, and thus do another unscriptural thing by offering prayer to the Holy Spirit. I quote:
> "The Holy Spirit, like every other good gift, is to be asked for. Not only must we put away from our hearts and our lives all known sin; we should ask our heavenly Father to give us his Holy Spirit that he may complete in us the work which has been begun, even our transformation into the image of Christ." (Pp. 79, 80.)
> True, the Lord assures us that the Father will give the Holy Spirit to them who ask him; but this does not mean that he will give it to those who already have it, and who, by asking for it, imply that they have it not. When Jesus made this promise the conditions on which the Holy Spirit was to be received, apart from asking for it, had not been revealed; and when they were revealed, it was still the privilege of the believer to ask for it in the act of complying with those conditions; but after it was received, further asking would have implied doubt or denial of the fact. It would have implied unbelief of the Lord's promise. Consequently, we find no instance in the New Testament of a Christian praying for the Spirit, or teaching others to do so. In this teaching Brother Garrison has gone beyond the Scriptures on the subject, and has fallen back into the old habit of sectarian teachers whom it has been our task to correct.

It is fair to suppose that this is the kind of teaching Brother McGarvey gives to the young men whom he is preparing for the ministry. In this statement he not only expresses his own personal opinion, but claims to represent the brotherhood of believers with which he is connected. In behalf of that brotherhood and of the holy cause for which it stands, we repudiate, most emphatically, this statement, and do not hesitate for a moment to characterize it as a misrepresentation of the position of the leading men of the brotherhood, from Alexander Campbell down to the present time. We have not seen a statement in any of our religious journals calculated to do our cause more harm than this denial, by one holding the prominent position of President McGarvey, of the right and duty of Christians to pray for the Holy Spirit. No one thing, perhaps, has done more to prejudice our religious movement in the eyes of the religious world than the misconception which they have had of our attitude toward the Holy Spirit, and such statements as the above are partly responsible for this misconception. The position of Brother McGarvey, that because God has promised the Holy Spirit to the obedient believer, therefore he is not to pray for it, would, of course, do away with all prayer. He has promised us "daily bread"; we should not therefore pray for it. He has promised us remission of sins; we should not therefore pray for it. He has promised to strengthen us and comfort us in our troubles and sorrows; therefore we ought not to pray for strength and comfort in time of trouble. We once heard a noted spiritualistic debater affirm that he could prove that all prayer was not only useless, but was distrust in God's wisdom and goodness, "for," said he, "God knows what we need without our telling him and he has promised to give us what is good for us, and why should we trouble him with our prayers?" This seems to be the logic of Brother McGarvey.

Brother McGarvey says, in the quotation above given: "Consequently, we find no instance in the New Testament of a Christian praying for the Spirit, or teaching others to do so." Let us see. Does the statement of Jesus that his heavenly Father would "give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him," encourage his disciples to pray for the Holy Spirit? Did the fact that Jesus himself received the Holy Spirit at his baptism lead us to accept and pray for the Holy Spirit? Does the fact that the one hundred and twenty disciples were in prayer meeting at Jerusalem when they received the Holy Spirit encourage us to pray for the same? Do Paul's statements that the Holy Spirit helps us in our prayers (Rom. 8:26), and that "the love of God hath been shed abroad in our hearts through the Holy Spirit which was given unto us" (Rom. 5:5), or his exhortation to the Ephesians that they be "filled with the Spirit" (Eph. 5:18), or his prayer for the Ephesian brethren, "that they might be strengthened with power through his Spirit in the inward man," teach us to pray for the Spirit? But why quote further, when the whole New Testament abounds in teaching calculated to make the Christian breathe his deepest, sincerest, and most earnest prayer for the Holy Spirit?

We profoundly regret that President McGarvey holds such a view of the Holy Spirit, and should see proper to publish it in the columns of a widely circulated religious journal, not as his own view alone, but as the well-established and settled view of his brethren. So far as we know there is not another public man among us, who would be classed among our representative men, who would endorse the statement of Brother McGarvey. If we are wrong in this, we are ready to be corrected. We feel that the well-being of the cause we plead in the future and its success as a movement for restoring New Testament Christianity, requires an utter rejection of all such legalistic views of the Holy Spirit.

The Evangelistic Campaign in Kansas City.

The article by W. F. Richardson, which we publish elsewhere, gives a very clear and succinct history of our cause in Kansas City and of the churches co-operating in this campaign. We have been unable to present the pictures of all the ministers participating in one group, as some of them are from cuts already in our possession.

Our brethren in Kansas City possess elements of power which are not possessed by the brotherhood in all our cities. They have, perhaps, the largest per cent of membership to the population of any city of similar size in the country. They have a large amount of wealth within such membership. They have several preachers of national reputation and of great influence. They have a number of enterprising business men who are leading the brotherhood in generous gifts to our various enterprises. They were early on the ground, have kept pace with the growth of the city, have been wise enough to act unitedly, to occupy strategic points, and the city is surrounded, especially on the Missouri side, by a large number of our churches which are continually contributing to the strength of our cause in the city. As we said to the preachers in their ministerial meeting on our recent visit, we are looking to Kansas City to give us a satisfactory solution of the problem of the downtown church. Like all our great cities where we are strong, Kansas City has that problem before it. We must solve it before we can make the cities what they ought to be.

We trust the campaign upon which they are now entering will result in greatly increasing the numerical and spiritual strength of the churches, and in more clearly pointing out the lines of progress for the future.

Questions and Answers.

Will you please tell us through The Christian-Evangelist what is the custom of our brethren in regard to persons who come to us from the Mormons? I have always understood it to be the opinion of the brotherhood that the main point in baptism was the obedience of the candidate, rather than ministerial qualifications of the administrator. This, of course, in regard to baptisms performed among the sects. But how about the Mormons? I have lately taken in two Mormons and proceeded just as I would have done if they had come from the world. Was that right?
D. M. Breaker.

Brother Breaker is right in his understanding of the general practice of the brotherhood, and the reason underlying this practice. The question of course in every case is, Has the applicant for membership been baptized? The essential elements in baptism we understand to be the burial in water, and the raising up therefrom, of a penitent believer in Jesus Christ who, in that act, has purposely submitted himself to the authority of Christ and has taken him to be Savior and Lord. And this, regardless of the character or office of the person who acted as baptist. As to the candidate for membership coming from the Mormons, we should make no exception to this rule provided the person so applying believed he had obeyed Christ in the act of baptism. If he should have doubts on this subject or be troubled in his mind we should baptize him on his confession of faith in Jesus Christ. As to the "custom" of the churches on this matter, we can not say.

A member of the Methodist Church tells me that an elder or deacon in the Christian Church has no right to pass the emblems in the communion service to the members because they have not been ordained. Is this correct? A. E. Payne.
Crossville, Tenn.

This statement of the Methodist brother involves two assumptions. Why does he say that the elders and deacons in our churches have not been ordained? Again, where is the proof that ordination is an essential condition for passing the emblems? Any brother or sister may be asked by the church to assist in the observance of the Lord's supper by the passing of the emblems. There is no New Testament rule upon the subject, and where Christ does not bind us we are free to make such rules and regulations as conform to good order and propriety.

Do our national conventions meet for the purpose of sending out preachers, like the Methodist Episcopal Conference? I did not think so, but some here think they do. Please answer and oblige. A Reader.
Knoxville, Ia.

No, this is no part of the purpose of our national conventions. They have nothing whatever to do with the preachers of the local churches and only indirectly, through the mission boards, with the appointment of missionaries. Their object is to hear reports from the boards and missionaries, to devise ways and means of spreading the Gospel at home and abroad, and to promote increased enthusiasm in that work. The missionary boards, appointed by these conventions, select and send out the missionaries to their fields of labor, but they have nothing to do with churches that select and support their own ministers.

Does the phrase, "many mansions," mean that there are different degrees of glory in heaven, as there are different degrees of wisdom and holiness among the good of earth?
Ely, Ohio. Mary E. Bradfield.

We do not think the passage referred to teaches that there are different degrees of glory in heaven, but we believe that other scriptures do teach it, and that reason teaches the same thing. The future life of the redeemed is not to be a dead monotony or sameness. Paul will still be Paul, and Peter will still be Peter, and so of every individual Christian who shall be so happy as to attain unto the resurrection of the just. The greater our Christian attainments here in this life the greater they must be upon our entrance into the life unseen, and, while there will no doubt be progress there, there is no reason for believing that all will make exactly the same degree of progress. One of the charms of heaven must be the preservation of our own individuality and personality.

Notes and Comments.

The old apathetic cry that nothing can be done to purify politics or clean out vice is losing its force when there are so many examples of strong men carrying out a policy of reform. One of the latest is that of John M. Collins, the new chief of police at Chicago. He has entered upon his work with the following statement: "I am going to clean every gambler and hold-up man out of this town!" Mr. Collins has the reputation of being both honest and fearless, and he has already made a good beginning. If he is not interfered with he can make even Chicago a different city.

In our last issue we had an editorial on Senator Beveridge's words to a young preacher. Mr. David Graham Phillips, who was a fellow-student of Mr. Beveridge in their younger days, gives an interesting sidelight on the senator's character and career. Young Beveridge was a farmhand in his youth, and later worked in logging camps. Mr. Phillips says that, as a student, he saw him many a morning, long before sunrise, start across the snow into the woods to practice his voice, and he would return in time to study Shakespeare or the great orations for an hour before breakfast. The young minister may well give heed to the wise counsel of a man who has developed himself by such hard, masterful work.

The daily press is now getting in its work concerning what they call a "War to the Death"—"A Religious War"—raging in and around the city of New York. What is it all about?

As stated in the headlines of the dailies it is that Edward Everett Hale and some other distinguished Unitarians have been excluded from the forthcoming Inter-Church Conference. If they are "excluded" it is because they can not accept the call which is made for representatives of such religious bodies as "unquestionably accept Jesus Christ as the head of the Church." If the gentlemen mentioned are excluded by that limitation, they ought not to complain. If it were a meeting for purely social and moral ends these gentlemen and many others might well be invited. But it was thought important, by a large number of religious leaders, to hold a conference of those who "unquestionably accept the Lordship of Jesus Christ to consult together how they may best further the interests of his kingdom by closer co-operation. It is manifest that those who do thus accept Christ, have questions in common to consider, which would not vitally concern those who do not so accept him.

At a remarkable meeting of the Y. M. C. A. railroad men of the country held in Detroit, a few days ago, one of the speakers was Surgeon-General Suzuki, of the Imperial Japanese Navy, who said among other interesting things, "I was christened twenty years ago, but I confess that I am not a good Christian. What I wish you would do is to send us good men, able to convert our hearts to the real meaning of Christianity." And that is the need of Americans no less than of Japanese. Until men's hearts are converted to the "real meaning of Christianity" Christ's purpose can not be realized in the world.

* * *

One has but to look around and observe the use that professed Christians are making of their wealth, of their time, and of their talents, to feel assured that many have not yet been converted, in their hearts at least, to the "real meaning of Christianity." Christianity means the crucifixion of the lusts of the flesh, and all selfish aims and ambitions, and the devotion of our lives to the welfare of others, developing thereby those graces of character which make us Christlike. Is this characteristic of the great body of members in all the religious bodies? The Japanese doctor has rightly diagnosed the situation. Our hearts need converting to the real meaning of Christianity. If our revivals mean that, may God multiply them and enlarge the scope of their influence!

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is hard to remain easy, even in an Editor's Easy Chair, at a time like this when so much is going on in the world. What an age it is in which we live! Events of worldwide significance are of almost daily occurrence. The battle against corporate greed, municipal corruption and gross commercialism in its various phases goes bravely on, but many there be who doubt if any permanent good will come out of the conflict. These, of course, do not recognize the hand of God in the events of our day, or recognize the rising tide of moral sentiment which is in revolt against political and industrial abuses and the tyranny of monopoly. The people have found out some things about "high finance" and political corruption, which they did not know before, and the war will go on until these abuses are corrected. Once the light has been thrown upon the dark and devious ways of trust monopoly and political bossism, the honest people of the country will refuse to meekly submit any longer to such methods, either in politics or business. Light is the inveterate foe of all that brood of evil things which hatch and grow alone in the dark. The light of publicity and the heat of moral indignation can alone destroy the germs of political and commercial dishonesty.

* * *

Another thing the people have found out which is of immense advantage to the cause of moral reform, and that is the essential weakness and vulnerability of all wicked and unscrupulous combinations of men or of capital, conspiring against the public welfare. It has been demonstrated in several notable instances that one brave man with moral courage and robust conscience can put to flight, and fill with holy terror, a whole gang of public plunderers who felt themselves to be masters of the situation. We were warned long ago that the devil is a coward. An inspired apostle tells us to "resist the devil and he will flee from you." The trouble has been we have been letting his satanic majesty have his own way too much in the commercial and political life of the nation. Many Christians whose faith is weak, have reached the conclusion that nothing can be done, and hence it is useless to attempt any opposition to customs, institutions, and conspiracies which threaten the very life of the nation. This is practical atheism. If Christian people would only believe in God, in the omnipotence of truth and right, and rise in a united revolt against every evil that menaces the public welfare and imperils our civilization, they would witness a series of moral victories that would astonish the world. This united action of Christian people against the evils which confront us in the supreme demand of the hour.

* * *

This is the meaning of that great gathering which convenes in New York next month of which we speak more extendedly elsewhere. The drawing together of the forces of righteousness for the purpose of joining issue with the forces of evil is one of the most encouraging signs of the times. Those who give their influence to separating and alienating the friends of Jesus Christ, are playing into the hands of Satan and working arm in arm with his emissaries. United, the church conquers; divided, the powers of darkness will remain impregnable in the life of the nation. As, during the time of war, the massing of troops is a sign that a battle is imminent, so the gathering closer together of the followers of Jesus Christ who acknowledge him as Lord is the sign of a great forward movement of the army of God against the allied forces of evil which are strongly entrenched in our civilization. If, indeed, the time has come when those who acknowledge a common Lord think less of their little differences than of the duty of the church to make a united effort to extend the kingdom of God on earth, then, indeed, Jesus Christ can use us in overthrowing the forces of evil and bringing in a new era of righteousness.

* * *

In addition to this wider co-operative movement of the great evangelical bodies of Christendom, there remains much that can be done by each religious body co-operating among its own members to extend the reign of Christ on earth. While there are certain kinds of evangelistic work that can best be accomplished by the co-operation of the various religious bodies, there is much more that can be done and must be done by local congregations, and by the co-operation of congregations of the same religious body. We are glad to note the fact that this work of evangelism is receiving increased emphasis in nearly all the Protestant bodies, and in none more so than among our own churches. The organization of our Bureau of Evangelization to lead in this great work is but one of the expressions of this increasing interest in the work of winning men to Christ. The simultaneous efforts of our churches in various cities is an indication of the deepening conviction that unity and co-operation are essential to the best results in this field. This co-operative work among our own churches is the best possible preparation, too, for that wider co-operation with other followers of Christ which is essential to the overthrow of Satan's kingdom and the universal reign of Christ.

The Preacher and Church Management

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. POWER

The annual convention of the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia was held in Hagerstown, Md., October 3-6. It was our twenty-seventh meeting. It was in all respects our best. It was a sample of paradise. Of a colored brother who died eating watermelons, another one exclaimed: "My, my! And some folks thinks you don't reach heaven 'twel you gits dar!" Our Maryland convention was a bit of heaven.

Hagerstown is an ideal place for such a holy convention. The church is an ideal congregation. The gracious season was an ideal one. How perfect the October days! How invigorating the air! How glorious the mountains! How attractive the fields! Hager, whoever he was, knew a charming location when he found this and started his little metropolis. Today it has 18,000 people and is one of the busiest and most beautiful little cities in the republic. It is a fair pearl set in a cluster of emeralds. It is seventy-five miles from Washington and eighty from Baltimore. It has Gettysburg on one side, thirty-two miles away, and Antietam on the other, a distance of twelve miles. It has many mills and shops and factories, and as splendid an agricultural region stretching away on every hand as can be found on the face of the planet. Here is the fairest portion of our Terra Mariae. Here are the Monocacy and the Antietam and the Potomac, and here are the Trenton limestones, the calcareous strata of rocks which give such fertility to the soil and beauty to the scenery.

We went up, a hundred and fifty of us, from the thirty-five churches of our missionary fellowship, and we had our mountain top privileges. We found a royal welcome. The first evening set the pace. There was an enthusiastic sermon from an enthusiastic little man on "Enthusiasm." J. E. Stuart preached the introductory discourse, and he is a fine illustration of his theme. George L. Snively followed with his "Helping Hand." Any one who has listened to the secretary of the Benevolent Association knows how it is; what an impulse comes over you to corral the universe and turn it over to this sweet ministry. We are doing something. Individual churches are full of kindness often to the poor. The earlier generation of Disciples were even more ready to care for the aged and helpless than to support the ministry. But we need this special line of service that the association urges upon the brotherhood. A worker in the Census said to me some time ago: "How is it our Church has but two homes? I see hundreds credited to the Catholics and scores to the other Protestant bodies, and only two have I found under the auspices of the Disciples of Christ."

Our first day was Preachers' Day. "The Preacher and His Devotions," W. S. Hoye; "The Preacher and the Sunday School," W. F. Smith; "The Preacher and His Library," B. A. Abbott; "The Preacher and Christian Endeavor," J. T. Righter; "The Preacher and Citizenship," Claris Yeuell; "The Preacher and the People," E. B. Bagby; "Books I Have Read this Year," Peter Ainslie, a Symposium; "A Psalm Study," Prof. F. D. Kershner, were some of the themes. They were good discussions. The people often say, "Preachers' Day is the best." The Maryland fellowship in this respect is up to date. The story is told of a western preacher that he entered an editorial sanctum in Denver and said gravely: "Sir, I intend next Sunday to preach a sermon upon football, and it has occurred to me that an enterprising paper like yours would be pleased to have my manuscript. I have no doubt that any number of your readers would be glad to read it, and—" "All right, all right!" interrupted the busy editor, "but you'll have to hustle it along. Get it in early—early, mind! Our sporting page is the first to close." Such hustling of the clergy would never be necessary with these Maryland preachers of ours. They get there on time and "with both feet." The president's address was a feature of the first day. H. C. Kendrick was at his best. He made a stirring plea for the enlargement of our work. We want no "tainted preachers," but we will take "tainted money" and "we will baptize it—baptize it for the remission of sins." B. A. Abbott preached an able sermon on Acts 14:27.

The reports of the churches were full of encouragement. The total sum of $63,716.99 was raised during the year; the total membership 5,685; additions during the year 720; amount raised for all missions $6,917.22. The Sunday schools have 3,816 members, raised $4,059 and report 230 conversions. This is the work of thirty-five churches, many of which are small missions, and this is our twenty-eighth annual meeting, the first having been called in 1878, when there were ten churches, with a membership of 1,635, paying for all purposes $6,245. In that first little meeting, called by the Vermont Avenue Church, there were eighteen delegates and they raised one hundred and fifty dollars for the missionary work the first year.

Peter Ainslie made an interesting talk on "The Institutional Church." J. A. Hopkins delighted us with a paper on Church Music, Claude C. Jones took us in happy fashion to the San Francisco convention. The C. W. B. M. period was one of the most inspiring. Mrs. Kendrick presided. The exercise by the Juniors, written and conducted by Mrs. Fahrney, and the addresses of Miss Mattie Burgess and Miss Effie Long were the features. The women have 616 members and raised $942.39 for missions. B. L. Smith opened our eyes and stirred our hearts with his address on "The Rising or the Setting Sun." The secretary of the A. C. M. S. deserves the everlasting gratitude of his brethren for the impulse he has given to our home work. Here he secured $1,000 on the annuity plan from our beloved brother, William Newcomer, which carried the society over the $100,000 mark.

The Sunday school season was one of the best. Miss Lena Summy discussed Primary Work and H. H. Moninger gave with the blackboard an illustrative exposition of the graded school of great interest to our Sunday school workers and of great practical value.

One of our greatest losses is the removal from our district of J. A. Hopkins. His report showed 300 additions by our evangelists at the several missions during the missionary year. W. S. Hoye, who served twelve years as corresponding secretary, was chosen in his place, and Peter Ainslie was made president. J. G. Thomson was continued as recording secretary and J. Irwin Bitner as treasurer. H. S. Welch and C. M. Kriedler were added to the board. J. A. Scott was made superintendent of Sunday schools. The Educational Board reported eighteen young men aided in preparing for the University, among them two missionaries, C. B. Titus and G. W. Brown, and such preachers as G. B. Townsend, C. M. Kriedler and D. Hayes Miller. Four were kept in college last year. The fund is to date $2,862. Greetings were sent to the Virginia and West Virginia conventions. The next convention will go to Vienna, Va. B. A. Abbott and E. J. Curry addressed the Christian Endeavor session, which happily closed our "Veribest."

B. L. Smith remained over and dedicated the church at Waynesboro Sunday, October 8, raising the balance of the indebtedness, $723. Miss Burgess came to the capital and spoke in four of our churches with great acceptance. J. E. Gorsuch, of Tennessee, is in a meeting with J. E. Stuart. Eight added to the Vermont Avenue Church the past two Sundays.

Solo Singing

By Charles Louis Loos

That the singing of solos is not out of harmony with the spirit and habits of the Christian religion need not for a moment be questioned. For one person to sing before a religious audience is as congruous to its worship as that one man should address to it an exhortation. Singing and exhortation have both, each in its own way, the same object—edification.

What kind of solo singing is fitting in worship and therefore to be encouraged, is a proper question for consideration. The answer is simple and can be promptly given: It is that which tends to edification. All other kinds of singing, whether congregational, choral or in the form of a solo, is altogether incongruous in religious service and should receive no encouragement whatever. A mere musical performance to show artistic accomplishment, however excellent, is entirely out of place in the sacredness and solemnity of worship. Singers have no more right to use the opportunity of a religious assembly to gratify themselves by the display of their skill than the preacher has in his office. The pulpit does not belong to the preacher, but to the church; he cannot use it "to please himself," that would be a grievous abuse of a sacred privilege. The office of the preacher in the pulpit is to instruct, to edify—to preach the word. The ministry of the singer is also a sacred one, strictly limited to the high object of aiding in building up the saints. Its aim is the furtherance and enjoyment of the church in a holy life. So it was in ancient Israel, and so it is in the Christian Church.

The solo singer, standing alone before the audience and drawing its attention to himself, can be and ought to be like the preacher an effectual agency for the edification of the church. He will only be so if he is himself an exemplary, devout Christian; if the song is what it ought to be; if the words come to the hearers distinctly and forcibly so as deeply to impress their minds, and are borne to their ears on a tide of melody that will fill their hearts with delight; for this is the object of music.

Let it be well understood: The true office of music in song is not to obscure or drown the words by the strains of the voice, or the instrument; but, as in the chorus of the Greek tragedy, to bring them to our ears, in the full dignity and power of their meaning, on the waves of sweet melody which endue them with an additional charm.

Let us never forget this: That the words—the thoughts, the sentiments—are the matter of chief importance in the song, and that the music is subordinate, the servant of the words, to clothe them with the power that beautiful melody lends to them. The admirable and cultured Greek mind could never allow that the majesty of the language should be injured or lost through the music, as is the case when the stormy billows of musical sound overwhelm the words of the song; which so often happens when the rattling or thunderous tones of the organ, or even at times the loud shriekings of the voices of the singers, kill the noble hymn or psalm. .

The solo singer—if he is worthy to be heard at all—in order that he may truly minister to the edification and spiritual delight of the audience, if instrumental music is used at all, should always be accompanied only by subdued music; if his voice is of a high order and well trained, no instrument is needed to give it effect.

Let me say this with emphasis: Solo singing should never be introduced in the worship of the church merely as a habit, as is now so generally becoming the fashion, to the damage of the other parts of the public service of the church—the congregational singing and the preaching. An inferior solo performance is a very poor thing in public worship. We can endure imperfection better in congregational singing than in a solo.

I repeat it: The object of singing in religious worship is not musical entertainment, delightful as that is, but, as is so often in wondrously grand words declared in the Psalms, the lifting up of the souls of God's people in sacred, devout, joyful reverence to the contemplation with mind and heart of the attributes and the glorious works of Jehovah on the earth and in heaven; above all as these are seen in the redemption of men through Jesus Christ; in the glories of the kingdom of God in time and in the eternal world hereafter.

It gives me sincere pleasure to refer, in this connection, to Mrs. Princess Long as an exemplary solo singer in religious assemblies. She has now been heard for years in our churches and before our large conventions, and always with the general, I may say in truth with the universal, approbation of her audiences.

Mrs. Long's singing has these high merits: Her songs are well chosen. They are always appropriate to the occasion. The songs are not sung for their own sake, but for the sake of the occasions that call them forth. This is a real merit, and reveals sound judgment of head and heart on the part of the singer.

Then, her solos are, as they ought to be, truly devotional; they breathe the spirit of genuine piety. And this spirit is revealed not only in the songs themselves, but also in the manner in which they are sung. As in an address, a sermon, much is gained by the temper of mind, of heart and tone in which a song comes to our ears, and I may say even to our eyes, in the appearance of the singer. She is in no wise negligent in preparing for her noble and delicate office as a singer before God's people.

One of the principal excellencies of Mrs. Long's singing is found in this, that the song itself—I mean the words—is always heard, clear, distinct, borne along on the waves of the melody, but above these as first and chief. Her voice does not overreach and obscure the song with its tones, with its music. Mrs. Long does not shriek; she sings.

Hers is a noble evangelical ministry that is a strong support to the ministry of the Word in the pulpit.

I hope that the sphere of the good work which Mrs. Long has so providentially chosen for herself may be constantly enlarged.

This is an unsolicited tribute of appreciation of a noble Christian woman, for what I believe to be a ministry of great value to the Church.

A LADY LECTURER
Feeds Nerves and Brains Scientifically.

A lady lecturer writes from Philadelphia concerning the use of right food and how she is enabled to withstand the strain and wear and tear of her arduous occupation. She says:

"Through improper food, imperfectly digested, my health was completely wrecked and I attribute my recovery entirely to the regular use of Grape-Nuts food. It has, I assure you, proved an inestimable boon to me.

"Almost immediately after beginning its use, I found a gratifying change in my condition. The terrible weakness that formerly prostrated me after a few hours of work, was perceptibly lessened by a few days use of Grape-Nuts and is now only a memory—it never returns.

"Ten days after beginning it I experienced a wonderful increase in mental vigor and physical energy, and continued use has entirely freed me from the miserable insomnia and nervousness from which I used to suffer so much.

"I find Grape-Nuts very palatable and would not be without the crisp, delicious food for even a day on any consideration. Indeed, I always carry it with me on my lecture tours."

There's a reason.

The Preacher and His Early Dead-Line Problem

By W. J. Lhamon

The following is a fair statement of the prevalent feeling regarding the preacher's early dead-line:

"His period of usefulness and fair remuneration is limited to twenty years. Men in law and medicine are at their prime at fifty, and age adds to their value. Not all men have sufficient faith for sacrifice of this kind."

The man who penned this has, I imagine, been active in the ministry for thirty years or more, and is, and promises for years to be, the greatest pulpit power in his town.

Is not this early dead-line for the most part a bug-bear? A list of the aged men among us who are still preaching vigorously and with great acceptance would surprise and reassure our younger men and our devout boys. Though my acquaintance is limited I can think of many gray-haired men among us whose service has been lifelong and who are holding their places as effectually as gray-haired bankers and doctors and lawyers and merchants. Furthermore, I do not for a moment imagine my experience to be exceptional when I say that many of the best sermons I have ever heard have been from men in their fifties and sixties and seventies.

This must be taken into the account: Preachers are, as a class, the longest lived of professional men. This is due to their moral and intellectual and spiritual ways of living. It is therefore a glory to them that more of them, proportionately, than of other classes, should linger with us beyond the years of highest usefulness.

And this also should be considered: Preachers, by virtue of their public position, are more conspicuous than men in many another calling. When they do go onto the shelf their retirement is the more noteworthy because of its publicity. This causes the ministerial dead-line to appear relatively more dreadful than it really is.

Again: There is an occasional inconsiderate and sentimental exaggeration of the matter. Recently in one of our conventions the statement was publicly made that a certain preacher was rejected by a congregation because he had reached the old age of forty; and another was rejected because he was thirty-five! Such statements are ridiculous. If they could be shown to be true their logical conclusion would be Oslerism rather than ministerial relief. A man can be rejected at thirty-five or forty only ostensibly because of his age. The real cause is something else.

That some men in the ministry reach an early dead-line is not to be denied. But that the causes are inherent in the calling may be denied. They are rather personal and incidental. Many a man enters the ministry with limited special preparation, or none at all. It is almost inevitable that such men shall run a short race. On the contrary, doctors and lawyers make thorough preparation for their professional careers.

Again: Some preachers allow their energies and interests to be divided. One of the best pulpit and platform men I ever knew spent five or six days each week on his farm. He was nominally the pastor of a strong church. He continued to occupy (scarcely to fill) his pulpit and to draw his salary till the church could stand it no longer and called for his resignation. Naturally they wanted a younger man. The older one had made a sinecure of their souls in favor of his pigs and potatoes. That man is now practically a dead-line preacher, I should say, at sixty or sixty-five, but he is a live-line stock breeder. He made his choice. His brethren mournfully accepted it.

Again: There is perhaps no other calling that offers equal opportunities for a life of respectable laziness. Sadly enough there are preachers who, early in life, discover that they can easily fill up an hour or two on Sundays with some sort of passable talk; who thereupon cease to study; who loaf and gossip and hunt and fish away six-sevenths of their time; who read little or nothing beyond the carnal dailies and Sunday daubs; who search the Bible only for new text-pegs to hang their old sermons on; who never whet their wits on a serious book, or kindle their devotion by the prayerful study of an ancient apostolic or modern missionary pentecost. Such men literally rust themselves into an early dead-line. There is nothing like hard work, determined effort, constant and profound study, for the preservation of high vitality and youthful vigor. Too often the early dead-line is simply the sluggard's little race quickly run.

Again: It should not be forgotten that many men enter the race course in every department of it with feeble capacity and limited vitality. They run well for a few years only. Waste and repair are not properly balanced in them. Some are old men at forty, others are boys at sixty. Why should the ministry as a calling be blamed for those who by nature age prematurely?

Again: It has been fairly shown by careful scientific processes that nicotinized nerves and brain cells can not hold up so long and work so well as nerves and cells that are purely nourished and perfectly normal. The tobacco habit is an enemy to a youthful and useful old age.

I dare to venture upon the following conclusion: Given—by nature, vitality and good health; by grace and determination, freedom from narcotics, laziness and side-issues; by Providence, a good education; by habit and inclination, hard work; by the Holy Spirit, unction — given all this, and the preacher stands a better chance than other professional men of pushing his live-line up till his "aching eighties" lay him—not sadly on the shelf—but sweetly under the sod.

A HILL TALE

A Blunt old Colorado Miner on Postum.

A clergyman may be eloquent, may use the choicest language, dressing his earnest desire to help his fellowman in the most elevated, chaste and beautiful language, and yet not touch the hearts of his hearers. Another man, having little education and no grace of speech whatsoever, may tell his message in the common, everyday vernacular he is used to, and the simple faith that glows within him carries quick conviction with it. Such a man writes from the towering peaks of Colorado, preaching of Postum:

"I had drank coffee all my life until it about killed me, when I concluded to try Postum, and in a short time I got relief for the terrible misery I suffered from coffee.

"When I drank coffee I bloated up so that I could not breathe at times; my nerves were so shaky that I could not hold myself still.

"But thanks to Postum I am all well now and can say that I hope to remain so.

"I was very much disgusted with it the first time I tried it, but had it made stronger and boiled longer till it tasted as good as good coffee."

No amount of rhetorical frills and literary polish could add to the convincing power of the old miner's testimony. Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

The Evangelistic Campaign in Greater Kansas City

By W. F. Richardson

In harmony with the spirit of evangelism so prevalent among the Disciples of Christ, the Christian churches of the twin Kansas Cities on either side of the Missouri-Kansas line have planned for simultaneous revival meetings, to begin October 22. Fifteen congregations will then be working and praying together for the salvation of souls; and in every part of the two cities the sound of the gospel will be heard from night to night, for several weeks. One of our most active congregations, the Central, of Kansas City, Kansas, will be unable to join us in this crusade, as they are building a new house of worship, and will not have it far enough along to occupy, while they cannot use the hall where they now meet except on Sunday. But they will be ready to follow us a little later, and the spirit of our united evangelism will not be lost in their meeting. The Independence Boulevard Church, which was dedicated on September 17, has been in a successful meeting since that date, which will doubtless continue till after the others begin, so we count them as belonging to our simultaeous movement.

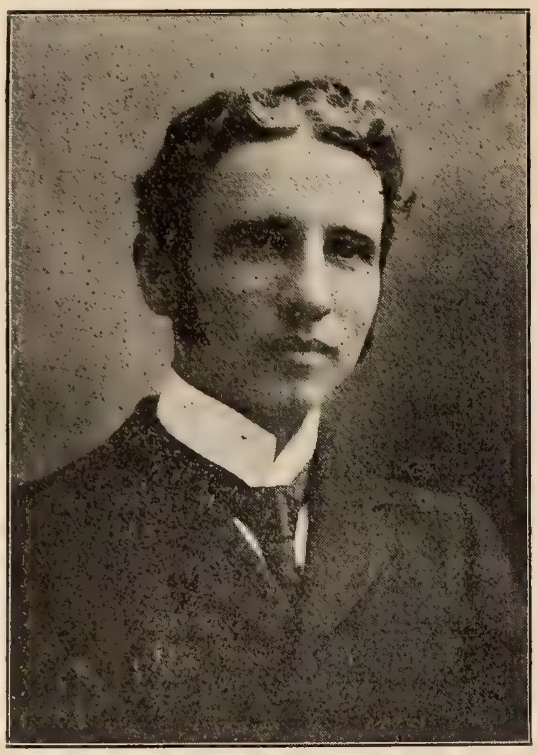
O. N. ROTH,
Argentine, Kan.

The plan of our meeting is more simple than in some other places where like revivals are being held. While we have a central committee, which has served the churches in securing evangelists and singers, and will do something in the way of joint advertising, yet each church and pastor has been left in complete control and direction of their own meeting, and each pays its own expenses, save in the case of our colored brethren, where some aid is rendered. We will endeavor to use the same methods, for the most part, in advertising the various meetings, and will have a union meeting, for prayer, conference and reports, every Monday morning, at the First Church.

Together with the effort to bring sinners to Christ, we shall use all proper means to seek out and persuade to unite with our various congregations, the many Disciples of our Lord who are now living in our city without enjoying the fellowship of his people. From a canvass made by our churches a few years ago, we believe the unaffiliated Disciples in this city to number not less than 2,500. If these can be induced to take their place with the people of God, it will make the meetings memorable in the history of our cause here. We expect to reach many who have never heard our simple plea for New Testament Christianity, and who need but to see its scripturalness and beauty to be won to its acceptance. We ask the prayers of the children of God everywhere, that the name of Jesus Christ may be exalted, and his kingdom greatly extended, by our united labors.

THE CHURCHES AND MEN ENGAGED IN THE CAMPAIGN.

Kansas City stands at the open door of the great west, and there are men yet living who saw its beginnings, as a rude frontier hamlet, at the eastern end of the old Santa Fe Trail. From this point the emigrant trains started across the Great Desert, bound for California, or bearing on their "prairie schooners" the significant legend, "Pike's Peak or Bust!" It is said by the older settlers that many of these primitive vehicles returned, after a year or two, bearing on their torn and dirty canvas sides a most impressive but profane statement of the "busted" outcome of their pilgrimage. Three hundred thousand human souls now find a dwelling place at the mouth of the Kaw, or Kansas, River, and a network of railroads leads out to every point of the compass. Our city is widely known as one of the most enterprising and rapidly growing of American cities. Lying almost at the meeting point of the four great states of Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, the effect of aggressive work for Christ in this city is certain to tell upon the smaller communities of these commonwealths.



GEORGE H. COMBS.

L. P. KOPP.

The first Christian church in Kansas City was organized about the year 1855, by Elder Francis R. Palmer, then a resident of Independence, Mo. Its first meetings were in a log school house, from which the meetings were moved to the city hall, when that structure was built, and here the church worshiped for several years. In 1859 the first house of worship was erected at the corner of 12th and Main, Bro. T. P. Haley, then a young preacher of unusual promise and power, preaching the dedicatory sermon, and following with a "protracted" meeting, as our people were wont then to call them. His brother, Henry H. Haley, became its pastor, and served the church faithfully until the spring of 1862, when he was compelled to abandon the field on account of the border disturbances of the civil war. He returned in 1866, and remained until the fall of 1870, greatly strengthening the church by his able ministry and godly life. During the war the church was ministered to irregularly by various visiting preachers, mostly chaplains in the army. Later pastors were: J. W. Mountjoy, G. W. Longan, Alexander Procter and J. Z. Taylor. In the fall of 1881, T. P. Haley was called to the pastorate, and for thirteen years led the church in a most aggressive and successful work. The present house of worship was built early in his ministry, and missions began to be established in divers parts of the city, which have grown into strong churches. He resigned in the summer of 1894, and was succeeded by the present pastor, W. F. Richardson. During the present pastorate the house of worship has been remodeled, and the growth of the congregation, while not so rapid as in former years, steadily maintained. The church is now surrounded by business, and has become a "downtown" church, whose work must be largely done among the transient classes. During the last ten years it has dismissed hundreds of members to the new churches that have been established in the residence parts of the city. Brother Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Ky., evangelist, and L. G. Sprague, of California, Mo., will assist in the meetings with this church.

R. O. YOUTZ.

The largest congregation in the city is the Independence Boulevard, formerly Sixth and Prospect, of which Bro. G. H. Combs is pastor. They have a membership of over 1,500, and have just dedicated their new house of worship, at a cost of $125,000. Not a cent of debt rests on the building, and on dedication day six thousand dolllars was raised for missions. Bros. R. A. Long and D. O. Smart, whose names are known everywhere for their zeal and generosity, have been from the beginning leaders in the work of this church, which started as a mission from the First. It has had but two pastors, the lamented and honored John A. Brooks, and the present beloved minister, who has been thirteen years with them. Scoville and Smith are now in a meeting with this church, and already nearly two hundred have been added to their membership.

The first mission to be established in Kansas City was that which has grown into the West Side Church, at 20th and Penn. While this has never attained to very great strength, owing to the nature of the field about it, yet the work done has been one of the most faithful in our city. The Sunday school has always been flourishing, and thousands of lives have been blessed through the work of the faithful band there. Struggling with adversity and debt, the church never faltered in its endeavors, and they are now enjoying their reward. With debts all paid, and a good preacher leading them forward, they are hopeful and happy. Among their pastors the better known have been E. S. Muckley, E. W. Thornton, B. M. Easter, and the present pastor, W. O. Thomas. Brother Easter died suddenly in the very midst of his successful work with this church, in April, 1903, on the very eve of the jubilee service appointed to celebrate the payment of their church debt, which he had done so much to secure. Brother Thomas will probably do his own preaching in their meeting.

The Forrest Avenue Church is best known in connection with the long pastorate of A. W. Kokendoffer, who labored successfully with that people for ten years, leaving them for his present pastorate in Mexico, Mo. J. H. Hughes was the first minister, and following Brother Kokendoffer have been J. P. Pinkerton, Harold Bell Wright, and the present pastor, H. M. Barnett, who has just come from a fruitful ministry in Wellington, Kan., to lead this people forward to greater victories. Brother Barnett is a graduate of Eureka College in the class of 1896, and has held pastorates in Sheldon and Rantoul, Ill., before going to Kansas. He will do his own preaching in the meeting, and has a fine chorus choir to assist. This church is situated very much as is the First Church, and is doing a good work for a multitude of young people in the boarding houses around it.

The South Side Church, formerly known as Springfield Avenue, was next in order of time to Forrest Avenue, and sprang, like the others, from a mission Sunday school. Under the pastorate of H. S. Gilliam a house of worship was built at Thirty-first and Charlotte. W. R. Jinnett succeeded him, and served a year or two, when the church was without a pastor for a time. Bro. T. P. Haley, who had been resting from active work for several years, was induced to become their pastor and under his ministry the church has greatly prospered, having now three or four hundred members, and having on October 8 entered into the handsome basement of their new church building on Linwood boulevard. When completed, this will be one of the best churches in our city, and the field in which its work lies is second to none in importance and possibilities.. Brother Haley preaches with all his wonted force and eloquence, and holds a place of peculiar regard in the hearts of all our people here.

The South Prospect Church, of which J. J. Morgan is pastor, has enjoyed the labors of a number of brilliant young men, among whom we recall the names of Chas. A. Young, F. N. Calvin, Eugene Brooks, A. B. Phillips, W. S. Priest and E. W. Thornton. Perhaps we ought to class Bros. O. P. Shrout and Morgan with the young men, likewise, for they show no sign of age except as maturity of thought and ripeness of judgment may be supposed to argue additional years. Under all these men the church prospered, and it is now one of the prominent centers of our work in this city. Brother Morgan came to them from Woodland, Cal., a few years ago, among his preceding pastorates being Warrensburg, Mo., and Covington, Ky. He is a very fine sermonizer, a faithful and wise pastor, and much loved by his people. Bro. Arthur N. Lindsay, of New Franklin, Mo., will help Brother Morgan in his meeting.

The Hyde Park Church is lineal successor to the old Westport Church, which antedates even the First Church of this ctiy. Originally it was practically a country church, its membership being chiefly farmers living around about the then village of Westport. A small brick building was early erected, which was occupied by the church until the completion of its present elegant structure, which has become so well known by reason of the labors of Bro. R. H. Fife in its construction. Meanwhile Westport had been incorporated into Kansas City, and the name of the congregation changed to correspond with the beautiful district of our city in which it is situated. Many ministers have given faithful service in this place, but the real progress began when R. H. Fife came from Westport three or four years ago. Under his vigorous leadership, a handsome new church was erected and the membership largely increased. He resigned the work there to take up evangelistic work, in which he is becoming widely and favorably known. Bro. L. S. Cupp, for four years past pastor at Platte City, has just entered on his labors with his church, and will start off by holding his own meeting, in which he will have the hearty co-operation of his people.

About eight years ago Bro. F. L. Bowen was called to the work of city missionary, under the direction of our joint board. He and his consecrated wife have done a wonderful work during these years, but have wrought beyond their strength, and are both suffering the penalty in their impaired health, which is a great grief to all the Disciples in Kansas City. We are praying and hoping that their recovery may be speedy and complete. As the direct result of their labors, we have now three more good churches in our city. The Jackson Avenue Church, which Brother Bowen is now serving as pastor, has had a phenomenal growth and numbers four hundred members, with a fine church building, and every department of work in splendid condition. Bro. George L. Peters, of Mound City, Mo., will aid Brother Bowen in their revival.

Ivanhoe Church grew under the care of Brother Bowen until it demanded the labors of a pastor for all his time. Bro. Fred Nichols ministered to them until he returned to Eureka College to complete his course, when Bro. L. P. Kopp was called from Danville, Ill., and is giving them faithful and able service. The church is growing, and is destined to become much stronger, with the rapid growth of that quarter of the city. Brother Kopp will preach in his own meeting, but will have the assistance of Bro. Roy Youtz, of Des Moines, Ia., as a gospel singer.

Budd Park Church had a similar history to the Ivanhoe and Jackson Avenue Churches. Its growth soon demanded more time than could be given to it by the divided labors of our city missionary, and Bro. E. H. Williamson, of Butler, Mo., became its pastor. A true man of God, he gave it a year or more of diligent service, when he resigned to accept a call to Brunswick, Mo., and Bro. B. L. Wray came from a successful pastorate at Lanark, Ill., to succeed him. The outlook is bright, and the church hopeful. Brother Wray will hold his own meeting.

By the zeal and consecration of a young woman, Miss Lowe, now Mrs. T. A. Abbott, a mission Sunday school was maintained for some time in Sheffield, a manufacturing suburb of the city, which finally grew into a church. A good house of worship has been erected and paid for, and Bro. Arthur Stout has been serving them as pastor for several months. He is to be assisted in the meeting by Bro. H. G. Bennett, of Jefferson City, and it is believed that the church will be greatly built up thereby.

In Kansas City, Kan., four churches will co-operate in these meetings. We have already referred to the Central Church, of which Bro. S. W. Nay is pastor, and stated the reason for their postponement of the special evangelistic effort. This church has had a checkered career, the unfortunate parts of which have been due to unworthy preachers. At one time they owned a good house of worship, but lost it a few years ago. They are now erecting a good building, in a choice locality, and are full of hope and courage, under the splendid leadership of Brother Nay, who came from a very successful work at Leavenworth, Kan. Among the good and true men who have ministered to them in the past we recall the names of J. M. Kersey, B. Q. Denham, R. H. Fife, W. O. Thomas.

The First Church of Kansas City, Kan., usually known as Armourdale, grew out of a mission Sunday school started years ago under the leadership of Bro. T. S. Ridge, a young business man of the First Church in this city. A house of worship was erected, a pastor engaged, and the work steadily grew, until the awful flood of 1903, when the building was badly damaged, and the congregation scattered, by the destruction of their homes. The house was put in order by the brethren of our churches here, and they have slowly recovered from that calamity, until the church is now beginning to resume its former strength. Bro. A. C. Finch is the present pastor, and has done a most excellent work with this faithful people. He will hold his own meeting, unless he can secure the aid of a brother with whom he is now corresponding.

Argentine, Kan., is a thriving suburb of this city, which, however, has received a severe blow by the removal from it of the extensive smelting plant which furnished so many men employment. But its railroad interests ensure its continued growth. Bro. O. N. Roth, a graduate of Kentucky University and Bible College in the class of 1904, is doing a good work as pastor. He will conduct his own meeting. They have a good church building, favorably located.

We understand that the North Side Church, of Kansas City, Kan., of which Bro. C. P. Smith is pastor, expects to hold revival services during November, with Bro. L. L. Carpenter as the preacher, which ensures a fine meeting. Brother Carpenter dedicated their new basement on October 8, and the buiding, when completed, will be handsome and commodious.

One of our colored churches, that at Twenty-first and Summitt, of which Bro. S. W. Scott is pastor, joins in the simultaneous meetings. Brother Scott will be assisted by one of his brethren from Kansas City, Kan., Brother Scott is doing an excellent work among his people here, and his church is slowly but steadily growing.

All our churches in Kansas City are comfortably housed, or are just completing their buildings. Nearly all are out of debt, and the buildings erected are usually the result of co-operation between our various congregations, through the agency of our joint board. We are hoping and praying for a great ingathering during the coming revival.

Our Budget.

Special telegram to the Christian-Evangelist.

—Connersville, Ind., October 16.—Dedicated new church yesterday; cost $40,000; all the debt, $16,000, raised; great rejoicing. F. M. Rains gave the address.

Jas. C. Burkhardt, Pastor.

Special telegram to the Christian-Evangelist.

—Mannington, W. Va., October 16.—Dedicated new church yesterday; $14,000 building cleared of debt in thirty minutes; President Cramblet dedicated church and parsonage with lot worth $18,000; all acquired in two years.

Clarence Mitchell.

—C. J. Kindred's work at Englewood, Chicago, continues to prosper.

—J. W. Loudermilk is in a meeting at Excelsior, Ark., with six additions at last report.

—T. L. Read has succeeded R. L. Wilson, now of Old Orchard, St. Louis, at South Chicago.

—Thomas Wallace, minister at Mt. Ayr, Ia., reports $50 offering for missions recently and the work moving on successfully.

—At Kalamazoo, Mich., where H. H. Halley is the faithful pastor, a fifteen thousand dollar property has just been dedicated.

—The church at Bethany, Ill., S. E. Sines, minister, was rededicated October 15, J. Fred Jones, of Bloomington, having charge of the services.

—Notwithstanding W. H. Trainum is giving much time to his studies at Northwestern University, the church at Waukegan is gaining under his ministry.

—J. Frank Green has had his salary increased by an appreciative congregation at Mt. Pleasant, Mich., where a fine "union meeting" has just been held.

—Dr. Macklin has made use of every opportunity, while in this country, to perfect his surgical knowledge. He has just been attending the clinics at Chicago hospitals.

—Thomas Martin, Sandy Lake, Pa., is in a short meeting at Shamburg, and will be ready about November 12 to hold meetings wherever needed. Address him as above.

—Miss Pearl Denham, for some time C. R. Scoville's assistant at the Metropolitan Church, Chicago, is now Bro. H. O. Breeden's assistant at the Central Church, Des moines.

—The Foreign Society is taking steps to greatly enlarge the work in Norway. More attention will be given to the education of evangelists. The preaching force will be doubled.

—C. H. DeVoe is in a meeting at Wilkesbarre, Pa., assisting the pastor, E. E. Cowperthwaite, whom he mentions as "a splendid yoke-fellow." There have been five additions to date.

—Last week the Foreign Society received a direct personal gift of $2,500. This is a good start on the new missionary year. Enough of these will ensure $300,000 by September 30, 1906.

—All over the country, and especially in the cities, the churches are girding themselves for a forward movement. This is as it should be, and we anticipate the largest and most cheering results.

—Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, O., and R. Bruce Brown, of Yale, Mich., are different persons and no relation. Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, O., is not soliciting money outside of his own congregation for any purpose whatever.

—The Board of Church Extension has just issued annuity bonds Nos. 145 and 146 for $1,000 and $100, respectively. Others should be sending annuity money to help reach the million dollars which we want to get by our centennial in 1909.

—Laura B. Van Deusen began work with the church at West Point, Ill., September 25. She reports that the parsonage has been visited by a large company of brethren and sisters who left it well stocked with eatables. The outlook is encouraging.

—Our new church building at Sherman, Tex., will be formally opened October 22. M. M. Davis, of Dallas, will deliver the sermon and Leonard Dougherty, of Louisville, Ky., will have charge of the music. The cost of the building will be about $18,000.

—The Christian-Evangelist gives its readers this week some account of the simultaneous evangelistic campaign in greater Kansas City, with illustrations of preachers and churches, and our hearty wishes for the success of their united efforts.

—The church at Milwaukee, which C. M. Kreidler has left to take charge of the work at Twenty-fifth Street, Baltimore, has a membership of about 400. There were 85 additions during the past year. In Brother Kreidler's five years' ministry 400 were added.

—W. M. Taylor reports that he and his wife have arrived safely at Salt Lake City, Utah, and are gaining an insight into the work in that city. The brethren throughout the country will be interested to learn of the success of his work in the capital of Mormonism.

—W. T. Clarkson, formerly pastor of the Northside Church, Lawrence, Kan., has entered the Kansas State University and will get his degree next June, after which he expects to enter one of the larger eastern universities for advanced work, leading to the degree of Ph. D.

—The work on the new church building at Blue Mound, Ill., is progressing nicely. When finished the building will be one of the best in Central Illinois. The parsonage has also been enlarged and repainted at a cost of about $500, and the minister, W. H. Harding, has moved into it.

—The name of W. G. Surber, of Moberly, Mo., was somehow omitted from the report of the splendid Audrain county meeting given in the last issue of The Budget. His sermon on "Christianity an Absolute Necessity" was ably presented and contributed to the success of the meeting.

—One thing, however, we beg our brethren everywhere to remember, and that is that Christianity no more needs spreading abroad, over a wider field, than it needs deepening in the faith, convictions, and lives of those who profess it. Let the deepening and the widening go on together.

—A Christian church of fifteen members was organized in Miami, Fla., on October 8. A. M. Chisholm, state evangelist, reports that everything indicates that a strong church will be built up before long in that part of the state. Miami is a growing city, at the southern terminus of the East Coast railway.

—J. B. Hundley resigned his work at Bloomfield, Ky., Sept. 1. He visited his home in Virginia, and conducted a protracted meeting at Calhoun Street Church, Baltimore, Md., which closed Oct. 1. He returned to Kentucky via Norfolk, Va., where he spent two days in the state convention. He will engage in work at Canon City, Col., where he begins a meeting Oct. 15.

—F. T. Porter, secretary of the Fourteenth District of Indiana, reports a convention of the churches in that district with the Central Church, New Albany, October 4 and 5, with a strong program and good results. The district is moving forward with better organization toward larger results.

—Our assistant editor left the city on October 10 for a little fishing and hunting trip in Minnesota, where he was joined by his father, W. T. Moore, who has not yet lost his sporting blood. Muskallonge, deer, and smaller game are hereby warned to be on their guard! We wish them a delightful vacation.

—L. L. Carpenter recently dedicated a new and beautiful house of worship for the Disciples of Christ at Kalamazoo, Mich., where H. H. Halley is the hard-working and successful pastor. Brother Carpenter reports the day as one of great rejoicing, and predicts that a strong church will be built up in that growing city.

—Every Sunday school can use the splendid map offered by the Home Missionary Society free of cost to those pledging to observe Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America for five successive years. Send in your order without delay to Benj. L. Smith, corresponding secretary, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O.

—The program of the State Institute of the Indiana Christian Sunday School Association to be held at Greenfield, this week, October 17-19, should have been printed last week, but was overlooked. A good program has been arranged and a splendid convention is anticipated. The Editor of this paper hopes to be present.

—James Egbert reports that the brethren at St. Thomas, Ont., are giving in the good old apostolic way, and that in consequence a new church edifice will be built early in the spring. The college has just opened with a fine body of students. He says also that some of the best members are getting in line with the work of subscribing to The Christian-Evangelist.

—Mrs. Laura B. Thompson and little daughter, Eleanor, of Denver, wife and child of Leonard G. Thompson, corresponding secretary of Colorado, were among the passengers on the ill-fated steamship "St. Paul," which was wrecked near Point Gorda, Cal., on the night of October 4. All the passengers and crew were saved, but the ship and cargo were lost.

—Dr. Paul Wakefield and wife, of Springfield, Ill., who were recently appointed missionaries to China by the Foreign Society to go out September, 1906, have changed their plans and will depart at once. They will sail on the good ship Siberia, November 4, from San Francisco. They will be accompanied by Dr. W. E. Macklin and family, who are returning to Nankin, China.

—R. H. Fife reports good attendance and interest in his meeting at Little Rock, Ark. The "Arkansas Democrat," of that city, in an editorial, speaks of "at least two religious meetings" going on in that city at which there is a "large attendance," and says that great good is being accomplished by them. One of these is a union meeting, and the other is that conducted by Brother Fife.

—At the Disciples' social union banquet in Chicago, college presidents were the special guests. Professor McClintock expressed the hope that ere long there would be opposite the university buildings another noble building with its spires to the sky to express the interest Disciples have in "the special training of those who need the most training in all the world—the modern ministers."

—The following telegram brings good news from Canton, Ohio: "Twenty-three added to-day, making 230 in thirteen days. The end is not yet."—Welsheimer and Kendall."

—The dedication of the new church building at Mexico, Mo., has been fixed for December 10. F. M. Rains and J. H. Garrison are to assist the pastor, A. W. Kokendoffer, in the service.

—Homer T. Wilson has given up the pastorate of the church in San Antonio, Tex., and is now in the evangelistic field. He is at present in a good meeting at Enid, Okla. He is engaged to begin a meeting, to continue two weeks, in the South Broadway Church, Denver, Lord's day morning, October 29.

—Wm. J. Lockhart has resigned his work at Ottumwa, Ia., where he has greatly endeared himself to the people and where his success in the church has been marked, for the purpose of engaging in evangelistic work as that to which he believes God has called him. He goes first to Connellsville, Pa., to assist in the "Century Simultaneous Revival." His permanent address is 1508 23rd street, Des Moines, Ia.

—C. R. L. Vawter, of Indianapolis, Ind., has just closed some tent meetings in Pennsylvania. Besides giving part of his time this year to the Meridian Street Church (Olive Branch) of Indianapolis, Brother Vawter has held several good meetings, receiving 232 members into the congregations in his evangelistic work. He has decided to give full time either to evangelizing or to some church strong enough to employ him for full time.

—We are not surprised at the orders for extra copies of The Christian-Evangelist of last week containing the excellent sermon of Bro. O. L. Lyon, Bloomington, Ill., giving reasons for the change in his religious affiliations. The sermon was not only true in sentiment, or teaching, but its spirit is admirable. Bro. J. H. Gilliland speaks in high terms of praise of Brother Lyon. He should be given work at once with one of our churches.

—The editor of The Christian-Evangelist united in marriage, October 12, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Jeffress, Edwardsville, Ill. Miss Mary C. Jeffress and Mr. Solomon Hinckley Mudge. A large company of friends was present. Decorations were beautiful. Refreshments were served to the guests. It was a delightful occasion. The newly wedded pair will be "at home" in St. Louis, 5450 Vernon avenue, after November 15.

—The Alabama convention will be held at Athens, November 13-16, and all parties expecting to attend should send their names to Thomas Lenox. An excellent program has been arranged, among those taking part being Brethren McLean and Smith, of the National Societies, J. M. Mason, E. C. Henderson, A. R. Moore, L. O. Herrold, and R. Lin Cave, while some of the topics to be considered are extremely practical and helpful. We trust that this convention may do a great deal to advance our work in Alabama.

—Our church at Johnson City, Tenn., having been burned last May, a new site was purchased, which Adam B. Crouch reports is acknowledged as the best in the city for a church. The building now being erected will have a seating capacity of about eight hundred, will be of stone and white granite brick, and in every sense up-to-date. The cost will reach about $20,000, thus making it one of the best church buildings in the state. It is hoped it will be ready for dedication by November 1. J. Lem Keevil is the honored minister.

—The Missouri Ministerial Education Society, provided for in one of our Missouri state conventions, has been duly incorporated under the laws of Missouri. For the present year J. B. Jones, of Fulton, Mo., has been elected president; A. W. Kokendoffer, of Mexico, treasurer, and W. J. Lhamon, of Columbia, secretary. Those who have made pledges to this Ministerial Education Society should remit same as above indicated.

—The following card does not bring unexpected news, but we are sure it will evoke profound sympathy for our beloved brother in his bereavement: "Tuesday morning, October 10, the anniversary week of our first acquaintance, of our marriage, of the birth of our first-born, my wife, Maude, fell asleep, with a hand in her mother's and mine, leaving tender messages, the happiest I ever knew her. I knew how hard it is sometimes to live, but did not dream it is so easy and pleasant to die.

Canton, Mo. "Albert Buxton."

—T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark., is again visiting some of the churches in the interest of the church building enterprise at Hot Springs. He finds it difficult, he says, to make the brethren abroad understand the vaule to our cause of a strong church and a good church building at that great health resort, where people are coming from all parts of the world. We hope the churches will give him a hearing, as we have been on the ground and can testify to the great need of a good church building, wisely located, at that strategic place.

—"The seven hundred Bible schools in Illinois should observe November 26 unanimously and enthusiastically for at least two reasons: 1. The boys and girls should be in touch with our great Home Mission work as liberally, at least, as with the Foreign Mission work. 2. One-half the proceeds of the offering in Illinois is given to the Illinois Bible school work. Send immediately to B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O., for supplies for the day. Let every school join the movement," writes Marion Stevenson, state superintendent Illinois Bible schools.

—The Lansdowne Christian Church, of East St. Louis, Ill., was organized early in the year by members of the First Church who had moved out into the pleasant suburb of Lansdowne. There are now about thirty members. On October 1 the congregation was introduced to the wife of their pastor, C. O. Reynard, whom he had been expecting from Ohio for several weeks. They have just purchased a splendid lot in a desirable location for $500, which has been paid in full, and are now excavating for a foundation room, seating 300 people, which they hope to occupy in a few weeks.

—The best way to interest your Bible school in Home Missions is to give them a part in the observance of Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. The best help to the observance of the day is the exercise prepared by J. W. Carpenter, of Virginia, Ill., for the American Christian Missionary Society. Copies of this exercise may be obtained upon application to Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O. Our schools are observing this day more and more. It is a great educative factor in the future growth of all our missionary work, for Home Missions lie at the base of all missionary enterprises. One-half the receipts are sent directly to the state boards for the prosecution of home missionary work in the state contributing. For this reason it should be the aim of every Sunday school in every state to send in the largest offering possible, in November.

—Eliza F. Risk, who has formerly given money to the National Benevolent Association on the annuity plan, has just added $500 to her former benefaction. All the annuitants are greatly pleased with this arrangement. The association can use many thousands of dollars additional annuity money in the construction of the new orphanage in St. Louis and the enlargement of the Homes in Baldwin, Ga., and Jacksonville, Ill. Address Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, for information concerning the ministries of this association and the annuity plan of helping it.

—W. S. St. Clair, of Columbia, Mo., had an unusual experience and a close call recently. He and his wife were returning from the country, where they had been attending church, and were both drenched by a hard rain and electric storm on their way home. On entering the house Brother St. Clair preceded his wife into a room, took hold of the drop electric light globe with his left hand and the button with his right hand, when he found himself completely under the control of the current. Being unable to release himself, he screamed with pain, reeling about the room and was gradually becoming unconscious when his wife, taking in the situation, caught him in her left arm and with her right hand struck his arms so as to force his hands loose from the globe, which broke the current. He reports himself as all right once more.

—Will F. Shaw writes that the North-side (Chicago) brethren extend thanks to all who assisted them in their church-warming on September 17. Englewood, Jackson Boulevard, First Church, Douglas Park, Humboldt Park, Austin and Hyde Park gave pledges of from $5 to $75 each. Bro. C. G. Kindred called for $2,000 for a year's payment on Church Extension loan and repairs, and pledges amounting to $2,037 were given in response. The church has still a considerable burden to carry, and has raised about $4,000 for all purposes in about two months' time in cash and pledges. The Sunday school and church membership is increasing.

—B. H. Cleaver, Canton, Mo., secretary of the Board of Co-operation of the Ralls county (Mo.) churches of Christ, corrects a mistake recently made in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the effect that he was "re-elected president" of the county board of Ralls county. He says: "I have never held the office. Dr. W. T. Waters, of New London, a successful physician, is president; F. S. Alexander, county recorder, is treasurer. I am the secretary. He reports the number of churches co-operating as sixteen; value of property, $38,600; money expended, $5,486.79; with a net increase in the membership of the churches of 139. The above is a good showing and illustrates what counties can do when their churches work together.

—We have had a very delightful visit of several days in St. Louis, from Bro. J. S. Sweeney, of Paris, Ky., who has been stopping with a daughter of his living here. He preached for the First Church on Lord's day and spoke to the ministers' meeting in the office of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on Monday morning. Our stenographer reported his talk, and we intended it for this week's issue, but it has been crowded out till next week. Brother Sweeney went from here to Camden Point, Mo., and from there he goes south, preaching a series of sermons on first principles, than whom no man among us can do it better. For about four years he was unable to preach after his long pastorate at Paris, but he is at it now and proposes to die in the harness.

—The Independence Boulevard Christian Church established a Named Loan Fund in our Church Extension work on the first Sunday in October; a named loan fund amounts to $5,000. This fund was started by R. A. Long agreeing to give $2,500 provided the church would raise the other amount. This is the fourteenth named fund established in our Church Extension work. An individual establishes a named fund by giving $500 each year, and a church by giving $300 a year, until the $5,000 is completed. In each case a separate account is kept and the interest is retained in the fund. The General Drake fund, established in February, 1889, has built fifty-eight churches, and done the work of over $22,000. The Independence Boulevard Christian Church has paid in $500, and expects to pay out the fund very rapidly.

—There is no happier occasion in the year's life of any Bible school than the observance of Children's Day for Home Missions, and the widely increasing observance of that day among our people is one of the encouraging signs of the present hour. With the younger generation fixing their attention intelligently and with youthful enthusiasm upon the problems at our very door, there need be little fear for the missionary habit of the Church in the days to come. At this season of the year there is always bustle at the rooms of the American Christian Missionary Society, occasioned by the rush of orders for supplies for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. Though the day comes late in the season this year—November 26—the hurry orders have already increased the force and activity of the home office. We hope the schools' enlisted will surpass all records this year.

—T. A. Reynolds closed his pastorate with the Jackson Street Christian Church, Muncie, Indiana, October 1, and the "Morning Star" of that city reports a resume of the work accomplished by the church during his four years' pastorate, together with a synopsis of his sermon, which we regret our space prevents us from printing in full. The following extract, however, will be of interest to our readers: "When I came to you, you were paying interest on $13,000 indebtedness; your house of worship was badly in need of decoration; and you had even felt the necessity of reducing your pastor's salary. During these four years you have decorated your house of worship; installed a steam-heating plant; put in a beautiful pipe organ, made other similar improvements in the basement, the Sunday school room, on the doors, and have very largely reduced the debt against the church. Altogether you have paid out on indebtedness and improvements the splendid sum of over $14,000. During this time your missionary offerings have grown from year to year. This last year every offering has been a splendid advance on all previous offerings for missions in the history of the church. Also your church expenses have been met promptly, as they could be. During these four years nearly three hundred people have been added to your membership, and nearly all of them at the regularly weekly services. That your usefulness and power may grow with the months and years, and that your joy may increase, is the earnest prayer of your retiring pastor."

—The South Broadway Christian Church of Denver, Col., is moving on triumphantly toward its long desired consummation—the burning of the mortgage on its church, December 3, 1905. Bro. A. L. Pierce, who seems to have charge of the arrangements, has issued a letter on a red-letter letterhead addressed to the members, inviting them to "attend a bonfire to be held at the South Broadway Christian Church on the evening of Sunday, December 3, 1905. Ten thousand dollars worth of fuel will be consumed. We have it all but $1,999. We will get that before the match is touched. How much can you furnish?" Of course they will get it! That kind of faith that works by love and is mixed with shrewd common sense hardly ever fails. The debt used to be $22,000; it is now whittled down to the above figure, and it will go before the present year dies! B. B. Tyler, the veteran young pastor, has stood by his post all summer, not having missed a meeting since January 1—not only filling his pulpit but giving his exposition of the Sunday school lesson to a large audience of teachers representing the whole city. There are continual additions. In a personal letter under date of October 10 he writes to the Editor: "I am closing the best year's work of my life. During the year about two hundred people have been received into the church. I will begin my sixth year October 22. Homer T. Wilson will begin a meeting with us October 29 and be with us until November 12." He is preparing, as our readers know, for another Bible students' oriental cruise next spring.

DO GOOD

With your money and enjoy an income from it while you live by giving to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society on the ANNUITY PLAN. The income is large, uninterrupted, and certain for life. Interest is paid according to age of donor. There is no expense for repairs or taxes. A bond is given to insure prompt payment of interest, semi-annually. It is better than a government bond. Over two hundred gifts have been made, amounting to about $250,000. This plan is especially adapted to those fifty years of age, or older. Full particulars given upon request. Let us send you our illustrated booklet, free of charge.

—The Inter-Church Conference on Federation, which is to be held in New York from November 15 to 21 inclusive, will have on its program the names of leading clergymen and laymen of practically every Protestant religious body in this country. So notable a gathering has never before been held in this country, perhaps not in any other, and these men will discuss the great religious and social questions which affect all churches and are of deepest interest to all Christians. But a very small number of the great body of church-goers will be able to attend the conference in New York, and the announcement is therefore important that the complete proceedings, with the text of the addresses, will be published as soon as possible after the close of the meeting. It is to be an octavo volume of about eight hundred pages, and it is the purpose of the Committee on Publication to provide a book that in appearance, typography, illustrations, binding and all details of bookmaking, will reflect credit upon the conference and be an appropriate medium for the carrying of the message of the gathering to the Christian homes of the country. The book will cost two dollars per volume to produce, and the committee is now receiving advance subscriptions at that rate. As the size of the edition will be limited to the number of copies certain to be placed, those who wish copies of this permanent record of what is likely to rank as the most important religious gathering ever held in America, should communicate at once with the chairman of the committee, Mr. William T. Demarest, at the conference headquarters, 90 Bible House, New York City.

—The World's Fair Pavilion of the Christian Church, which was donated by our City Mission Board to Old Orchard, a beautiful suburb on our southwest border, has been remodeled and fitted up for a church and was dedicated on last Lord's day afternoon, T. A. Abbott, corresponding secretary of Missouri, officiating. We present on our first page a cut of the building as it now appears. The interior appears much as it did on the World's Fair Grounds, with the partitions all taken out, of course, except there has been an extension at the rear end, ten feet, in rear of what is now the pulpit, for baptistery and robing room. There is a basement under the whole building, which is an important addition to the usefulness of the building for church purposes. There was a good audience and Brother Abbott preached a strong sermon, following it with an appeal which resulted in raising over $1,500 towards paying for the expense of removing, re-erecting and remodeling the building. The brethren at Old Orchard gave very liberally, and were assisted some by outside friends. They have an historic building, however, and one that will answer their purposes for many years to come. The brethren throughout the country who contributed toward the erection of this building on the World's Fair Grounds—one of the best missionary investments we have ever made—will be glad to know that it is to be preserved for religious purposes and remain a perpetual memento of our missionary work in connection with the great Louisiana Purchase Exposition. Representatives from various churches in the city were present and the choir of the Hammett Place Church rendered a beautiful anthem as a part of the program. The Old Orchard Church served a free lunch in the basement to a large company of people who went directly from the churches in the city to the afternoon service.

Seventeenth Annual Report of the Board of Church Extension.

The Board of Church Extension of the American Christian Missionary Society presents herewith an extract of its seventeenth annual report, ending September 30, 1905.

Receipts through corresponding secretary—
Churches	$18,514.46
Annuities	21,715.00
Individuals, Sunday-schools, Y. P. S. C. E.	4,306.73
Bequests	1,984 88
Business in Christianity	133.75
Total cash receipts		$46,654.82
In addition to the above, Dr. William G. Logan, of Kansas City, Mo., has deeded to David O. Smart, Langston Bacon and Fletcher Cowherd, members of the board, in trust for the Church Extension Fund, and to secure the annuity to himself, improved real estate in Kansas City, Mo., conservatively estimated at		$50,000.00
Total cash and property secured by corresponding secretary for the year		$96,654.82
Receipts through treasurer—
Interest and rentals received by treasurer	$17,708.87
Principal returned on loans by treasurer	66,683 05
Miscellaneous by treasurer	36.65
Total collected by treasurer		$84,428.57
Grand total received from Oct. 1, 1904, to Sept. 30, 1905		$181,083.39
Fund statement to Sept. 30, 1905—
Amount returned on loans since the beginning		$369,868.69
Interest paid since the beginning		107,792.82
Total interest rec'd and loans returned		$477,661.51
Amount in extension fund including W. G. Logan fund		$529,184.35
Churches aided since the beginning		927
Churches that have paid their loans in full		411
Loans outstanding		516

LOANS FOR THE YEAR.

The board has paid or closed 105 loans, aggregating $135,900, and promised 89 others, aggregating $109,000. Our cash balance will soon be used up in closing these loans, as buildings are now being rapidly completed for the winter's work.

During the year 58 churches paid their loans in full, making 411 churches that have paid their loans in full to the board since the beginning of this work. This is a most commendable record. The total amount which these mission churches have paid back to the board on loans and in interest is $477,661.51. This proves beyond a doubt that the Church Extension plan works, and that the mission churches which have been helped appreciate this fund, and are returning the money which the brotherhood has loaned them for church building purposes. This should be inspiration enough for any individual or church to send liberal offerings to this fund.

OUR ANNUAL OFFERING.

During the year the churches, as churches, have sent $4,909.51 less than last year. There are about 200 less contributing churches. This falling off is undoubtedly due to the first three Sundays of September being stormy. The churches had no time to complete their offerings before our books closed. We confidently expect the churches to make up this deficit during October and November. Seven hundred churches that promised to take the offering have not yet been heard from. Many preachers did not return from the national convention in time to take the offering. These will be heard from in October. All October receipts will be published with our annual report.

In behalf of the board,

G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec.
David O. Smart, Pres.

Report on Statistics.

ADDENDA.

At the close of the year on September 30 the reports received indicated that our statistics would stand as follows:

Churches	11,110
Communicants	1,238,515
Bible schools	8,761
Enrolled in Bible schools	850,500
Ministers	6,675
Gain in membership is fully	30,000

This is not shown in the above table as large reductions were made in several states where statistics had not been carefully gathered.

The following table shows a gain in the general receipts of $414,760. The most important is that of missions.

Missionary receipts—
Foreign Christian Missionary Society	$ 255,923
Christian Woman's Board of Missions	175,409
American Christian Missionary Society	100,323
Board of Church Extension	96,655
State and district missions	216,217
Miscellaneous missions	30,000	$874,527
Education and benevolence—
Buildings and endowments of schools	$ 390,000
National Benevolent Association	79,732
Ministerial relief	8,291
Kentucky Widows' and Orphans' Home	8,000	$486,023
Local church work—
Ministerial support	$4,375,000
Incidental church expenses	1,094,000
Church buildings	728,000
Church and Bible school literature	350,000	$6,547,000
		$7,907,550

These reports indicate great activity in some respects and average growth in all respects. The watchword, "A Million Dollars for Missions by 1909," can easily be realized. It will require a gain of only about four per cent per annum to reach this, while we gained thirteen per cent this last year. It would require but little more gain during the new year than during the year just closed to reach the $1,000,000 mark by September 30, 1906. By a little effort all around, this can be done. The churches of Chrsit are rapidly becoming what they should be—the greatest missionary force on earth!

Statistical Secretary.

A Free Gift to Our Readers.

As editor and publisher of "The New Christian Quarterly," the undersigned had left over about one hundred volumes each of the years 1895-1896 of that periodical. As they are my personal property I have decided to make a free gift of them to any reader of The Christian-Evangelist on the following condition:

Any one sending us a new subscriber to The Christian-Evangelist at the regular price of $1.50, or who renews his own subscription for the year at the same price, will be entitled to either one of these volumes, the price of which is $2.00.

Any one sending us two new subscribers and $3.00, or renewing his own subscription for a year and sending us one new subscriber, and $3.00, will be entitled to both volumes.

We have been glancing through these volumes and have been impressed with the value of the articles contained in them and feel a strong desire that they should be in the hands of readers who would appreciate them and be benefited by them. Here are a few of the leading articles and writers in Volume IV, of the year 1895:

"World-Wide Missions as a Motive to Christian Union," by the Editor; "The Opportunity of the Church of Today," by George H. Combs; "Our Religious Journals and World-Wide Missions," F. D. Power; "Christian Education," H. W. Everest; "The Snatching Away of Paul," J. S. Lamar; "The Work of the Holy Spirit," B. F. Manire; "Inspiration," J. J. Haley; "Some Lost Arts of the Church and How They are Being Regained," F. D. Power; "Origin of the Distinctive Dogmas of the Latin Church," B. A. Hinsdale; "A Great Statesman on Christianity," W. Durban; "Agnosticism and Teaching," H. W. Everest; "Liberty and Its Limitations," W. T. Moore; "The Transient and Permanent Elements of the Campbell Reformation," by the Editor; "The Relation of the Ministry to Moral and Social Reforms," A Symposium; "The Moral and Religious Training of Children," B. A. Hinsdale; "The Question of Name," Edward Scribner Ames; "The Relation of Higher Criticism to the Study of the Bible," Herbert L. Willett; "Our Relation to Other Religious Bodies," W. H. Martin; "The Religious Renaissance in the East," Wm. Remfry Hunt; "The Institutional Church," B. A. Jenkins.

The following are some of the leading articles and writers in Vol. V, 1896: "Alexander Campbell," R. T. Matthews; "A Plea for Enlarged Ministerial Education," Charles Louis Loos; "The Protestant Principle Applied in the Current Reformation," J. C. Hay; "Zwingli and Alexander Campbell," J. J. Haley; "Some Reasons for Restudying the Beginnings of the Present Reformation," Herbert L. Willett; "Religious Authority," Tauler; "Matthew 5:1-16: A Study," George Plattenburg; "The Life and Work of Barton W. Stone," B. B. Tyler; "John Locke and Alexander Campbell," Edward Scribner Ames; "The Church Ancient and Modern," A. M.

[From "The Louisville Courier-Journal"]

"THE VICTORY OF FAITH," DR. POWELL'S NOTABLE BOOK.

In an eminent degree the author of these eloquent sermons and addresses possesses the ability of awakening in his readers a desire to lead the spiritual life. The power to apprehend the unseen, he says, is inherent, and he proceeds to expound the faith which is God's gift, and able to perform mighty works.

Every page breathes spirituality. The senses are pressed into the background and the reader is moved to escape the slavery of sin and lead the higher life of the soul. Life is materialistic, it is bounded by time. The real world is the invisible world and faith is its gateway. The preacher lauds the beauty of holiness, he leads step by step from doubt to faith, from faith to immortality. He says:

"Right living sharpens the soul's vision. One may so brutalize his nature as to be unable to see spiritual things at all."

Not that he condemns simple, intellectual belief in the Gospels, but it is the faith of the heart that brings eternal happiness.

One of his finest chapters is called "A Soul Battle." From man's dual nature of spirit and sense comes the clash. A man asks what is the use of being good, but this honest doubt is not sinful. There is hope for the doubter, but he must fight his own battles, must solve his own problems. It is not good to express disbelief. A man must not disturb belief in another unless he has something better to offer. But he draws a sharp line between doubt and infidelity. The infidel asserts, "There is no God." The doubter asks, "Is there a God?" The first assertion is the result of a hardened mental condition; the second is often the precursor of faith.

The book is truly inspiring. The sermon called "Easter Hopes" is a veritable pæan, a triumphant song of the resurrection that lifts man above earthly things. Dr. Powell possesses that gift of sympathy that can see beneath the surface. He understands human weakness so well that he lends the strength of his own enlightened mind to overcome it. His words beget the purpose and desire for right living. "A man that does not believe in God does not believe in morality." And he shows morality as being that belief in God that can enable even the weakest man to attain the Christlike character.

He does not believe in a material hell. "Dante is sublime poetry, but miserable psychology." Incapacity for repentance is hell. And then by contrast he discourses on heaven. Is there a heaven? Heaven is cause and effect. "As a man soweth that shall he also reap," is his theme. And so this true, earnest disciple raises another altar and burns heavenly incense.

The Victory of Faith and Other Sermons. By E. L. Powell. Published by the Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis. $1 postpaid.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Northeast Iowa Convention.

The Northeast Iowa District Convention, held at Waterloo, Ia., had a larger attendance than in several years. The reports were good, showing 708 additions, and as several churches failed to report, there is a possible gain of at least 800 members. As removals might be estimated at 300,there is a net gain of about 500 members to the 57 congregations. Foreclosure proceedings on the mortgages on two buildings were reported; one of them will probably be saved. One other congregation will undoubtedly be organized before January 1 at Cedar Falls.

The heroism of the Waterloo congregation was manifest on all sides, and the noble effort upon their part is commendable. It is their hope to build at least a $20,000 church during the coming year on the best location in West Waterloo, their property being situated on the corner opposite the Carnegie Library.

The officers for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Noah Garwick, Waterloo; vice-president, G. A. Hess, Charles City; secretary and treasurer, G. B. Van Arsdall, Cedar Rapids. G. A. Hess.

Mississippi.

Did you ever have the exquisite joy of preaching to a great crowd of negroes? Last Sunday afternoon I went, by invitation, to a negro Baptist church in our city and preached to a large and enthusiastic audience. I began by saying my remarks might seem to them what a bitter medicine does to a child, but I would press it to their lips in the same love and faithfulness that would move a mother with her sick offspring.

Cries came from all over the house, "Pour your medicine out; we are here to swallow." For thirty minutes I talked as frankly to them of their failings, needs and remedies as if I had been talking "behind their backs." You cannot imagine the effect. Men, women and preachers (half the men are always preachers) leaned forward as if to catch every word. Every one cried his or her approval or endorsement aloud. After I had "pasted" them with a "hot shot" several voices would cry, "We are here yet!" and such expressions as "Listen!" "Hear the man!" "Now he's preachin'!" etc., were almost constant.

Those people had begun their services in the morning. I reached them at 3:30 and the minister was still preaching. They had had no food or water all this time, but willingly sat down again and heard me till after four, then dismissed for a baptismal service and a little food, and went at it again at dark to continue until midnight. What other people would have listened to me after their long fast and service? I would like to tell some of the things to which they listened and gave their hearty "amens," but The Christian-Evangelist is always supplied with such an abundance of good things that I can not hope for the space. The preacher at least was made a better man by this service with the people among whom he was reared. May an all wise God guide these simple children and lead them into better things.

Mississippi has suffered much this season from quarantines. The fever has not hurt us much, in fact we have been unusually healthy, but quarantines have almost paralyzed evangelistic work.

It will soon be time for boys' and girls' rally day for home missions. It is time now to prepare for it. Send at once to Benj. L. Smith for a supply of programs and get up the exercise. Your Sunday school workers and churches owe it to your children to give them this joy; you owe it to home missions to observe this day. Do you need another incentive? Here it is: Fifty per cent of all rally day offerings is returned to the mission board in the state from whence it came. Mississippi churches, remember this.

Ho, for Water Valley, November 6-9! Yes, this will be our very best state convention. W. W. Phares, Cor. Sec.

Northern California.

Some one has said the great San Francisco convention is now a matter of history. This is not quite true. It is rather a matter of life. It still lives in the minds and hearts of the people of this state. The truth is it can never become wholly a matter of history. It brought to us an inspiration destined to play a noble part in all our future labors. It set before us a lofty ideal, and inspired within us a faith that is imperishable. Herein is our compensation. The songs ceased, the benediction was pronounced and the throngs departed; but the spirit of that great assembly, with its large faith, its magnificent courage and its enduring hope, remains with us, an inspiration and a prophecy.

The Scoville meeting in Oakland, which closed a few days ago, resulted in 148 additions. The sum of $14,000 was raised toward the erection of a suitable home for this growing church. T. A. Boyer is pastor, and as a preacher ranks with the best in the city. During the meeting the Oliphant Sisters, well-known evangelists on the Pacific Coast, united with the church. Henceforth their talents will be consecrated to the restoration of God's kingdom to the earth.

The writer has just returned from a trip among the churches along the California Northwestern Railway. He was gratified to find, particularly in the larger cities, that our churches are decidedly in the lead in all religious efforts. Peter Colvin at Santa Rosa, G. W. Brewster at Healdsburg, and Otha Wilkison at Ukiah, are bringing things to pass. Splendid work is also being done in some of the smaller churches.

The Church of Christ in California is looking up, not because it is on its back and can not look elsewhere, but because it is made up of some of God's choicest people, and has back of it a strong, clean ministry. True, the streams of immigration that pour over the Rockies into this state occasionally bring us some "driftwood." But this soon finds its way to the bank or rubbish-heap, where it is generally allowed to remain in "innocuous desuetude."

Our working force at present is inadquate. We need about ten strong men for as many pastorless churches. Four of these churches can pay from $1,000 to $1,200 per year. The others can pay from $400 to $800 per year. The writer will be glad to correspond with good, clean men in other parts of the country who would like to come to California. Enclose stamp and a letter of recommendation from the corresponding secretary of the state in which you live. Only men who have been successful can hope to be considered. But before you write read the following from a letter recently received, that you may know what the average church on this coast is looking for:

"We want an educated man, not too old. He must be a good preacher, good voice, delivery, appearance, etc. He must be a good organizer and financier. We want him to be a good pastor, one who will call on everybody. His wife must be a good singer, able to manage the choir and lead the Sunday school."

"How much can you pay?" was asked.

"Well, if he draws big crowds and is good at raising money we can pay $600 a year."

Smile if you will, but it is plain that our churches know a good thing when they see it. D. A. Russell, Cor. Sec.

Hiram College.

Hiram College opened its fall term September 26, with a good attendance. Many new faces appear in the faculty as well as among the students. President C. C. Rowlison, though elected last year, really begins his administration of actual college life this fall. Charles E. Corey, who recently received the degree of Ph. D. from Yale, is instructor in philosophy. Henry H. Lane, of the University of Chicago, has the newly established chair of biology. Miss Alice Persons succeeds Prof. C. T. Paul in the chair of Modern Languages. Francis J. Sadlier is at the head of the department of music, assisted by Nelson A. Sprackling and Miss Luse. Fred C. Brown has supervision of the gymnasium and athletics. Mrs. Walker has oversight of the halls and Miss Chattie Hobson is teacher of oratory. J. O. Newcomb is secretary to the president and treasurer of the college. We are anticipating a great increase in college enthusiasm and prosperity from this large inflow of new life into our faculty, the greatest in fact for years.

At the opening chapel service F. A. Cotton, state superintendent of public instruction of Indiana, delivered an inspiring address on "Complete Education." Prof. E. B. Wakefield, who has so ably officiated as acting president for the past two years, resumes his work in the biblical department.

MRS. STEESE'S BABY

Cured of Terrible Eczema by Cuticura and Skin Made Clear as New-Born Babe's.

"My little daughter was covered with sores and her face was terribly disfigured. I called in three doctors, but she grew worse. Neighbors advised Cuticura, and before I had used half of the cake of soap and box of ointment the sores had all healed, and my little one's skin was as clear as a new-born babe's. I would not be without Cuticura again if it cost five dollars, instead of 75 cents, which is all it cost us to cure our baby."—Mrs. G. J. Steese, 701 Coburn Street, Akron, O.

Iowa Notes.

Lohrville, Ia., is a place of 600 to 800 people, in one of the richest agricultural sections of Iowa, and has recently become much more important by the crossing of three important lines of railroad. For a number of years several of the best women in the town and vicinity have worked zealously in an aid society and, without a single man directly interested, had secured a church lot. After long urging, the state board sent C. G. Stout to their help. A tent was pitched on their lot and at the close of eight weeks, during which there were 61 baptisms, a church was organized with 83 members, including several of the most substantial business men. A very promising Sunday school was started and all other auxiliaries of a live missionary church, and a pastor will soon be provided. With no special effort $1,800 is already provided for a building fund.

An open air service was held after the tent had been folded, at which there were eight confessions, and four more at the water's edge at the baptismal service at a late hour at night. In connection with this, ground was broken for the church building, after the fashion of the Drake Bible building at the state convention, by means of a plow and rope, drawn by the happy people. The spirit in which all this was done is shown by the following letter, which we are authorized to print, handed to Brother Stout, very unexpectedly, at his departure, by the M. E. preacher, several of whose flock had been baptized in the meeting.

Lohrville, Ia., Sept. 25, 1905.

To All Whom It May Concern:—The Rev. Chas. G. Stout, evangelist, has just closed an eight weeks' meeting at this place with great success.

I most gladly give this unsolicited testimonial to the fact that his work has been brotherly and fair and that his spirit has been that of a true servant of God.

A man of strong personality and positive ideas, he is generous to those who differ from him. I esteem him a grother beloved in the Lord. I am respectfully,

Allen Bishop.

It would be an infinite gain to our cause if all our evangelists could learn to do their work thus, in the spirit of the Master.

J. M. Hoffman, state C. W. B. M. evangelist, visited Rinard, a new railroad station six miles east of Lohrville, where we have had a few people at a country school house, and raised all the money necessary to build a house, which is well under way; when it is completed he will hold a meeting in it. Brother Hoffman held a short meeting at the Ninth and Shaw Mission, Des Moines, with nine additions, and is now in a promising meeting at Grant Park.

Joel Brown, who is combining evangelistic work with his efforts for Drake University, has just closed a meeting with 65 additions at Oakland, Ia.

The corner stone of the Drake Bible building was laid with appropriate ceremonies and a large attendance, September 28. It is to be a fine building and the walls of the second story are now rising. President Bell reports that Drake University is maintaining its regular habit of breaking all previous records and that the present enrollment indicates an attendance of 1,700 to 1,800 for the year, which will be a good increase.

There are have been 66 additions to the University Church the last three Lord's days at regular services; the greater part of these was the usual influx of students with letters, but among them were persons from the Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran, Congregational and Episcopal churches, one of whom is a promising young preacher, and seven from the world.

This church begins a meeting October 15, led by Brother Medbury and his accomplished assistant, Miss Pauline Wambaugh.

St. Joseph Notes.

Last Lord's day was an eventful day with us in this city. We dedicated our new Woodson chapel in the north end. It is a substantial brick building, handsomely furnished, situated in the center of a large and important section of the city. The property to date has cost about $6,500. There was a debt of $2,700, which we asked the people to pay, and they responded with a subscription of $4,200. They have about 75 members. For fifteen years the work has been in charge of W. E. Woodson, cashier of the St. Joseph Gas Co. We are following the dedication with a protracted meeting. The outlook for the congregation is very promising. They will be wanting a pastor soon.

Lord's day morning, October 8, our heroic Mitchell Park Church burned a note for $400, making in all $900 they have paid upon their church debt this year, leaving a balance of $1,500 yet due. They have about 225 members, having added 28 this year. Besides keeping up their regular expenses and making the above payments they have raised $73 for missions. Under the able administration of their pastor, C. A. Lowe, they seem to be entering upon a new era of activity.

We now have in St. Joseph six congregations, with five buildings and five settled pastors, and a total of about 1,800 members.

C. M. Chilton.

Texas.

Texas notes are written from the great northwest. Here in the Panhandle of Texas is an area as big as Illinois that has been called the plains and given up to the ranchmen until now it is on the market and is selling rapidly at from $5 to $15 per acre. Northern people are the chief buyers. Among the number are to be found Disciples. For information of those who would come west and grow up with the country, I would call attention to Hereford, where we have a good church to which Bro. Jesse B. Haston has been called to minister. Brother Haston is a well known and beloved minister. Here also is located the Panhandle Christian College, presided over by Charles Quincy Barton, a young man who has proved his ability as an educator. This school has just had a fine opening and bids fair to be one of our best colleges. The climate is delightful; the altitude 3,600 feet. Here where yesterday only the ranchman—few and far between—with his herds was to be found, today we have thrifty, growing towns, good schools, good society. What an opportunity for home mission work!

I am spending some weeks in this vast country, grouping weak churches and mission points, and arranging for the location of regular ministers with such groups. This is my third west Texas tour this summer and fall. As a result no less than nine new preachers will live and labor in west Texas. No less than forty new points will be supplied with regular preaching. About ten of the forty places have church houses. We must build in Texas no less than 100 houses in the next year to supply the pressing demand. A church which can pay a minister for half or one-fourth of his time is selected, the preacher locates with that church and under the direction of its leading members labors at mission points nearby. We have executive committees chosen by the brethren in each district and take pledges in all the district for the support of these missions. This brings the work close to the people and the opposition to our mission work is yielding. No less than ten preachers who two years ago were opposed to our organizations—or thought they were—are now laboring under the direction of our organized work. We need now men who can work for $50 or $60 per month at four to eight points to the man. Only true and faithful men can succeed here. We have a people here of high grade in intelligence, integrity and rugged common sense.

We are to hold the Panhandle Christian Convention at Amarillo, October 13-15. Amerillo is the queen city of northwest Texas and has a wide-awake church of Christ. W. H. Bagby has been called to the work there but has not yet accepted.

Texas Christian University, Carlton College, Add-Ran-Jarvis College, Carr-Burdette and Panhandle Christian—all Christian Church schools—have opened very auspiciously. We are looking forward to November 5, expecting it to be the greatest day for Texas missions ever known.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

The New England Convention

The fortieth annual convention of the Disciples in New England was held in Boston, September 28 to October 1.

The convention opened with an able sermon by M. L. Streator on "What Think Ye of Christ: Whose Son is He?"

A. L. Ward, pastor at Boston, welcomed the delegates at the Friday morning session, and E. Jay Teagarden responded felicitously on behalf of the convention. The president, S. M. Hunt, whom we love to call our "Bishop," briefly reviewed the progress of our work. The debts of the churches at Springfield, Swampscott and Brockton had been paid. Bro. H. H. Cushing had been ordained as a minister and located in a new work at South Framingham, an important railroad center. The corresponding secretary, G. A. Reinl, reported that there are 21 churches of our faith in New England, with 2,805 members, 275 additions during the year, 177 by baptism and 98 by letter. These churches contributed $1,352.48 for missions during the year. . He urged more sacrifice, and constant prayer; longer pastorates, and concentration in the cities.

F. J. M. Appleman, of Lubec, Maine, spoke on "The Fundamental Principle of the Disciples of Christ," which he declared to be loyalty to Christ and obedience to him. As to union, we seek a union of Christians, not of sects. The condition of such union is a return to apostolic practice and teaching, and especially to living the Christ life.

An earnest "Plea for a Fuller Realization of New Testament Christianity" was presented by A. T. June, of Everett, Mass. G. L. Snively spoke of the work of the Benevolent Association, and his eloquent presentation of this splendid work created a deep impression on our minds and hearts.

B. L. Smith spoke of the work of the American Board, and gave assurance that larger work would be undertaken in the great mission field of New England.

At the C. W. B. M. session encouraging reports of the progress of the work were given. Mrs. Atwater, of Indianapolis, gave an inspiring address on the work of the Christian women.

Friday evening Brother Streator reported that the church in Bridgeport, Conn., had purchased a lot in a favorable location and expected soon to begin to build a house of worship.

E. Jay Teagarden, pastor at Danbury, Conn., spoke on "The Distinctive Character of Mission Work in New England." Our field is one of concentrated population. We have 88 cities of over 10,000 inhabitants each, in only ten of which are we working. We have one-fourteenth of the population of America, but have been receiving only about one-hundredth of the money expended by the Home Mission Board. This is the day of declining faith and of the rise of strange cults. Ours is the plea, if properly presented, to revive the old time faith and devotion.

J. M. Van Horn, pastor at Worcester, told of "The Disciples of Christ and Kindred Movements in New England." Christian union is a familiar theme in the pulpits of many other faiths besides ours. We are in accord with the spirit of the times.

A. McLean, of the Foreign Society, spoke briefly of the work so dear to his heart in his own impressive way.

The Saturday morning session was devoted to the business of the convention.

A. L. D. Buxton, of the Worcester church, was elected president; your scribe was made corresponding secretary. Following the business, Brother Smith spoke of the work of the Church Extension Board and the A. C. M. S.

The session Saturday afternoon opened with a praise service, and a book study of Galatians by E. J. Butler, pastor at West Rupert, Vt. The C. E. work in New England was presented by the superintendent, H. A. Ling, of Everett, Mass. Our societies have a membership of 645, a gain of 46. They raised $117 for missions and $729.40 for local work. There are 12 Senior societies, 7 Junior and one Intermeliate. A. M. Parker, field secretary of the Massachusetts Christian Endeavor Union, spoke encouragingly of the work of the young people.

In the Sunday school session, Mrs. Lewis, of Everett, told of the work of the "Home Department"; J. A. Serena, of Harvard University, spoke on "Teacher Training," and H. H. Cushing on the "Evangelistic Work of the Teacher." An open parliament on Sunday school work was led by W. W. Stevens, of Danbury, and the session closed with an eloquent and inspiring address by Rev. Maurice Levy, of Medford, on "The Bible and the Scholar." W. H. Rogers gave a book study on Romans Saturday evening, followed by able addresses on "New Testament Evangelism." J. Mc-D. Horne, of Brockton, told of "The Message," and W. C. Morro, of Haverhill, of "The Method and Victory." This being his seventy-first birthday, the president, Brother Hunt, celebrated it by raising pledges to make up the deficit in the treasury, raising as usual much more than the amount needed.

Lord's day was the great day of the convention. First a session was held, in which verbal reports of the churches were heard. They were of a very encouraging nature.

Brother Reinl, the retiring crresponding secretary, preached in the morning, B. L. Smith in the afternoon, and A. McLean in the evening. Following the sermon of Brother Smith, a deeply devotional communion service was held, Brothers Teagarden and Hunt presiding. A splendid Christian Endeavor service was held in the evening, led by Brother Ling.

The convention was entirely harmonious, enthusiastic and replete with able and inspiring addresses. Brother Thomas, of the Boston church, had charge of the music, which contributed much to the devotion of the services. The attendance was larger than usual. The presence of the able leaders of our national missionary and other organizations, added greatly to the success of the convention. The program was unusually well arranged, and the addresses pertinent to our work and its needs.

The New England brethren are earnestly at work, and steadily increasing their influence. It is a great mission field, in one of the greatest centers of religious influence in our land, a district we cannot afford to neglect. The population is steadily growing, especially in the cities. Multitudes can easily be reached with our plea. Our great brotherhood has never undertaken serious mission work here. We are hoping that it may be done soon.

A PREACHER'S DISCOVERY.

Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., Atlanta, Ga., is the discoverer of a successful remedy for the cure of Catarrh, Catarrhal Deafness, Bronchitis and Asthma. It consists of a combination of medicinal herbs, roots and leaves, which are burned on a plate, smoked in a common clay pipe or in a medical cigarette—the fumes being inhaled into the throat and lungs and exhaled through the nose. It contains no tobacco. The manner of its use is simple, and no other means can so easily reach and cure the disease in all its forms. Dr. Blosser offers to mail free a liberal sample to any sufferer who will write to him for it. If your case is a stubborn one and you desire special advice, he makes no extra charge. This remedy has met with wonderful success, curing cases of even 25 years' standing.

If you wish a box containing a month's treatment, send $1.00, and it will be sent, postage paid. Address, Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga.

Midweek Prayer Meeting.

By W. F. Richardson.

October 25, 1905.

GOD'S GOODNESS AND LIFE'S INEQUALITIES.—Psalms 37:34-37; 73:1-28; Matt. 20:13-16.

God's goodness is not restricted to the righteous. The pagan idea of God was that of both beneficent and malevolent powers, who were as ready to hate as to love, and whose wrath must be propitiated by the sacrifice of innocent victims. Even Judaism came to hold a similar conception of Jehovah; and it was one of the missions of the prophets to correct this error, and show that Jehovah was a God of unfailing love, whose mercy endureth forever. Jesus assures us that the heavenly Father makes his sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sends his rain on the just and the unjust (Matt. 5:43-48). Paul tells us that God has never left himself without witness of his goodness, in the equal favor shown in natural blessings to the race (Acts 14:14-17). But it is in the Gospel that the divine goodness is most conspicuous, for there the very sin of man becomes a plea of irresistible power with God (John 3:16, 17; Rom. 5:6-10; Luke 19:10; 15:7).

The good ought not to envy, but rejoice in this fact. There is no more unlovely character in literature than the elder son, in the parable of the prodigal, who begrudged the welcome extended to his younger brother. In his jealousy he forgot to rejoice that the lost was found, the dead restored to life. And if we can rejoice over the mercy of God after it has attained its purpose in the salvation of the sinner, why can we not equally rejoice while that same mercy is seeking to move the hard and stubborn heart to repentance? Do we not read that "the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance" (Rom. 2:4)?

The prosperity of the wicked is brief. It is like the grass and the green herb, or at best like the green tree, whose season is short, and end certain (Psa. 37:1, 2, 35, 36). Asaph tells us that he could not understand the prosperity of the wicked, or reconcile it with the idea of the divine justice, until he "went into the sanctuary of God, and considered their latter end." Then he knew how slippery was their path, and how sudden would be their destruction, and his soul pitied them, rather than envied (Psalm 73:12-21). When we think of the utter disappointment to which all the lovers of sin are doomed, it ought to fill our souls with measureless compassion, and fill us with the zeal of Christ for their rescue from eternal shame and death.

The reward of the righteous is certain and abundant. "Trust in Jehovah and do good: dwell in the land and feed on his faithfulness," is the way in which David points us to the pathway of peace. Happiness and permanent prosperity are found alone in the way of faith and obedience. Delight in Jehovah, committal of one's way to him, resting upon him, avoiding evil and pursuing good—these are steps toward peace and joy that never fail to bring their reward. Make a careful study of the two Psalms of our lesson, and they will afford ample material for a spiritual and helpful meeting. Every verse in them is full of sweet comfort or wise counsel, and in keeping of their precepts there is great reward. Thus may we have such experience of the divine goodness as to justify our confident echo of the words of Asaph, "Thou wilt guide me with thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory" (Psalm 73:24).

POWER THROUGH GOD'S SPIRIT.—Zech. 4:1-10.

Memory Verses, 8-10.

Golden Text.—Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord.—Zech. 4:6.

Prophets of the Restoration.

For sixteen years after the return of the first band of exiles from Babylon, the temple remained in ruins. The first burst of zeal for its reconstruction soon gave way, in the face of opposition from their neighbors and from the Persian government, to an apparently contented acquiescence in this state of affairs. It was doubtless a time of hard work and little surplus for a people who were trying to rebuild their broken fortunes, but gradually prosperity returned. Harvests were good, men began to build good houses for themselves (Haggai 1:4) and the possessions which they gained only whetted their appetites for the getting of more (Haggai 1:6). At this time there arose two prophets to insist upon the immediate rebuilding of the temple as the first duty of the nation. They were Haggai and Zechariah. In the second year of the reign of Darius (that is 520 B. C.) they began their agitation (Ezra 4:24; 5:1; Haggai 1:1; Zech. 1:1), and in the sixth year of Darius the temple was completed (Ezra 6:14, 15).

Haggai's Argument.

The addresses of Haggai are, for the most part, plain and practical appeals to the people to rebuild the temple. The various arguments are recited. The people are now well able to afford it. Their prosperity is, in fact, being hindered by the divine displeasure because the temple is not built. There is no need for discouragement because the new temple is less splendid than the old, for the Gentiles shall contribute of their wealth (which really belongs to Jehovah) to its adornment and it shall surpass the former temple. The whole nation is ceremonially unclean until the temple is restored. Finally Zerubbabel, the governor, is assured that, if he carries out this work, the Lord will greatly honor him in the day when the nations are being destroyed.

A Prophet of Hope.

Haggai's contemporary and ally in the effort to get the temple built, was Zechariah. He cast his argument into the form of a series of visions in which are portrayed the glory that awaits the rebuilt city with its restored temple. If previous prophets have dealt largely with messages of warning and denunciation, Zechariah speaks words of encouragement. There is a new and better time at hand. The restoration of the city shall be accompanied by a general revival of the national life, a spiritual awakening, the triumph of justice, the receipt of strength through God's Spirit, the removal of sin, and the coming of a glorious Messianic regime. All of which meant, first of all, that a nation with such a God and such a future ought to rebuild the temple at once.

Zechariah's Visions.

The visions were eight in number:

(1) The messsenger and horses of Jehovah (1:7-17), by whom it is reported that the nations are still spiritually dead. No other is found which can represent him, so Judah shall be restored and Jerusalem rebuilt.

(2) The four horns (1:18-21), representing the world powers which have afflicted Judah, are broken.

Great Suit Offer

Cut this notice out and mail to us and if we have no agent in your town we will send you FREE, by return mail, postpaid, a big assortment of cloth samples, fashion figures, cloth tape measure, order blanks, etc., and we will name you prices on men's fine clothing that will be so much lower than you ever heard of that it will surprise you; terms, conditions and privileges that will astonish you; a free trial offer on a suit or overcoat for your own use that will make you wonder.

WE WANT A GOOD AGENT IN YOUR TOWN.

He can make $1,200.00 to $1,800.00 per year. If you write us before we get an agent there you will get a wonderful offer. As soon as we get an agent in your town he will get a profit on every dollar we sell in his territory. We then turn all our business over to him. That's why our agents make so much money. If you want clothing for yourself, answer quick, before we get an agent there, and you will then get all our great inducements, or if you would like to be our agent tell us all about yourself. (3) The man with the measuring line (2:1-13), who found the new Jerusalem to be immeasurable, without walls on account of its vastness of size and population.

(4) Joshua, the high priest (3:1-10), opposed by Satan before the judgment throne, but purified and justified for the nation.

(5) The golden candlestick (4:1-14), fed by two olive trees, typifying the living fountains of divine grace by which the nation is to be supplied and nourished.

(6) The flying roll (5:1-4), bearing curses which shall come with certainty upon those who deserve them—an assurance of the execution of justice in the new regime.

(7) The woman in the ephah (5:5-11), a personification of wickedness shut up and taken out of the land.

(8) The four chariots (6:1-8), going out to the four quarters as the ministers of God's judgment upon the nations, to punish the enemies of Judah.

Power through the Spirit of God.

The lesson is on the fifth vision. Its message was addressed primarily to Zerubbabel, the governor of Jerusalem, who was relied upon to lead in the work of temple-building. The strength of the just cause, the power of the man who works with God, the folly of depending upon mere human strength and the consequent folly of despairing on acount of the lack of mere human strength—this was the message of the prophet to the governor. What a message it is for the governors and leaders of today! How apt for the present needs of our political life! How sorely needed as a conviction in the heart of every man who would be the governor of his own life. Not by might and violence, not by strength and craft, are the hard problems solved, the great tasks done and the great victories achieved; but by the quiet, spiritual power which we may possess only on condition of receiving it fresh fom its source—the very Spirit of God.

THE FOREIGN MISSION WORK OF OUR CHURCH.—Daniel 2:31-45.

For the Leader.

We are blessed with another missionary subject this evening. Let it be our trust that each one has made some preparation for the meeting. If there are those here who have not prepared upon the subject matter of the topic for tonight, let them know they can have the preparation of an interested mind, a heart full of love and desire to get some good out of the meeting. This is a preparation all should have for the meeting. We can be well prepared in head, and if we are not prepared in heart, which is to say, if we are not interested and in earnest, we will profit but little by the meeting.

There is a fund of missionary information that one can not well afford to be without. Why should it not be considered a part of one's education to know these most important things? It should. Then it is a part of one's joy in the Christian service to know where the missionaries of his church labor, how they fare, what they do, what they have for food, what their work is, how the people where they labor receive them, is there hope of speedy returns on a large scale in this field or that, and so on through a long list of things a hungry mind will crave to know.

For the Members.

1. A Suggestive Program.

(1) Three missionary hymns, one of them sung as a solo.

(2) Mission verses from the Bible by members of the society.

(3) Sentence prayers for missions and the missionaries.

(4) Where our missionaries are located. A map exercise, showing from a home-made map, by means of stars stuck in the places, where our missionaries are located.

(5) A short paper on the beginnings of our foreign mission work.

(6) Select a bright Endeavorer to represent each of the following mission fields: India, China, Japan, the Philippines, Cuba, and Scandinavia, and let each one give the important features of the work in a three minute talk.

(7) Have some one make a talk of five minutes on the great missionaries of our Church, illustrating with pictures cut from magazines and papers. Leave the pictures for inspection after the meeting or, better, paste them on a large piece of cardboard and put up in the Endeavor room. Put name and place of labor under each one.

(8) Have some one name the missionary boards of our church and give the headquarters of each and when the special offering for each board should be taken in the churches and the societies.

(9) Have some one give the titles, places of publication and importance of the missionary periodicals we put out.

(10) Talk on the special foreign missionary work of the Endeavorers of our Church, supporting the boys in the orphanage at Damoh, India. (See page 286 of the September number of the "Missionary Intelligencer.")

(11) A letter from some mission field, personal, or from some one of our papers, or, if not this, where you can, a talk from some returned missionary.

(12) Many prayers for the missionaries, calling them by name.

(13) Offering.

(14) Benediction.

2. Some Suggestions:

(1) This program will require some searching for material. There is not room in this column to give same. Put your literature committee to work. Go to your pastor for his help in these matters. It will take a little work, but you will soon get all the material you want. Put your members upon their pride, and let each one try to make his part the best of all.

(2) This program may be used to profit in the regular Endeavor meeting. It will make a better and more general impression in most places to put it in the place of the night sermon. See the preacher about this. He will be glad to help you. Advertise the meeting. Have a large audience out to hear the program. Something like this will do more to generate missionary zeal than all the work you can do in a sort of general way in six months. It will be a rally in your society. It will cause the people to say, "Well, these young people are doing something. I believe I would like to have part with them in their work." And they will. Give this meeting a faithful and prayerful trial, and see how great will be the blessing to your society.

Quiet Hour Thought.

Have I ever taken a personal interest in any missionary and prayed earnestly for the success of that missionary?

Family Circle

A Visit to the Ancients.

As I have been saying, there are several interesting and typical Indian pueblos in the vicinity of Santa Fe. But the Pueblos of today are only the modern representatives of a race of Indians who have left most curious and notable remains in this region—namely, the cliff-dwellers and cave-dwellers. Notice that I say modern representatives, rather than descendants, for I do not wish to get entangled in the great riddle at the very outset of these brief observations. Whether the cliff-dwellers were killed off or simply moved into the valleys as conditions changed; whether the Pueblo Indians are descended from the cliff-dwellers or from some other and unknown race—these are questions worth discussing. But let us describe first and speculate afterward.

To find cliff-dwellings, one must go a little farther from Santa Fe, and Espanola is perhaps the best center for an easy amateur expedition. It is in the Rio Grande valley thirty miles north of Santa Fe on the narrow gauge section of the Denver and Rio Grande R. R. The town is a mere dot in the desert, but it has hotels, saloons (four), stores and the other more indispensable appurtenances of urban life, for it is the distributing center for a score of towns from the railroad and does a volume of business quite out of proportion to its size.

The cliff of Puye (pronounced poo-yea) is perhaps the best known and the most visited of all the groups of cave-dwellings, and even it is far from being over-run by tourists. It is reached by a rough twelve-mile drive from Espanola. For the first six miles the road runs up Santa Clara Canyon, most of the way in the bed of the stream. Then it turns south and climbs by leaps and bounds to the top of a broad, rolling mesa, or plateau, a thousand feet above the valley. It is the rule here that rainfall increases with altitude, so it should not be surprising to come up out of a sandy and arid valley to a green and grassy mesa which furnishes fine pasturage for droves of unbroken horses, wild as mountain goats. These ponies, without spot or blemish except a brand on the flank, can be bought for five to seven dollars a head. The process of breaking to saddle adds ten or fifteen dollars to their value. Considering the high cost of physicians' and trained nurses' services, it is a good deal cheaper to spend this extra ten or fifteen dollars on a horse already broken than to buy a five dollar pony and break it yourself.

Five miles over this rolling table-land brings one to the foot of a cliff which rises abruptly from it and forms one side of what might be considered an island of solid rock standing up out of the green sea of the plateau with shores so precipitous that only at one or two places can access to the top be gained. The cliff is from thirty to sixty feet high, with a sloping talus of rock fragments at its foot. The stone is a soft volcanic tufa which erodes easily under stress of wind and weather and in which one can almost excavate with one's finger-nails. A good stone ax would have gone into it as a pick goes into clay.

Here, then, were the homes of the ancients. A thousand years ago, or two thousand, or perhaps not much more than five hundred—nobody knows a great deal about it—some bright Indian discovered that, with this soft cliff at hand, it was easier to dig a good rain-proof stone house than to build even a poor leaky one of any other material. The whole tribe had already found that it was safer to live on the heights than in the valley. So he started, very likely, where the wind had already bored out a little hole in the face of the cliff—indeed, this wind-worn hole probably gave him the first hint for his new architecture—and with his flint hatchet he enlarged the hole, levelling the floor so that he could lie down comfortably and rounding the roof so that it would be less likely to fall in. But he always left the entrance to his cave very low and narrow (usually about three feet high and half as wide), so that an enemy attempting to force an entrance would put himself in a good position to get his skull crushed by a blow from the basalt hammer which lay convenient to its owner's hand. I found the basalt hammer just where he dropped it last by the fire-place, so I am sure that is what he used.

The others would not be slow to see the advantages enjoyed by this discoverer with his rock-hewn house. So they, too, abandoned whatever sort of houses they had—no one knows what sort they were, but doubtless some primitive shack—and in the course of time the whole face of the cliff was honey-combed with cave-dwellings, as we see it today. In the course of time, too, they learned several tricks for making these houses very comfortable. Most important was the art of building a fire-place and making a smoke-hole over it opening out through the face of the cliff. That the draft was generally not perfect is shown by the fact that the entire ceiling and the upper part of the walls are in almost every case completely blackened by smoke. But the hole which I have called a smoke-hole was evidently meant for that purpose and not for observation or warfare, for as often as not it is directly over the fire-place, and even when it is over the door the angle is usually such that nothing can be seen through it except blue sky.

Sometimes, though not often, two adjacent rooms, each having its separate entrance, have a door between them. Occasionally a second room has been hollowed out behind the first and is reached by so small an opening that one must lie flat and wriggle through the choking dust of centuries to get into it, and when it is reached it is so small that one can neither stand up or lie down at full length. Even the front rooms are small enough. Seven feet square by five and a half feet high would be a fair average. The largest I have ever found was nine by nine and a half and seven feet six inches high, and it was connected with two others, making a suite of three rooms, two of which had outside doors reached by stairs hewn in the cliff, while the middle room had a window. But that was not at Puye cliff. Most of the rooms are small and so low that, even after clearing out the accumulated dust and stone debris, I could not stand upright in them. To gain a little more room with the minimum of excavation, the original inhabitants cut niches in the walls here and there to serve as closets. The lower half of the wall was usually plastered with adobe, and in rare cases there are remains of rude paintings on this.

But even cave-dwellers were not satisfied to dwell only in caves, so in many cases they built little stone huts in front of the caves. The only remaining evidences of this are the rows of holes in the cliff which were made to hold the ends of the rafters, and a faint trace of masonry where the walls used to be.

Such are the cave-dwellings. As to the people who built and inhabited them, a Mexican will only shrug and say, "Quien sabe?" And that is as good an answer as any, for no one knows. We know only a few things about them. We know that they were farmers, because we find withered ears of corn in their caves, and besides, primitive peoples who have fixed abodes are pretty sure to be tillers of the soil. We know that they made very excellent pottery, for much of it has been dug up. I have found some of excellent quality and tasteful decoration, and have even dug up a few fragments showing a glaze, though some of the authorities assert that they did not know the art of glazing pottery. We argue that they were a comparatively peaceable people, and that they took refuge in the cliffs partly to escape the attacks of their more warlike contemporaries. But whence they came, whither they went and how they fared in the fight with their fiercer neighbors, are questions for the archæologists to wrangle over—and they do.

There are two other kinds of ancient Indian houses which must be classed with these cave-dwellings that I have been describing. Most nearly allied to them are the cliff-dwellings which have been built in shallow caves formed by the erosion of a soft horizontal stratum of rock between two harder strata in the face of a cliff. By way of distinction, these are sometimes called cliff-dwellings, while the name cave-dwellings is restricted to the sort of which I have been speaking. But in reality, both are cave-dwellings and both are cliff-dwellings, for in one case the cave-rooms are dug in the face of the cliff, while in the other houses are built in caves formed by over-hanging cliffs. The two sorts are rarely found in the same region. In the vicinity of Santa Fe one must confine his researches to cave-dwellings, in the narrower sense. Cliff-dwellings of the other kind are found in southwestern Colorado, northwestern New Mexico, in the vicinity of Flagstaff, Arizona, and in the states of Chihuahua and Sonora, Mexico. In addition to these two sorts of caves and cliff-dwellings, there are found ruined pueblos evidently of great antiquity. Of these I shall have more to say, for I devoted a week to exploring some of them which had not before been investigated. They are nearly always on the high places, often at the top of a cliff in which cave-dwellings are found. This is the case at the Puye cliff, where the ruins indicate a stone-built village—in reality, a single quadrangular house—of about six hundred rooms, not more than a score of which have ever been excavated.

Now, as to theories and guesses. In the matter of dates, the archæologists have grown conservative. They used to ascribe to these remains an age of from fifteen hundred to four thousand years. The chief motive for this was apparently a certain pleasurable sensation of paradox in claiming that this newest continent had remains of a civilization almost as old as Egypt. But this theory, though attractive, was groundless. While the whole affair is largely guess-work, the most plausible guess is that the latest of these edifices were abandoned by their inhabitants not a vast while before the Spaniards appeared in the southwest—say five hundred years ago, or possibly a thousand at most.

But the great guessing-contest begins when we undertake to solve the ethnological problems presented by the cliff-dwellers. Who were they? Whence came they? Whither went they? It has long been the custom to think of them as a mysterious race which has long since disappeared, or perhaps two or three different races all now extinct. Those who hold to this opinion often make the cliff-dwellers and the cave-dwellers distinct people, who may have been either contemporaneous or successive. The ruined pueblos may represent still a different race, which may have been earlier or later than either of the others or contemporary with one or both of them. There is room for a great deal of very pleasing mystery on this view, but the trouble about all the theories of this type is two-fold: First, they leave unexplained the total disappearance of one, two or three large tribes or even races, or account for their extinction by the unsupported hypothesis of a terrific conflict in which they were finally exterminated by other tribes who had less skill as builders and more as fighters. Second, they make no account of the evidences of similarity between these ancients and the modern Pueblo Indians. So there is a second general theory, which seems to me more tenable. It is that the cave-dwellers, cliff-dwellers and ancient pueblo-dwellers were all essentially one people. Being a relatively peaceful people, with some simple industries which would be disturbed by war and which required settled abodes, they exercised their ingenuity to build houses which would also be forts. Where the cliffs were of soft stone, they dug caves in them. In other formations where the wearing away of soft strata left overhanging roofs of rock, they built stone houses in these natural caves. Finding built houses more comfortable than dug houses, the people who lived in cliffs permitting only the dug sort, later began to build houses on top of the cliffs where they were open to the weather, but still protected against their enemies. Under these varying conditions they flourished, making the pottery which we still find in their houses, tilling their fields to raise a little corn, carrying their water up from the valleys below by trails which one can still find sometimes worn deep in the solid rock. There were fights, too, but the enemy found their cliff-castles too strong to be taken with flint arrows and stone axes, so the wandering warlike tribes passed on to other regions. Then, the danger past, the cliff-dwellers moved down into the valleys, where they could get water without climbing down one or two thousand feet of mountain side, and built other pueblos of similar plan to those which some of them had been living in upon the mesa. And their descendants are there to this day, building, farming and making pottery in the same way—the modern Pueblo Indians among whom I have been living for these few weeks.

But this, as I said, is only a theory. One man's guess is as good as another's, and there are seldom two alike, but this is my guess. If all young men of highly speculative temper would shun theology and devote themselves to developing theories about the cliff-dwellers, they would find ample scope for their genius, and it would save a world of trouble for other people.

But no theory of origins can take from the builders of these strange castles the honor of being among the earliest dwellers on American soil, the first families of the land, and only the most heedless traveler could be unmoved by the remaining tokens of their fierce struggle for life. To get away from the enemy, to make a little maize grow, where the heavens were niggardly of rain, to get a little water every day and keep a little over, for fear that tomorrow the enemy might lie in ambush at the spring, far down the mountain—these were the serious problems of life. Perhaps they had not much time to enjoy the beauties of nature.

The long shadows fell across the mesa and the blue tints of early twilight cooled the warm yellow of the cliff before I could think of leaving it. Coming out through the low door of a cave-room in the shaded eastern side of the cliff, I straightened myself and looked up and across and beyond to the east. In the foreground was the cool green mesa, with its pasture and pines, upon which the sun had already set. In the background the massive and lofty Sangre de Cristo range was all crimson and gold in the full light of the fast setting sun. There was no middle distance to the picture, and the mountains rose up so weirdly from the invisible valley and shone back upon the shadowed world with such unspeakable wealth of blazing color that they seemed rather of the sky than of the earth. The tawny barren foothills gleamed like fields of ripe wheat. The green mountains were turned to amethyst and opal. The bare crest of the ridge above timber line, and fifty miles away, flashed rainbow tints. But the sun was setting even on the mountain tops. The brighter lights faded and left only those spirit-hues, those red-blues which we call lilac, lavender and violet, with here and there a deep rich splash of true royal purple. The shadow-blue crept up the foothills, over the mountains, up to the very summits, and the heart of the great desert which had throbbed in this wild brief ecstasy of color, grew quiet with the dark. And then, as if born out of the last low cloud that caught the final glow in the east, came up the full moon.

All this, as I stood at the door of the cave, where men with flint arrows and stone hammers had gone in and out and lived. Had they ever seen it? Doubtless there have been ten thousand such sunsets here—though I never saw one such elsewhere—but did they ever see them? Here again is mystery. W. E. G.

CHINESE ETIQUETTE.

It is difficult to show how minute and all-embracing the rules of conduct are. For example, there is the well-known story of the American who was employed in the University in Japan, in the old days when Chinese etiquette was still maintained in that empire. After a time he was visited by a solemn delegation of the authorities, who, after much circumlocution, asked him what they had done to injure his feelings. He replied that they had done nothing, but they took his reply only as polite evasion, and insisted. As really his feelings had not been hurt by anything, he was in perplexity and began at last to ask them what he had done to indicate his annoyance, whereupon it came out that he had appeared (being really a man somewhat absent-minded and indifferent to his dress) several times in recitation room with his shoe strings unfastened, and the authorities had supposed this a quiet way of indicating that his feelings were injured. Or to take another instance. An American long years since went to China as a missionary. He took up his residence with a group of students, and learned at once the language and native customs. Many years after he rendered the Chinese government signal service and was made a mandarin. When I knew him he lived in Japan, and he told me that in long residence in China he had met only courtesy, because versed in their ways he rendered courtesy where courtesy is due. When a new Chinese minister came to Tokyo the American would call upon him. At the outer gate he sent in his ordinary American visiting card. The response came back, "His Excellency is not at home." So the American advanced to the inner gate and presented an elaborate visiting card in Chinese, and again the response came, "Not at home." Then he advanced to the door of the residence and presented his great official visiting card inscribed with all his titles, and the minister was found at home and prepared to do him all honor. To have presented his official card in the first instance would have been presumptuous. He must appear in a private and modest capacity, but for the minister to have received him in such form would have been to do him a discourtesy. The successive responses were really in the nature of a command to come up higher and be received in a style befitting my friend's rank and distinguished services. Naturally few foreigners have the time, the patience, or the adaptability to learn so elaborate a code, and one so adapted to all the contingencies of a strange life. Etiquette in China is little less elaborate and perplexing than is religious rite in India. In both we have illustrations of the methods in which men bind themselves with artificial codes and make life burdensome by their own traditions. However, there comes a time when even such a code becomes a second nature, and its lack is felt as if something essential were missing.—George William Knox, in "The Chautauqua.".. ..

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

A Week With the Woodneys.

THE SIXTH MORNING.

The first thought of the Woodneys on awakening the next morning was that it was their first Sunday in the village, and that it was the day of Luther's promised visit. Mr. and Mrs. Woodney had not seen their son since he hired out as a farmhand to the Manceys. It had been even longer since Mace had seen him, for she had been on a visit to her grandmother's second cousin, David, when her brother Luther had left in haste to secure the position offered him on the Mancey farm. The second thought of the Woodneys as they still lay in bed hesitating about getting up, concerned the strange and mysterious trunk on the front porch at the back of the house. This trunk occupied their thoughts a good deal during the morning, and indeed during many days; for there it stood unclaimed and unknown for weeks. It formed as it were a background to their emotions and acts. For awhile, it remained on the porch, then it was accommodated in the parlor, where it was very much in the way. Finally, it was carried to the barn. "You may say what you will," remarked Mr. Woodney, when it had come to this last resting place, "it's much easier and cheaper to keep it than a horse."

"I don't know as to the ease," returned his wife; "if we had a horse I think I could make shift not to get kicked; but the broken iron band on that trunk has torn a rent in every dress in our family."

On the first Sunday morning, Arthur Lowell came to breakfast. He explained that henceforth he was not only to sleep but to eat at Worth Acre's, and he had come this time only for fear they might be waiting for him. He began an account of the white cock, but Mr. Woodney interrupted him.

"We know all about it, Arthur," he said kindly. "And I'll speak to the Winterfields. It is the same to us as if it had never occurred."

Arthur glanced furtively at Mace and read in her face that it was not the same to her. There came to him again the wild desire to go forth and kill a dragon or something, to show her he was a hero. But alas, it seemed that there was nothing he could kill but other people's cocks! Should he struggle to regain her good will, or give up the attempt, and turn his interests to Worth Acre and the king of France? At one time, he told himself it was no use to combat Mace's dislike; but the very look of aloofness and disapproval on her face spurred him to fresh resolve. "I will make her like me, and respect me!" he thought, scarcely tasting the breakfast. "I will show all this family that what I did without thinking, was not a true test of the kind of person I am, and mean to be." How was he to show them? That, the future must reveal. In the meantime, he sat grave, even sombre, his thin, delicate face half appealing, half defiant, his fragile form drawn to its utmost height. Mr. Woodney said, "But you must keep your practice-room in our barn, at least till cold weather. And this afternoon I want you, Arthur. I have business on hand—Sunday business. Will you come here at about four o'clock?" Arthur promised eagerly. What would he not have done for his blind friend? When breakfast was over, he went to the barn and climbed to the loft, where his little room had been arranged. How happy they had been that day! Here were the table and shelf and hay, just as he and Mace had arranged. There on the wall hung the violin. He took it down and began to play softly. He did not play long. He was overwhelmed by the consciousness of his loneliness; no mother or father; no kindred; a home, for which he was grateful, but no one in that house who understood his aims and desires; no friend of his own age; no gentle companion, like Mace, for instance, to answer his look and brighten his days. The little musician laid aside his violin, and throwing himself upon the hay, buried his face on his ragged arm and wept. The pigeons cooed upon the roof, and the patter of their little feet sounded upon the shingles. A broad sunbeam fell through a crevice in the gable. The hay stirred stealthily and a mouse peeped over a dusty beam at the motionless figure. He lay there a long time before he heard himself called. "Arthur!" came the voice of Mrs. Geraldine Woodney. "Have you seen anything of Mr. Woodney's gold watch?"

The lad started up in terror. "They will accuse me of stealing it!" was his first thought. He stumbled to the head of the ladder. "I don't know anything about it!" he cried wildly. "Indeed I don't, Mr. Woodney," he added, seeing Mr. Woodney standing by his wife's side.

"I wound it up just before I went to bed," said Mr. Woodney in a troubled voice.

"Arthur," said Mrs. Geraldine seriously, "are you very, very sure you know nothing about it? Mace says you were in the front room after breakfast, and we thought you might have seen it somewhere. Try to think, Arthur. Do not be so excited, but try to remember. Where did you see it? Don't you think you can find it for us?"

"Oh, Mrs. Woodney," exclaimed Arthur desperately, "I know what Mace thinks, but I can't help it! I haven't seen the watch; I don't remember ever having seen it! Yes, I stopped in the parlor to tie my shoe before I came here to the barn, and nobody was in there."

"We know you were there alone," said Mace, joining her parents. Her face was white and accusing. "Papa, maybe Arthur would come to the house and help hunt for it."

"I didn't take that watch!" cried Arthur fiercely. "I don't want to hunt for it, because if I found it, you'd think I knew all the time where it was."

"I always slept with it under my pillow," said Mr. Woodney, "and since I know I wound it up last night I must have had it on this morning. Yes, I remember laying it down somewhere when I changed my vest for Luther's visit, and I think it was in the parlor."

"He thinks it was in the parlor," said Mrs. Geraldine. Arthur climbed down the ladder, and Mace and her mother noticed his troubled, tear-stained face. It looked to them like the picture of guilt. "Search my clothes!" he cried, wildly. "Look in my pockets!"

Old Mrs. Woodney's voice called from the house, "Here comes Luther! Here comes Luther!"

"Let us say nothing about the watch while Luther is here," said Mrs. Geraldine; "it will spoil his visit, and we can investigate the affair just as well tomorrow. I imagine the watch won't get very far away. No, Arthur, we do not care to search you. But if you find that watch, we will all rejoice. You could not please us better than by finding it!"

"After all," said Mr. Woodney, turning toward the house, "the watch hasn't kept good time for three years. Let us hasten to greet our boy. We will not let this spoil our day."

"I should think not!" cried Mrs. Geraldine. "There isn't a day on the calendar that wouldn't be spoiled for us if we'd let it, for as sure as the sun rises, something is bound to happen. And I'm not going to have my son's visit spoiled for all the gold watches that ever ticked." They hurried around the cottage, and found that their son had already checked his horse beside the high front sidewalk. Luther Woodney was a young man of about twenty, strong and broad-shouldered, more like Worth Acre in his size and development than like the elegant Ed Woodney. His head was large, his features well-formed, and his eyes bright and honest, and full of kindness. He was not a handsome young man, but pleasing in his expression, and winning in his gentleness. He was one of those souls who stand up sturdily for everything good except for his own rights, and, in consequence, one of those of whom the world is always taking advantage. He was dressed in a cheap suit which, however, was so much better than his workclothes that he considered it almost fine. His horse was long, ungainly, every rib showing, and every leg knotted. It limped with one front leg and one hind leg, thus imparting a complex motion to the rider which it was hard to meet with ease. Even now that the journey's end was reached, the horse continued to rock back and forth in lifting up alternate sore legs.

"What a wretched horse!" cried Mace after Luther had kissed all the family.

"Yes, poor old boy!" said Luther, "he's hurt in front and behind, and he can't decide which eases him the most to hold up. Why! what nice grass you have here!"

"We went to a great deal of trouble to procure it," said the father, proudly leading the way to the house.

"Mother, you're looking so well," said Luther, ignoring the nakedness of the unsodded earth. "Mace, you are prettier than ever. I wish the Manceys could see you. They'd never think, to look at me, that I could get up such a sister! Grandmother, your back is stiffer than any back on that farm! How do you like the house? I think it's fine."

"We wish it wasn't green," said Mace, who walked with an arm about her brother.

"Well, yes," said Luther; "but green always seems fresh, you know. It was the only house I could get for you, all the others were occupied. Why! have you made the front room the kitchen?"

"Ah, ha!" cried his mother triumphantly. "I thought if I set those crocks along the wall and hung the waterbucket at the door, that people could tell it was the kitchen!"

"Certainly," said Luther, puzzled, "nobody would take it for anything else."

"Good!" cried Mr. Woodney. "Now come around the house to the back door."

"A porch!" Luther exclaimed. "What a beauty! And entirely finished except the floor! Whose trunk?"

"We think maybe it is cousin Sarah Tom

Woodney's, coming to visit us," said his mother.

Luther whistled, then said, "Well, she always goes away afterward, that's one thing."

"As for me," interposed old Mrs. Woodney, "I believe David has died and left us something. You know he loved us more than his closer kin, and he was certainly old enough."

"Grandmother," said Luther, "cousin David isn't dead yet. I saw a line about him in the paper out at the Manceys. He is still living, Cousin David is."

"If nobody comes to claim the trunk," said Mace, "we can open it and find out better."

"Such awful things have happened with trunks," murmured Mrs. Geraldine. "Every time I come near this one, I am in mortal terror lest it should begin to—begin to smell, you know."

"Oh, mother!" cried Mace. Old Mrs. Woodney gingerly approached the trunk and sniffed the air.

"How do you like the Manceys, Luther?" inquired his father.

"Well," said his son, slowly, "I think they mean well. Yes, sir; I think they do."

"I think they might have lent you a better horse," cried Mace, her eyes flashing.

"Oh, that isn't their horse," returned Luther. "The Manceys wouldn't let me have any of their horses to ride."

"And why not, pray?" exclaimed Mrs. Geraldine.

"Well, I don't know," said Luther mildly, "it's not their way, you know. Now that horse out there, it's mine."

"Yours!" cried all in amazment.

"I thought you'd say that," remarked Luther in gentle triumph. "Yes, sir, mine! As the Mancey farm is six miles from here, I set out pretty early to walk it, and when I'd come half way I met some gypsy campers, leading this old folorn hope and beating it with clubs to make it go faster. I felt so sorry for the poor beast—you can see yourself how lean and sore it is—"

"Yes," interposed his grandmother, "we can, indeed."

"So I bought it," said Luther. "They only wanted five dollars for it, and as that was all I had, we were very well satisfied on both sides. I was bringing the money to make you a little present, but the horse will be worth much more when he picks up."

"There are four things he can hardly pick up at present," remarked old Mrs. Woodney, "and I mean his feet, if anybody wants to know."

"This was very kind of you, my son," cried Mr. Woodney, whose blindness was a boon to him at this moment. "We will set up a little cart, and Mace and I will travel the country for our health and pleasure and in re-establishing the church."

"What is its name?" inquired Mrs. Geraldine, gazing across the yard at the horse which was still lifting alternately its sore fore leg and its sore hind leg.

"It has no name," said Luther. "I inquired, but none of the gypsies knew of any."

"I think a good name for him would be Dancer," said Mrs. Geraldine.

"Oh, no, mamma," Mace remonstrated, "that sounds too gay for him. I'd like Rienzi; you know he was the last of the Romans."

"I was thinking," said Luther, "that Bonaparte would be first rate, if we just called him by the first syllable for short."

"My son," said his mother reproachfully, "I thought you too kind-hearted to get upon such a poor old creature."

"I didn't get on him till I reached the village," returned Luther. "He and I walked; but I was afraid folks would think it strange that the Manceys hadn't lent me a horse, and besides I wanted to ride up to your gate in style."

"You came in style," remarked old Mrs. Woodney, "but it was the style of my childhood. However, they say old fashions are coming back."

"But Luther, didn't you think it strange that the Manceys wouldn't lend you a horse?" cried Mace.

"Oh, no; I didn't think much about it," returned Luther cheerfully; "it was such a little thing compared to many of their ways, you know."

"Have they such strange ways?"

"Well, of course, everybody is entitled to his own ways," rejoined Luther evasively; "that's about all I have, myself. But all of the Manceys ask of me is to work every instant as hard as I can, and rest as little as possible, and wait for my wages. They keep a very bountiful table, and I hear they always have pie."

"Don't you eat at the first table?" demanded Mace.

"Oh, yes, but I hardly ever stay to the end of the meal, we're so busy, you know. Mr. Mancey is always afraid it is going to rain, and you can't do much if it is raining. And you never know but what it will rain, no matter how little like it the sky seems. You can't count on the sky. There are other things to consider. Besides, Mr. Mancey never asks me to work any longer than he works himself, so I'm sure it's fair all around. People say nobody in the country works as hard as Mr. Mancey except our cousin G. C. D. Woodney. But I think I complete the triumvirate."

"At any rate, he ought to pay you promptly," said his mother.

"Oh, we oughtn't to say that, mother," Luther returned. "Mr. Mancey never has any money."

"He isn't poor, is he?"

"Poor?" cried Luther laughing; "he's one of the richest men in the county. His wife is one of the rich Dobneys—Cousin G. C. D. Woodney married one of the Dobneys. Poor? I should think not! For all that, he never has any money. It's all in land and cattle, you know. He and I drove over to Gosneyville one day, and he had to borrow a dime from me to get his tobacco. That's the way it is. He couldn't sell an acre or trade a steer, every time he wanted a little change; so he waits; and I have to wait, too."

"But he can afford to wait, my son."

"Well, as he is always reminding me," remarked Luther, "whenever I'm not suited, there are fifty men ready for my job! Now I'd like to take that horse to the barn and dress his wounds and feed him."

"I don't believe he will be able to carry you back," remarked Mr. Woodney, as all went around to the front gate.

"Of course not; I'm going to leave him here; father, this is your horse," said Luther with a little touch of natural pride.

"I accept it gratefully!" cried Mr. Woodney. "There is an old currycomb in the barn."

"You'd better not curry him for awhile," said Luther, "I think he's too tender."

"I am afraid we'll have to call in Arthur Lowell to 'tend to him," said old Mrs. Woodney.

"Who is Arthur Lowell?" Luther asked.

"He is the boy who buries our dead animals," returned his grandmother. Mace suddenly remembered the gold watch and her face clouded. Luther laughed. "Never mind, grandmother, you'll soon see Bonaparte kicking up his legs and neighing to get at that grass! Won't they, poor old Bony?"

Bonaparte, his long, thin neck stretched to its utmost, his big head drooping, his under lip hanging down, his ears flattened, drew up his fore leg, then his hind leg, and closed his narrow eyes. "Poor old fellow," said Luther, "I hate to make you walk any more. Father, do you think we could put him to bed? There's hay in the loft, isn't there?"

"Plenty of hay!" cried Mr. Woodney, cheerfully. "Come, let us wait on our Bonaparte."

"Come on, Bonaparte," called old Mrs. Woodney; "and how did you leave them at Waterloo?"

"I'm going to put this horse in my book," Mrs. Geraldine declared. "Some faithful old family horse, you know, that the family cruelly sold in its old age, and that was taken care of by kind strangers, and nourished in its last days by their unselfish devotion."

"Mother, haven't you begun that book, yet?" inquired Luther, as he urged the dispirited animal around toward the back gate. There was an alley between the Woodneys' and the Miss Days', and they slowly defiled along its rugged course.

"Yes, I started it this morning," responded his mother. "I will read you what I have written just as soon as Bony is put to bed."

"Geraldine," said Mr. Woodney, "why not bring your manuscript out to the barn? It will cheer us in our labors."

"And get both done at the same time," suggested her mother-in-law. Mrs. Woodney liked this idea, and hastened back to the house for her manuscript. On the walk, she encountered Mr. Worth Acre.

"Everybody leaving the place?" inquired the blacksmith. "I was coming to make a Sunday call."

"Just go around to the barn," said Mrs. Geraldine cheerfully, "we are putting Bonaparte to bed." The blacksmith glanced down the alley, and his shrewd eye took in the procession which, with old Bony at its head, had a funeral aspect. Old Mrs. Woodney, who was bringing up the rear, her black lace cap quivering with her little stately steps, perceived the blacksmith, and waved her hand. "Come," she called, "go with us to St. Helena!"

Business Notes.

The Cradle Roll seems likely to take its proper place among the good introductions for quickening interest in the Primary Department. Samples.

In one shipment this week we sent out thirty-six Oxford Bibles, averaging $2.00 each. Our stock is complete. Any information furnished.

Have you read the advertisement of the pure books offered in this week's paper, such books as are helpful and spiritual in thought and mediation, and at only $1.00?

See the advertisements in this week's issue and write us for such books or equipment as will put yourself right or your work in good shape for great things for Christ.

Any book in the market will be supplied with pleasure, but to save time for you, give the name of the publisher or author, or both, and the book will be sent you promptly.

For devotional books, "Alone with God," "Half Hour Studies at the Cross," and "Heavenward Way," 75 cents each, or $2.00 the set, postpaid, have not been surpassed among any religious people.

Every school should have a normal or teacher supply class from which all new teachers, or substitute teachers, should always be taken, and this class will be right in line by using The Christ, of the Normal Outlines.

To read one of E. L. Powell's sermons out of "The Victory of Faith," is to fill you with a longing to read the other nineteen, all of which are among the very best. In fine binding, the book is quoted at $1.00, postpaid.

"Mr. World and Miss Church Member" is nothing but good for the "weak-kneed" Christian and will tend to stir such to a proper appreciation of how their conduct appears from a distance. Your one dollar is well spent for it.

Our Wedding Certificates and Booklets, running in price from 15 cents to $5.00, are all very acceptable, but some are much prettier than others, and are much more finely bound and cost much more for material and workmanship.

Remember, by quietly selecting your "Holiday" presents now, we will add any name in gold on any one dollar book, will enclose any card or words, will give you every preference possible if you will only see to it before the rush.

Our school superintendents can present their pupils a very pretty pin in sterling silver at 35 cents; in rolled gold (guaranteed) at 40 cents, and in solid gold (guaranteed) at 85 cents, with cross and crown and the words "Christian S. S." on them.

To the many new friends coming to us under the increased circulation of The Christian-Evangelist: Command us for any information about anything connected with any department of church work. Our 128 page catalog will be gladly sent you on application.

The revised New Testaments, at 7 cents each, or in cloth at 15 cents, or in cloth and primer type at 35 cents, postpaid, are the cheapest New Testaments on the market, and when these are gone probably no more can be had at the price. They are the 1881 revision, or the English revision.

By the constant support of our customers this company reports the best year's business in its history, and at our annual meeting this past week, words of appreciation and thanks were spoken. For such kindness we promise, if possible, to serve you better, one and all, in the future than we have done in the past, and to this end, we are constantly adding the newest and latest features in the printer's art. Our friends deserve and shall have this.

The Normal Instructor, in seven parts, is the thing for this winter, as it will prepare your teachers for their work in 1906, when the entire year's lessons are on the Life of Christ. The Normal is in seven parts at 15 cents each, the first part being on The Book; the second, on The Christ; the third, on The Church; the fourth, on The Land; the fifth, on The Institution; the sixth, on The History, and the seventh, on The People.

Our "Saturday Evening Talks" for boys and girls on Little Kings, Little Queens, Little Generals, Little Orators, Little Statesmen, Little Presidents, make a fine present for your children or pupils, and are so handsomely made, bound and illustrated that they are an ornament in any room. They are filled with the very best along such lines as tend to ennoble the children with pure thought, noble deeds and honorable service. They sell at 40 cents each, or $2.00 for the set, prepaid. Fine for Christmas.

STATE MISSION NUMBER

THE
CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST
A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER

Vol XLII. No. 43. October 26, 1905. $1.50 A Year

THE CALL OF THE STATES.

ON every breeze that passes by
There comes the Macedonian cry—
"Come, help us, brothers, now, we pray,
For soon will pass our harvest day!"

From broad Pacific's golden shore
To where Atlantic's breakers roar;
From Mississippi Valley wide
Where mission heroes wrought and died;

From Northern States by lakes impearled,
Whose billows wild are backward hurled,
To where magnolia blooms so fair,
And orange blossoms scent the air;

There comes the same sad, plaintive cry:
"Come, help us, brothers, ere we die!"
O, men of God, our duty's plain:
We must not hear these calls in vain!

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
  Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
  The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
  For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
  Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
  And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

MR. WORLD
AND MISS CHURCH MEMBER

Mr. World and Miss Church-Member
ALLEGORY BY W. S. HARRIS

One of the BOOKS calculated to do good.

It brings vividly to the Christian a realization of how often the Evil One misleads by the seductive influences of the world. The illustrations are very pointed, while the book is full of vital interest and should be read by the great army of church members who do not "think" this or that is any harm.

Price, $1.00, postpaid.
